Table no. 4, exhibit no. 27, and table no. 6, exhibit no. 28, give details as to tonnage and values of the major copper and brass-mill products manufactured in the United States during 1929 and certain previous years. These tables emphasize the importance of Connecticut as the leading domestic copper-fabricating State.

Chart no. 3A (omitted in Record) affords excellent testimony as to the ever-increasing price differential between copper plates and ingot, secured by the copper manufacturer. This chart likewise emphasizes the ruinous price index accorded the copper ingot during the post-war period.

XXII. Interlocking copper corporations

Exhibit no. 10 is submitted to show the interlocking relationship, particularly of J. P. Morgan & Co. to Kennecott, Phelps Dodge, Cerro de Pasco, American Metal, Newmont, Magma, United Verde Extension, International Nickel, Hudson Bay M. & S. Co., Anglo-American Corporation of South Africa, Ltd., South African Copper Co., Ltd., Rhodesian Minerals Concessions, Ltd., Rhokana Corporation, Ltd., etc.

This exhibit is self-explanatory and certainly emphasizes the interlocking of nearly every important copper enterprise in the world, except, Anaconda, with the House of Morgan.

We note that one of the directors of the important Newmont Mining Corporation is Albert H. Wiggins.

This exhibit shows the important foreign copper equities of the American Metal Co., Ltd., and the Cerro de Pasco Corporation, these two American copper corporations were particularly active 2 years ago in their opposition to a domestic copper tariff.

The fabricating activities of the Kennecott and Phelps Dodge Corporations are also mentioned in the exhibit.

It appears from the interwoven relationship of all these important domestic and foreign copper corporations that it is only a question of time when they will be consolidated into a single corporate unit or world-wide copper cartel.

The very nature of this huge interwoven economic mantle of world-wide copper poundages means opposition to nationalistic tariff barriers that tend to shut out their cheap-labor copper.

It requires no subtle mind to realize that so far as this economic mass is concerned, acting either as a unit or through any or all its component parts, it will unceasingly oppose the erection of rigid tariff barriers for the protection of the domestic copper-miners' labor product.

XXIII. Miners' consumption

In order to emphasize the occupational-disease hazards besetting the domestic copper miner excerpts were reproduced from Technical Paper No. 260, published by the United States Bureau of Mines in 1921. This publication is titled "Miners' Consumption in the Mines of Butte, Mont.," and the excerpts are shown in exhibit no. 23, attached hereto.

The data outlined in this exhibit certainly shows that ample provision should be accorded those who are so unfortunate as to contract so dreaded a disease as miners' consumption or tuberculosis.

An occupational disease of so ghastly a type means that the copper miners' labor product must be accorded a price sufficiently great to care for its victims generously and unflinchingly.

Miners' consumption is wide-spread amongst those who have spent 10 years or more underground as air-drill miners, muckers, chute tenders, carmen, etc.

Immediate consideration should be given the wage detail of the proposed copper code, and a demand should be made that its wage structure embody specific provisions to care for occupational diseases as well as the inherent danger that constantly envelops the copper miner.

XXIV. Copper dividends

Exhibits nos. 30 and 31 are submitted showing certain data as to dividends paid during 1909-30 by some of the most important domestic copper-mining companies.

We find certain dividend data within these two exhibits for the Anaconda, Kennecott, and Phelps Dodge companies and for their subsidiaries; likewise dividend details for other important domestic copper mines.

It was impossible for the writer to complete a detailed tabulation of dividends paid per pound of copper mined in time for this presentation.

However, the data in the two exhibits and exhibit A will give one a fair average approximation of the dividends paid for the industry subsequent to 1909. It may be stated that 72 percent of the domestic copper mined, 1841-1932, was subsequent to 1908. As an example, one of the lowest grade domestic copper mines, Miami, combined with one of the highest grade mines, namely, Calumet and Arizona, discloses that during the 22-year period, 1911-30, the combined average dividend rate paid equaled 5 cents per pound of copper mined.

The domestic price of copper during 1909-30 was about 17 cents per pound. The amount paid in dividends per pound of total copper mined domestically during 1909-30 was about 5 cents per pound. The remainder, which equals 12 cents per pound, is the approximate cost for copper mined during the 22-year period.

The foregoing dividend data has been carefully checked by the data submitted in exhibits nos. 30 and 31, also table no. 7 in exhibit A.

The dividend rate of 5 cents per pound paid during the period 1909-30 necessarily embodied capital return and profits. It is estimated that about three quarters of the dividend paid, or 3.75 cents per pound, represents profit and the remainder, or 1.25 cents, capital return.

Consequently we find that during a period embracing about 70 percent of our domestic production the per-pound profit equaled about 4 cents and the cost about 13 cents per pound of copper mined.

In other words, the incentive for jeopardizing capital in searching for and developing our domestic copper-mining industry was to secure an average profit of 4 cents per pound for electrolytic copper.

It is a certainty that in order to continue the search for additional domestic copper reserves, the hope must be held out to the prospector, mine developer, and the copper producer that his reward will consist of securing an average profit at least of 4 cents per pound for the refined copper he delivers within our home market.

The difference between the profit of 4 cents per pound and a commodity price received for future domestic mined copper should, in addition to other cost items, embody a generous commodity wage to labor and the payment of an adequate tax for the maintenance of dependent civic institutions and citizenship.

XXV. Copper and national defense

It is unnecessary to offer any extended argument in support of the premise that copper is one of the metals that is of vital necessity during time of war. This fact was well known during the Bronze Age, and the recent World War demonstrated that an adequate copper poundage was an imperative war requirement.

The history of copper mining within our country is replete with data emphasizing that it requires from 2 to 5 years from the time of discovering a copper ore area before a deposit in same is explored, developed, and equipped ready to deliver blister or refined copper.

It certainly is obvious that war necessities demand an unfailing supply and a large poundage of copper. This copper must be immediately available when war overwhelms us without a moment's notice.

The only sure and certain and absolutely dependable supply of copper for war purposes is to secure that poundage within our domestic ore reserves. To rely on foreign copper poundages during this era of over, under, and on the sea warfare, is to invite national disaster.

An efficient and adequate functioning domestic copper-mining industry from ore to ingot stage is rigidly essential from a national standpoint alone saying nothing about caring for the human element and civic details dependent thereon.

XXVI. Copper protection

Details pertaining to copper tariff protection for the domestic copper-mining industry are submitted at length in exhibit A. This exhibit outlines the history of domestic copper tariff efforts from 1846-1931.

The revenue bill passed June 1932 accorded a 4-cent excise tax to be laid against copper imports, up to June 30, 1934. The last revenue bill advanced the expiration date to June 30, 1935, some 15 months hence.

Nearly 2 years have elapsed since the makeshift emergency excise tax was passed. It is vitally essential that an adequate permanent tariff rate, as against foreign copper imports, be fixed in our metal tariff schedule at the earliest possible moment.

When the temporary expedient excise tax was laid June 1932, the copper surplus (see chart no. 6, omitted in RECORD) was about 1,300,000,000 pounds, the greatest this country or the world had ever known up to that time. The huge destructive domestic surplus of 1920 was nearly 200,000,000 pounds less than the June 1932 poundage.

The surplus, as of January 1, 1933 (see chart no. 6, omitted in RECORD), amounted to 1,382,000,000 pounds. The surplus of January 1, 1934, equals about 1,300,000,000 pounds.

In other words, after nearly 2 years of excise-tax protection, the huge copper surplus of June 1932 is still intact, which emphasizes that some drastic method must be devised to reduce same even though adequate protection is constantly accorded henceforth. Without ample future tariff protection foreign copper imports will continue to pile up and maintain huge domestic copper surpluses in the future, as they have in the past, as discussed and demonstrated in chapter VIII. The present menacing copper surplus, that has persisted for several years, must be remedied. It must be segregated and set aside during the period of depression, and such surplus recurrence must be prevented through rigid cessation of copper imports.

It will be utterly impossible for the domestic copper miner ever to secure a domestic commodity price for his labor product unless he is accorded the inalienable right to supply the total copper requirements of the domestic consuming market. If this right is denied the copper miner it means future continuance of a most vicious past degree of un-American economic discrimination.

The domestic copper miner only asks for the same degree of economic justice accorded millions of his fellow laborers. He is entitled to this degree of equality; to accord him less is violative of the very essence of civic decency and righteousness.

XXVII. Summary

A very skeletonized summary of the data presented within the preceding 27 chapters is submitted herewith in order to emphasize a few of the general factors connected with the domestic copper-mining industry that need correction.

It is impossible to submit a detailed, referenced summarization of all the data submitted herein, due to lack of time and space; consequently only certain general conclusions will be stated. The accuracy of this analysis can easily be verified by reviewing the data within the preceding chapters whereupon much detailed corroborative information will be found to support the deduction submitted.

In reviewing the data presented within the 27 chapters, the writer submits the following generalized deductions:

1. The domestic copper-mining industry has functioned continuously from 1845 to 1933.
2. The domestic copper industry has within its known ore reserves sufficient copper to satisfy 25 years of average future domestic copper-consumption requirements.

3. The domestic copper industry definitely lost control of the world's copper market during the post-war period.

4. About 90 percent of the domestic copper mined during the 14-year post-war period, 1919-32, was consumed within the United States.

5. The domestic copper miner failed to receive a commodity price for his labor product during 1919-33.

6. Due to lack of tariff protection vast quantities of foreign copper were imported during 1923-32, to create the present destructive copper surplus.

7. The foreign refined copper ingot can be laid down domestically at a cost of about 4 cents per pound.

8. Rigid duty or embargo rates must be laid henceforth to prevent the importation of foreign-mined copper.

9. A commodity price for domestic-mined copper can only be secured by prohibiting the entry of foreign copper and synchronizing domestic production with consumption.

10. Due to past legislative neglect special government aid must be rendered to remove the present menacing copper surplus.

11. To care unfailingly for each and all the human, district, and State equities dependent upon the domestic copper-mining industry, some rigid way must be devised to allot the domestic copper-consuming market based on past average ratios of production.

12. In order to relieve human distress immediately current domestic copper consumption must come from current domestic production.

13. The post-war period of the domestic copper-mining industry has been dominated by domestic copper fabricators and owners of huge foreign copper deposits.

14. The failure of the domestic copper miner to secure a domestic commodity price during the 14-year post-war period is directly chargeable to the domestic-control factors that permitted the copper ingot to sell at a ruinous price while the manufactured article received an adequate return.

15. The long and vicious discrimination directed against the copper miners' labor product during the past 14 years, permitted by the control factors dominating the domestic copper-mining industry, certainly emphasizes their unfitness to revive an industry they have practically destroyed.

16. The situation is so serious and the human element involved so great that the only factor that can be entrusted to revivify the dying domestic copper-mining industry is through an impartial agency directly responsible to the President of the United States.

SECOND PART—COPPER CODE DETAILS

XXVIII. Eastern code

An analysis of the proposed copper code presented on February 13, 1934, by the United States Copper Association, unincorporated (see exhibit E) hereinafter termed the "eastern code", is submitted herewith.

The writer was advised on February 13, 1934, that the eastern code had been submitted to Mr. H. O. King, deputy administrator, and that a public hearing would be held in Washington, D.C., on February 27, 1934, to discuss the provisions of the proposed code.

Additional time was granted on February 23, 1934, by extending the date for the public hearing until March 12, 1934.

EASTERN CODE

The code as submitted is seemingly a composite of two things: First, a statement in articles III, IV, and V as to hours, wages, and general labor details; second, a statement of the corporate factor relationship that requests control of the domestic copper-mining industry through the Code Authority.

The first embodies a minimum rate of $3.04 per 8-hour day for underground labor. This magnanimous offer is extended evidently in exchange for the waiver of the Sherman Antitrust Act and the delivery of the whole domestic copper-mining industry, lock, stock, and cutlass, over to control factors that have practically ruined the industry during the post-war period.

An inspection of pages 3, 4, and 6, proposed copper code August 17, 1933, in connection with page 6, eastern code, clearly shows that the three members, one to be appointed by each primary producer having a production capacity in excess of 150,000 tons per annum, are the Kennecott, Anaconda, and Phelps Dodge Cos. These three companies, plus the Guggenheim-Morgan interests, who control the Kennecott, likewise control the domestic custom smelters and refineries. Consequently, the K.A.P. group (see chapter IX) will, under the eastern code set-up, absolutely control the code authority. As to the (b) page 6, eastern code, two members, it is evident from exhibit no. 10 that the Kennecott-Morgan crowd, through the Newmont Mining Corporation, will be able to secure the support of the Magma and United Verde Extension Cos.

The eastern code is merely an attempt to secure N.R.A. signature to a blank check detail of rigid industrial control without agreeing to do anything to correct the destructive practices that prevail within the domestic copper-mining industry.

If stock control of an industry implies authority to govern the total industry unreservedly, irrespective of past destructive practices by the factors constituting said stock control, then it appears to the writer that the dependent human element involved has little to hope for through the medium of any agency which accepts majority, proxy route, or ticker-tape control as an unfailing criterion.

The writer, however, feels that N.I.R.A. stands for rigid social justice and that its powers of observation, intuitive sensitiveness to aid the helpless, and its willingness to scrutinize patiently and analyze past and present industrial control practices, will result in justice being accorded to all concerned.

"Niralization" certainly does not stand for sterilization of basic domestic industries and will not condone past policies of destruction by perpetuating the factors responsible therefor within future code authorities.

The omission of essential elements conducive to livelihood and human betterment within a controlling industrial code is just as serious as though the code contained provisions notoriously destructive.

The domestic copper miner needs affirmative, positive, and most detailed protective provisions within a copper code of fair competition. The weak and oppressed have always needed clear and concise declarations as to the rights, equities, and liberties guaranteed them.

The post-war history of the domestic copper industry is an aggregate of vicious economic discriminatory practices directed solely and alone against the domestic copper miners' labor product; namely, the copper ingot.

No other important basic domestic product, mined or grown, has suffered the degree of exploitation directed against the copper miners' ingot during the post-war period.

The writer insists that the record presented in this petition clearly shows that the Kennecott, Anaconda, and Phelps Dodge companies controlled the domestic copper mining industry during the destructive post-war period.

They raised $40,000,000 in 1921, and took the then huge copper surplus off the market.

They failed to lift their hand to remove the nearly equivalently large surplus as of 1930. They utterly neglected to do anything in 1931, when the surplus was 150,000,000 pounds greater than the huge copper surplus of 1920. They again failed to make an effort in 1932, when the surplus was 260,000,000 pounds larger than the 1920 surplus. And we find that the K.A.P. group let the year 1933 carry a copper surplus burden 100,000,000 pounds in excess of the crushing surplus of 1920.

The record also shows that when the K.A.P. group controllers of the domestic copper-mining industry lent their effort and credit to care for the destructive flood of war-time copper stocks and scrap metal in 1921, they were copper miners and not owners of copper fabricating subsidiaries.

The K.A.P. group, in 1921, depended on the sale of their copper ingot for economic existence. They then knew that they were entitled to and consequently sought a commodity price for the end stage of their economic effort, by removing the crushing copper surplus.

We find that as of 1931 the K.A.P. group had become copper fabricators. They no longer depended wholly on the sale of their copper in ingot form but were intent on selling the manufactured copper article.

We also find that by 1931 the K.A.P. group were mining nearly one half of their group production within foreign copper areas. Consequently this tended to make them less dependent upon their domestic-controlled production.

It is an old, old practice within the industrial channels of our country for manufacturers to seek supplies at minimum prices for their plants. They will scour the Seven Seas in their effort to buy their materials at low prices. However, years ago this practice was discouraged domestically by the erection of tariff barriers, preventing the cheap-labor low-cost foreign product from jeopardizing domestic labor or industry.

Due to the fact that the K.A.P. group are now manufacturers, and, therefore, interested in selling the manufactured article, they will naturally strive to secure their copper-ingot requirements from the cheapest possible source. If they are permitted to bring in their low-cost foreign-mined copper to be fabricated for domestic consumption, they will continue to do so in the future as they have in the past.

The huge copper surplus that has existed domestically ever since 1930, plus depression-period accumulation of excessive quantities of scrap copper, has been an ample reservoir to supply the K.A.P. group fabricating plants with copper at a ruinous domestic price.

The copper manufacturer has secured more than a commodity price for his sale differential during the past 2 years (see chart 3A, omitted in RECORD), while the domestic copper miner was offered a slave-labor price for his copper ingot.

The question confronting the domestic copper miner is not academic. His plight is known from the Mexican to the Canadian border, from the copper areas of Arizona and Montana to those within Michigan and Tennessee.

The domestic copper miner has been forced into a bread line that is longer and more sinuous than any other within our land. His family and equities have been discriminated against to a degree unbelievable until the facts pertaining thereto are reviewed by unbiased agencies.

The copper miner is entitled to the same degree of economic protection accorded the copper fabricator.

The foreign copper fabricator cannot, virtually, bring in a single pot, pan, or kettle to compete with the domestic copper fabricators' product.

Why should the foreign copper miner be permitted to bring in a single copper ingot to compete with the copper miner's product?

Certainly in our land of brotherly equality—during this era of a new deal, with a new deck instead of the old deal with a dirty, marked deck—what is fair for one group of citizens should be the measure of economic justice for an associate group.

The copper miner is entitled to supply the total domestic copper market with his domestic mined copper ingot just as the domestic copper manufacturer controls the total domestic copper-consuming market for the fabricated article.

Furthermore, the copper miner is entitled to receive at least a commodity price for his ingot, comparable with the excessive sale differential absorbed by the domestic copper manufacturer.

CONCLUSION

The eastern code, as presented, is a vicious instrument as aforesaid. It is hopeless of amendment, due to what it does contain and what has been omitted. Consequently, it should be discarded completely and a substitute offered in lieu thereof. The writer will proceed to discuss such a substitute code in the succeeding chapter.

XXIX. Arizona code

The Arizona Code, a copy of which is attached hereto, marked "Exhibit D", was filed August 1933.

The Arizona Code of Fair Competition for the Copper Mining Industry of the United States was prepared and presented by three Arizona mines associations, namely, Arizona Domestic Copper Producers' Association, Arizona Developing Mines Association, and Arizona Prospecting Mines Association.

The Arizona Code is sponsored by vast numbers of citizens within Arizona and other western copper States. Petitions embracing some 15,000 signatures have been presented to the President of the United States, endorsing the Arizona Code.

The Arizona Code as presented may need some revision as to definition, detail, legal phraseology, and list of unfair practices, etc., however, such revision should be effected to strengthen, not weaken, these subdivisions of the code.

The article dealing with labor in the Arizona code sets out in detail the minimum wage scale for the industry. This wage scale was the one used for about 13 years, 1921-32, and it is fair to use same until the industry has recovered somewhat. It is essential to increase the wage scale the moment domestic copper is accorded a domestic-commodity price.

The real purpose of the Arizona code was predicated on the necessity of immediately caring for the human element involved. To secure for the domestic copper-mining industry wage-earner maximum wage benefits at the earliest possible moment. This policy means that with a commodity wage paid to one half of the dependent wage earners, or the work spread among all, dependent labor within the domestic copper-mining industry could soon care for its own necessities without district, State, or Government aid.

A domestic-commodity wage cannot be paid dependent domestic labor unless the wage earners' labor product receives a domestic-commodity price. Furthermore, a domestic-commodity price for labor's product cannot be secured unless labor is accorded the domestic consuming market and synchronizes production to meet domestic demand.

Consequently, in order to effectuate the policy of immediately caring for the necessities and protecting the equities of the domestic copper-mining industry wage earner it was deemed essential to care for four economic protective phases, namely:

1. Place a duty of 10 cents per pound on imported copper.
2. Embargo against foreign shipments of copper into the United States until production and consumption shall be equal.
3. Permit only current domestic production to enter into the current market of the United States.
4. Distribute production equitably among the copper States.

The Arizona code embodies the four protective subdivisions aforesaid.

The duty of 10 cents a pound is needed in order to shut out the 4-cent cost copper of slave-labor Africa and peon-labor South America. This rate of duty will only accord a 14-cent copper price domestically, which is much below the domestic commodity price.

It is essential to shut out all foreign copper until the domestic copper-consuming market is able to absorb all the domestic-produced copper.

The only way that the copper wage earner can be accorded maximum work relief is to permit him to care for current domestic consumption out of current copper production. The huge copper stocks, due to control practices of the dual owners, should be held in leash until the human element is cared for. Innocent dependents have suffered long enough at the hands of ruthless exploiters. The time has come to curb the machinations of these agencies, and this can only be done by impounding temporarily their destructive copper surplus.

The only possible way rigidly to care for the equities of dependent citizenship within our domestic copper producing districts, scattered throughout 19 States, is to allocate copper production based on past average production rates. Communities and States throughout our country for generations past have been dependent upon the mining of copper. It is only fair to the human element within these copper districts that they receive their pro rata share of the allotted production.

CONCLUSION

The Arizona code, in fact, embodies within its provisions that will immediately put back to work the maximum possible number of wage earners dependent on the domestic copper-mining industry. There is an average of nearly 50,000 wage earners directly employed normally within the domestic copper-mining industry. These, with their family and service dependents, aggregate some 750,000 within the 11 western copper-producing States. The domestic copper-consuming market is about 50 percent normal at this writing and is improving rapidly each passing moment.

In other words, if the provisions of the Arizona code are made effective immediately it means that about 375,000 people will be removed from the bread line all the time or 750,000 people half the time. These 11 western copper-producing States have a population of 12,000,000 citizens, embrace 40 percent of the continental area, and mine 90 percent of the domestic copper production.

The value of copper mined therein is greater than the combined value of all other metals. Copper mining is the major metallic industry, and normally it furnishes $300,000,000 worth of wealth annually throughout this western area.

XXX. Summary

In order to effectuate the policy of title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act by providing a means whereby the domestic copper-mining industry can be reopened, thereby giving immediate employment to the idle miners and other employees of industries dependent upon the operation of copper mining, it is inescapable that the Arizona code must be selected instead of the eastern code.

The Arizona code stands for conservation of the human element within our domestic copper districts, while the eastern code fails to emphasize anything having to do with caring for dependent citizenship.

The Arizona code desires that an unbiased Federal agency, directly appointed by and responsible to the President of the United States, administer the provisions of the copper code, rather than intrust it to control factors that have practically wrecked the domestic copper-mining industry during the post-war period.

The writer is sanguine that control factors within N.R.A. will emphasize and make effective the humanitarian phases embodied in the Arizona code.

XXXI. General summary

The writer realizes that the one immediate hope, offered the helpless and oppressed human element within the copper districts of our country, lies in securing a correction of their plight through the President and/or control factors of the National Industrial Recovery Administration.

The N.R.A. will find within this memorandum factual data confirmatory of the charge that the vitally important domestic copper-mining industry—greater in value production than the combined value of all other nonferrous metal product values mined during 1919-32—has been subjected to a long and persistent degree of exploitation during the post-war period.

They will find that the domestic copper miners' labor product, the copper ingot, has been sold at a ruinous domestic noncommodity price throughout the period 1919-32.

The failure of the domestic copper miner to receive a domestic commodity price for the copper ingot has prevented the wage earner receiving an adequate compensatory wage; and dependent civic communities could not secure an equitable replacement tax for depleting a natural resource; and the low price received for the ingot could not care for essential ore exploratory costs.

N.R.A. will find a combination of banking forces shifting the policy powers within the control factors of the domestic copper-mining industry during the post-war period. These same banking influences have been virtually booted out of the banks they exploited but they still sit on the boards of the K.A.P. group and interrelated copper companies.

N.R.A. will have a splendid opportunity of ridding the domestic copper-mining industry of a skeletonized proxy route aggregation of banker control.

This banking influence has permitted its satellites to absorb excessive salaries and bonuses during the depression period out of the stockholders' treasuries. This calloused exploitation is particularly sordid when viewed from the midst of the human misery and wretchedness universally prevalent within domestic copper-mining districts.

The domestic copper-mining industry has a right to exist in this country. An endless array of facts presented in this memorandum attests that right.

The domestic copper-mining industry has been in the hands of exploiters during the post-war period, which accounts for its present plight.

The writer also respectfully requests that the President of the United States, under the provisions of section 3 (d), title I, Industrial Recovery Act, should thoroughly investigate the present, which are likewise the past, control factors within the domestic copper-mining industry during the post-war period, and if such an investigation "upon his own motion—the President" should find "that abuses inimical to the public interest and contrary to the policy herein declared are prevalent in any trade or industry or subdivision thereof, and if no code of fair competition has theretofore been approved by the President, the President after such public notice and hearing as he shall specify, may prescribe and approve a code of fair competition for such trade or subdivision thereof, which shall have the same effect as a code of fair competition approved by the President under subdivision (a) of this section."

The writer addresses the foregoing plea to the President in conformity with the 15,000-signature petition requesting his support in behalf of the oppressed copper miner and his dependents and the Arizona code.

It certainly is essential, from a national standpoint of justice and decency to hundreds of thousands of American citizens whose livelihood and life equities have been and still are in constant jeopardy due to lack of an equitable copper code, that their condition be ameliorated forthwith.

Administrative factors should intervene energetically to the end to see that a fair and equitable code of fair competition be accorded immediately to rigorously care for the economic destinies of all those suffering thousands dependent upon a maximum-functioning domestic copper-mining industry.

CANCELATION OF AIR-MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the New York Times of March 19, 1934, entitled "The Weight of Evidence"; an editorial appearing in the Washington Herald of March 19, 1934, entitled "Lindy Merits Praise"; and a newspaper article appearing in the New York Herald Tribune of March 18, 1934, containing Captain Rickenbacker's statement before a Senate committee.

There being no objection, the editorials and the newspaper article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Monday, Mar. 19, 1934]

THE WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE

Apparently the Senate subcommittee did not know the kind of testimony it would get from the three air-mail experts whom it summoned. The first of these, Colonel Lindbergh, was as fine a witness as one could find searching the whole world over. Quiet and competent, he testified only to what he knew, putting aside questions which were either irrelevant or beyond the range of his personal knowledge and experience. Those Senators who hoped to win his approval of the new air mail bill which they are pressing found it impossible to shake him in his opposition to some of its important clauses. In the matter of the original cancellation of the air-mail contracts, he remained firm in his conviction that a great injustice had been done, with consequent injury to commercial aviation which it may take a long time to repair. In substantial agreement with him were the two other famous flyers, Chamberlin and Captain Rickenbacker. The latter left the Senators quite aghast by the frankness with which he condemned those who had so unfortunately given the President bad advice.

All three of these witnesses protested that they had no wish to excuse or shelter any man who might have resorted to fraudulent methods in securing an air-mail contract. If any were guilty, let them be punished to the full extent of the law. But let them be proved guilty before being condemned. Above all, let not the companies against which no collusion has been even charged be lumped with the few that may be under suspicion. All the evidence thus far given is to the effect that Army pilots had not been trained to carry transcontinental mail, were therefore not fitted to do the work, and should never have been called upon to undertake it.

What the country plainly desires, and what the administration is now anxious to bring about, is the speediest possible restoration of carrying the mails to the private companies which have developed the necessary technical skill. Complaints are numerous, particularly from the far West, about the disruption of the mail service, which had come to be a great modern convenience. If the Senate and the Post Office Department are alert to this popular demand, they will make haste to find a way out of the sad muddle which followed the Executive order of February 9.

[From the Washington Herald, Monday, Mar. 19, 1934]

LINDY MERITS PRAISE

Well done, Lindy!

This is the country's verdict on Colonel Lindbergh's voluntary appearance before the Senate Post Office Committee and on his lucid, straightforward, and manly replies to the questions addressed to him.

It was a Lindbergh day.

The largest room in the Senate Office Building was chosen for the hearing, as it was safely assumed that the appearance of America's super ace, the foremost flier in the world, would stir great public interest.

His inquisitors were Senate politicians who are trying to pull the administration out of a bad hole. Like politicians, these Senators feel that the best way out of a blunder is never to admit it. Realizing that the civil aviation companies have been condemned without a hearing, the administration Senators are trying to make it appear that the companies were not entitled to a hearing.

They are trying to build the uncorrected injustice of such treatment into disabling conditions affecting the established companies as bidders under the new contracts, proposed in substitution for the old, which were canceled without inquiry, examination, or trial.

An American of the Lindbergh type naturally will not be a party to such a scheme!

"I feel that these charges", said he, "should have been definitely established before these contracts were canceled. I feel it was the right of my companies, the public, and my own right to have them definitely established."

"I say this only in the interest of what I most deeply believe to be right."

These words express the opinion of every right-thinking American. What else could be the opinion of a right-thinking man?

Referring to the provision of the proposed new legislation prohibiting operators whose contracts were thus unfairly annulled from bidding on new contracts unless they waived any claims against the Government, Colonel Lindbergh called it the most "unjust act ever placed into American legislation."

It is refreshing and invigorating when a man of such captivating type as Colonel Lindbergh, of so distinguished a record of valor and achievement, thus gives voice in ringing and forthright speech to the feelings of his countrymen.

But there is more to it than the feeling of approval it inspires. Here is the note of true leadership!

The gallant flying record, the simplicity and modesty that won our hearts, the thrilling exploits which have drawn the homage of the world, are apparently only a part of Lindy.

There is a maturing man in his young head and breast.

The physical and moral courage of the youthful aviator is passing into a finer and perhaps a rarer courage—the courage of the fearless and high-minded citizen.

Such a man has great tasks ahead of him—rich possibilities of service to his country.

[From the New York Herald Tribune, Sunday, Mar. 18, 1934]

RICKENBACKER STATEMENT

The prepared statement read to the committee by Captain Rickenbacker follows:

"Gentlemen, I appreciate the opportunity to appear before this committee which is considering legislation which will determine the future of what, up until February 19, 1934, was the greatest and most efficient air transport industry in the world. Such legislation, I hope, will be passed by Congress only after a thorough study of the fundamental problems of this young industry, based upon facts and figures and uninfluenced by general opinions of a few who are not qualified by experience to speak for this industry."

"During the last 17 years I have been directly associated with the aviation industry, both military and commercial, and am at present vice president of North American Aviation, the parent company of Transcontinental & Western Air Inc.; Eastern Air Transport, and Western Air Express, who are noncompetitive companies. I have occupied this position since May 1, 1933, the date on which North American Aviation Co. became affiliated with General Motors Corporation."

"In this connection I wish to emphasize that not until May 1, 1933, was North American Aviation in control of any air line whatever except Eastern Air Transport. The combination of North American Aviation and General Aviation on that date was made in order to consolidate the various stock interests in Transcontinental and Western Air, Inc., in order to insure that Transcontinental and Western Air would, at all times, be competitive from an ownership standpoint, with other transcontinental air lines, which consolidation accomplished that purpose, and I can say frankly that I know of no industry in which the spirit of competition is keener than the air transport industry has been and still is."

OUTLINES CRITICISM OF BILL

"I shall attempt to outline my criticisms of the proposed Senate bill 3012 and thereafter offer recommendations for what I believe to be a constructive plan to continue the development of the industry."

"(1) I feel it will be a serious mistake if the equities of the present operators of the air transport lines of this country are not recognized and given preemptive rights on the routes which they have pioneered at great expense to their stockholders."

"In justice to the hundreds of thousands of stockholders who have invested their funds in these companies, based upon the faith of what they believed to be binding obligations between their respective companies and the Government, as well as the thousands of employees highly specialized in the science of aeronautics, it is my belief that the equities of the present operators must be given first consideration."

PLEADS FOR EMPLOYEES

"An air line is more than just airplanes in the air. These are incidental. Any of you gentlemen who have flown over one of these air transport lines must be impressed with the fact that for every air-line operator on an airplane there are approximately six highly trained employees on the ground."

"These ground employees are operators of radio stations, weather-reporting services, traffic organizations, maintenance organizations, overhaul shops, and, last but not least, there must be recognized the knowledge of these routes acquired by them through long years of experience both from the standpoint of terrain and weather."

"Further, the public goodwill and confidence developed by these air lines on these routes cannot at will be transferred to another locality or replaced by new operators."

"T. & W. A. alone and its predecessor companies have lost over $5,000,000 in pioneering its particular route, in addition to the present investments of millions of dollars in fixed ground equipment, which is just as much an air line on the ground as a railroad equipment makes a railroad system."

"To ask any one of these companies to bid on another route is as impracticable as asking the New York Central Railroad to bid to carry mail over a route such as the Santa Fe system."

CALLS CLAUSE UNFAIR

"(2) In recognizing these equities, there should also be eliminated the unfair and unjustifiable clause reading:

"No person shall be eligible to bid or hold an air-mail contract if it or its predecessor is asserting or has any claim against the United States because of a prior annulment of any contract by the Postmaster General."

"I say 'unfair and unjustifiable', as it is clearly at variance with ordinary business ethics that any company should be compelled to forego its right to enter a court of justice in order to obtain any contract, let alone a contract with the United States Government. Surely it is not the purpose of any Government legislation to prohibit any citizen or corporation from asserting what they believe to be their rights.

OPPOSES 3-YEAR PROVISION

"(3) The provision for a contract with a maximum life of 3 years, after which air lines will come under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, is impracticable. Why should not a Federal regulatory board immediately be designated to supervise the air lines, whether that board be a separate regulatory board appointed by the President or one that already exists, such as the Interstate Commerce Commission?

"If this be done, as I feel it most certainly should immediately, would this not eliminate the need of competitive bidding?

"What encouragement would there be under 3-year contracts for private capital to continue in this business except the capital that might be put in by promoters with a view to unloading it on the public at the first opportunity?

FAVORS POUND-MILE BASIS

"(4) The basis of pay prescribed by Senate bill 3012 would perpetuate the impracticabilities from the standpoint of administration of a space basis of pay as established in the Watres Act. As it shall be pointed out later, a much more satisfactory basis of pay would be the pound-mile basis, which recognizes payment in relation to the task performed for the Post Office Department.

"Further, the rates prescribed in this bill apparently are based upon estimates furnished by operators of equipment who are and necessarily would have to be adequately equipped to do this job at the prices specified in this bill.

"Shall this industry be paid on a basis that will encourage the development of such ships as the Douglas transport, created by T. & W. A., which recently made a record run from Los Angeles to New York in 13 hours 2 minutes 20 seconds elapsed time with a full load of passengers, mail, and express, or shall it be content to have this job done by inferior, slow, single-motored equipment?

"Should not a rate of pay be adopted on a pound-mile basis which will guarantee the end of subsidy and insure, for instance, the fulfillment of T. & W. A.'s contract for the purchase of $3,500,000 worth of such equipment as the Douglas airplane, which is the outstanding transport equipment in the world today?

"(5) There have been recommendations made by certain people that the transcontinental system should be broken up into two or three short systems. Setting up fast transcontinental schedules will be practically impossible under such a proposed breakdown of this system, and costs will be increased materially, owing to various types of equipment being used and unnecessary transferring of passengers, mail, and express, as well as consequent delays through the handling of this operation subject to various policies of management.

"Breaking up the transcontinental system would force this industry into the uneconomical condition faced by the railroads, as borne out by the task confronting the present Coordinator of Railroads in his attempt to work out a more economical plan.

"To eliminate subsidy and still make the lines self-supporting, we must continue to develop passenger and express business. When a passenger can be taken in one type of equipment over one system from coast to coast without these delays, passenger business will grow as it has during the last few years, in spite of the depression.

"To force a passenger to use two or three different lines, changing from one ship to another of entirely different type, will discourage passenger business and will likewise become more expensive.

"This business must be encouraged in every possible way; and there is not today, nor has there ever been, any airplane, even including the T.W.A. Douglas transport, which can pay its operating costs from passenger and express revenue alone.

"(6) Any officer or director who has heretofore entered into any combination to prevent the making of bids for carrying the mails is excluded from bidding on a mail contract. Certainly, from the standards of American fairness and justice, no officer or director should be deemed to have entered into any combination for the prevention of making bids before first having received a fair trial before a regular court of justice.

"(7) Certainly the clause reading 'No person shall be eligible to bid for or hold an air-mail contract which has any officer or director in any holding company holding stock, directly or indirectly, in any company engaged in any phase of the aviation industry, or in any other company engaged in the manufacture or sale of airplanes, parts, or other materials or accessories generally used in air transport' is decidedly impracticable, and in my opinion will work to the detriment of this industry.

"As an example, any holding company or manufacturing company by an overt act of purchasing one share of stock in a successful air-mail company could immediately disqualify that air-mail carrier as a legitimate carrier.

RECOMMENDS LEGISLATION

"My recommendations for constructive legislation which will guarantee a continuance of the rapid advance which this industry has made in the last few years' operation are:

"1. The immediate creation of a Federal regulatory board to be appointed by the President to perform somewhat similar supervision and regulation of air lines as the I.C.C. exercises over the railroads.

"2. The issuance of certificates of necessity and convenience to all air lines operating on February 19, 1934, by this Federal regulatory board.

"3. Authorizing the Postmaster General to place mail on air lines having certificates of necessity and convenience from the Federal regulatory board, at the following rates of pay:

"Two mills per pound-mile up to 250 pounds average load per airplane and 1 mill per pound-mile for all loads above this amount; such payments to air lines to be charged to the general post-office appropriation for the transportation of mails. Two mills per mile is the revenue which the Government estimates it receives from postage on mail carried by airplane. Thus subsidy is eliminated at a stroke by this system of payment.

" FAVORS DIRECT SUBSIDY

"4. Authorize the Federal regulatory board to pay a direct subsidy to air lines receiving a certificate of necessity and convenience who cannot exist economically under the above rates of pay, the compensation, including the direct subsidy, not to exceed 40 cents per airplane-mile for the first year and in no event to exceed the annual loss incurred by the air lines receiving such a subsidy; this subsidy payment to be reduced 5 cents each year until eliminated entirely.

"5. A reduction in rates of postage to 5 cents an ounce for air-mail letters; the authorization of air lettergrams at 3 cents and the authorization of an air-mail postcard at 2 cents.

"6. This Federal regulatory body to arbitrate rates of pay for pilots. Our policy of pilot's rate of pay recognizes that pilots are professional men. They have entrusted to their care the lives of their passengers as well as other valuable cargo. They are the captains of their ships. Rates of pay to Army pilots should not influence rates of pay to air-line pilots. They should be paid high salaries in order to attract to and keep in this profession the highest type of young manhood.

"With the increased poundage which will be developed under these changes and rates of postage, I am convinced from studies which I have made that not only would all air lines which operated on February 19, 1934, be able to exist without subsidy within a relatively few years but new routes might be added to the network of air lines which existed at that date. Further, the Post Office Department would receive an amount from stamp sales in excess of the amount paid operators for this service.

"Finally, gentlemen, I recommend that no plans should be considered which might tend to place commercial aviation under the same governmental heads or bodies as military aviation."

MONEY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR THOMAS OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a very able address delivered before the Beta Chapter, Phi Delta Kappa, at Columbia University, March 15, 1934, by the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], on "Money."

There being no objection the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I have come tonight to one of the great educational institutions of America to discuss what I consider to be the most important problem pending before the people.

This problem is the issuance, control, and management of money. Other issues are of importance to individuals, groups, and sections, but money affects the success and prosperity of every man, woman, and child; every firm, partnership, and corporation; and every city, county, and State, not only of our country but throughout the world.

It is appropriate, therefore, that a discussion of so important a question should be held here in New York, the richest, strongest, and most influential city of the earth.

What is money?

Money and its control is an international as well as a domestic issue, but money as it affects the individual, the community, and the State will have my attention tonight.

DEFINITIONS

In order to prevent possible misunderstandings, permit me to define the terms "money", "credit", and "inflation."

"Money" means anything that serves as a common medium of exchange in trade, such as gold coin, silver coin, or currency.

"Credit" means bank deposits based upon loans made to individuals, firms, or corporations. In normal times such bank deposits, although imaginary and based upon confidence, may be transferred by checks and thereby serve as a substitute for money.

"Inflation" is of two kinds: First, inflation of currency; and second, inflation of credit.

Inflation of currency means an improper, excessive, and over-issue of currency.

Inflation of credit means an overexpansion of bank loans, causing the creation of an excessive amount of bank deposit or credit money.

Before proceeding further, permit me to state that, as I understand and interpret inflation, I am as much opposed to an improper, excessive, and overissue of either currency or credit as any money changer in Wall Street.

ECONOMIC LAWS

In addition to defining money, credit, and inflation, I must define the simple economic laws which govern and control the value or purchasing power of money.

The value of money depends upon supply and demand; hence the purchasing power of the dollar depends upon the quantity of real dollars—gold, silver, and currency notes—in circulation. Under normal conditions and influences any increase in the quantity of real dollars in circulation lowers the value or purchasing power of such dollars, and conversely any decrease in the quantity of real dollars in circulation raises or increases the value of buying power of such dollars.

Let me now call your attention to the record to substantiate my interpretation of the terms and economic laws just mentioned. During the War between the States the North found its Treasury exhausted. The Government had no gold, had no silver, and had exhausted its credit. If the Union was to be preserved, the war had to be financed.

President Lincoln did not hesitate to issue and place in circulation some $477,000,000 of Treasury notes, sometimes called "greenbacks" or "printing-press money." These notes were not based on either gold or silver but instead were backed by all the property of all of the people, plus the taxing power of the Government. As these notes were paid into circulation dollars became more plentiful, hence cheaper, and prices of all kinds advanced accordingly.

The question is suggested, Did President Lincoln inflate the currency?

If your answer is in the affirmative, you must admit that such inflation was necessary to save the Union.

During the World War the currency in circulation was again substantially increased, resulting in consequent higher prices. During that period we not only financed ourselves but likewise were forced to finance our Allies, and to do this both currency and credit were issued and expanded.

The question again arises, Did President Wilson inflate the currency?

If your answer is in the affirmative, then you must admit that, like President Lincoln, he did not let either the issuance of currency or the expansion of credit get out of control.

With neither gold, silver, nor credit, President Lincoln deliberately authorized and carried out rational and controlled inflation of the currency.

With a sizable supply of gold and silver and with ample credit, President Wilson issued currency and expanded credit and such inflation was both rational and controlled.

Thus, in the two great wars, when in each instance our national existence was threatened, we have the record of inflation—rational and controlled.

From the platform and in the press we hear and see statements that inflation always injures and never helps, and always destroys and never saves, either a people or a government.

What would have happened to the colonies if there had been no issue of "Continental currency"? What would have happened to the Union if there had been no "greenbacks"?

What would New York City be tonight if either or both of these forms of inflation had been denied and rejected?

All admit that inflation, as just defined—an overissue and improper expansion of currency—is dangerous and should be avoided if politically and economically possible.

Inflation could not have been avoided by the colonists, and instead of destroying the people the policy contributed to American independence.

Inflation could not have been avoided by the North and instead of destroying the Nation, such policy saved the Union and the American Republic.

From the record we learn that currency inflation in times of great emergency has been authorized and decreed by the Government.

CREDIT INFLATION

What is the record of credit inflation?

In the years 1926 to 1929, in a period of peace, the banks of our country, led by the great banks of this city, inflated credit by an excessive and improper expansion of loans. When the depression broke upon us in October 4 years ago, we had less than $5,000,000,000 of real money in circulation, although the banks showed deposits in the total sum of approximately $60,000,000,000. These bank deposits, imaginary or credit moneys, were presumed to be convertible into currency, silver, or gold upon demand.

In addition to the bank deposits we had some $200,000,000,000 represented by listed bonds and stocks presumed to be as liquid, and as quickly and easily convertible into money, as such bank deposits themselves.

Thus in peace time, with no emergency save the greed for gain, the only real, dangerous, destructive, and inexcusable inflation this country had experienced in 150 years was the "bankers' credit inflation", responsible for and terminating in the 1929 crash, now conceded to be the worst depression in history.

TINKERING WITH CURRENCY

It is contended by some that money, like the sun, moon, and tides, is controlled by unchanging and unchangeable natural laws; hence any attempt to manage our currency or to influence or control our monetary policy constitutes tinkering with the currency.

It is self-evident that I do not subscribe to such doctrine. Money is a man-made device to encourage, promote, and facilitate commerce and trade.

Money and monetary policies, man-created, are subject to control, management, and manipulations; hence the kind of control and management is important, very important, to the people of our country.

As the word "tinker" is so frequently used in connection with the American monetary policy, perhaps it is not out of order to refer to the record.

The Federal Reserve Act was passed in 1913 in response to a demand for more money and an elastic-currency system. When the law was passed the United States had only $3,400,000,000 in circulation. This was not enough to satisfy needs of business, and from 1913 to 1920 the Wilson administration increased the circulation to $6,200,000,000.

The year 1920 was a national-campaign year and saw Franklin D. Roosevelt nominated for Vice President. The party sponsoring Cox and Roosevelt was condemned as being responsible for the high cost of living. Wheat was selling for $2.50 a bushel, corn $1.50, cotton 40 cents a pound, and other commodities at comparable prices.

All remember the good times just after the World War, and with high prices there were jobs for all, and all forms of business were at the peak.

In 1920 the war had been over almost 2 years and 4,500,000 soldiers had returned to civilian life to find places in business and industry.

That year the opposition party in its Chicago platform said the reason prices were high was a "50-percent depreciation of the purchasing power of the dollar due to gross expansion of currency and credit." In other words, the Wilson administration was condemned for having made prices high by making money plentiful and credit easy.

In addition to condemning Mr. Roosevelt's party for its monetary policy and high prices the opposition party pledged itself to bring down the high cost of living by reducing the price of wheat, corn, cotton, and other commodities. The Chicago convention was frank in detailing the exact procedure to be followed. The platform read:

"We pledge ourselves to earnest and consistent attack upon the high cost of living . . . by courageous and intelligent deflation of over-expanded credit and currency . . ."

MORE MONEY MEANS HIGHER PRICES

Thus, the opposition party admitted that placing money in circulation had cheapened the dollar and that the depreciated dollar was responsible for high prices. As a remedy the minority party declared for scarcer money, higher-valued dollars; hence lower prices. In the campaign scarcer money and lower prices won, and Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Cox were defeated.

Immediately after the victors took over the Government, deflation of currency and credit began, and from March 4, 1921, to September 1, 1922, the actual currency in circulation was decreased from $6,200,000,000 to $4,390,000,000.

Thus, during the first 18 months of the new administration $1,800,000,000 or $100,000,000 a month, of actual currency was withdrawn from circulation.

The minority party in 1920 became the majority party in 1921 and made good its campaign pledge to deflate the currency, and as the money in circulation was reduced, the prices fell so that at the end of 18 months cotton was selling for 20 cents per pound, and all other prices were reduced in proportion. Deflation of currency and credit ruined agriculture first, then livestock, lumber and mining industries followed the decline; still later smaller towns and cities suffered, and with one half the people impoverished the 1929 crash came.

In view of this record, if increasing the volume of money from 1913 to 1920 was responsible for a cheaper dollar and higher prices, and if the policy promised in 1920 and carried out in 1921-22 of reducing the volume of money in circulation by approximately $1,800,000,000 decreased prices, is it illogical now to assume that an increase in money in circulation will increase the price of wheat, corn, cotton, livestock, and commodities in general?

From the foregoing, it is clear that the insolvent and near-insolvent condition of towns, cities, counties, States, and even the Federal Government has been brought about by too much tinkering with the currency.

OUR MASSES DEBTS

In view of present conditions the question arises: What should be done to adjust our monetary policy? To answer such question it is necessary to consider the burden of debt resting upon the people. It is estimated that all the people together have massed debts approximating $250,000,000,000. This estimate was made by a committee of experts, and the findings are analyzed in a book entitled "The Internal Debts of the United States." The data show that at the end of 1932 our estimated long-term debts were $134,000,000,000 and our estimated short-term debts were $103,000,000,000. This shows a total of $237,000,000,000 of debts resting upon the people at the beginning of the present year.

At present, instead of these debts being paid, much of the interest on such debts is being postponed and the debts extended, which means that such debts are being compounded. It is likewise estimated that the national Federal indebtedness increased $4,000,000,000 during 1933. If the same percentage of national debt increase was carried through by States, counties, cities, and smaller units of government, such increase during 1933 exceeded $10,000,000,000, and this increase added to the amount before stated, will make the grand total of public and private debts approximately $250,000,000,000 at the beginning of 1934.

If this estimate is correct, it is difficult for anyone to conclude that this debt burden can be met with our present high-priced dollars; hence the only conclusion is that either these debts must be repudiated or the dollar must be substantially cheapened so that the people can procure such dollars with which to meet debts contracted and outstanding.

President Roosevelt has stated it as his purpose to give the people the same valued dollar to meet their obligations that they received when such obligations were contracted; hence it may be assumed the administration's policy is to reduce the value or buying power of the dollar to that point which will permit the people to liquidate, rather than to force them to repudiate their obligations.

ONE HUNDRED-CENT DOLLARS

The next question is to what point the value of the dollar should be reduced to enable the people to meet taxes, interest, and debts. Propaganda is being broadcast by a small group suggesting to those not familiar with the intricacies of the money system that any effort to cheapen the dollar will result in printing-press money and that the United States is certain to have a repetition of the German and Russian systems of inflation.

While inflation, literally interpreted, means increasing the money in circulation abnormally, improperly, or unjustifiably, inflation as understood by the masses means more money in circulation, hence cheaper money and higher prices for commodities.

In fact, the administration's policy of cheapening the dollar does not go even so far as the cheap-money policy just after the World War. At that time, if the declaration in the Chicago platform is accepted, the dollar was worth only 50 cents. If America had a 50-cent dollar in 1920, then by the same yardstick it had approximately a 200-cent dollar in February 1933.

It is contended by those who favor an adjustment of our monetary policy that the dollar was too cheap in 1920 and too dear in 1933. By the same yardstick it is found that the dollar in 1926 had a buying power of 100 cents; hence, it is to that level it is proposed to return.

The plentiful and cheap-money policy of 1930 found wheat selling at $2.50, corn $1.50, and cotton 42 cents, while the scarce and high-valued money policy of last February found wheat selling at 40 cents, corn 25 cents, and cotton at 6 cents per pound. As an adjustment, the advocates of a cheaper dollar, recommending the 1926 level, hope to return to such prices that wheat will sell for $1.50, corn $1, and cotton 20 cents per pound.

With such prices farmers can get cost of production plus a profit to apply on taxes, interest, and debts. Other producers of raw materials will benefit comparably. Such a policy will restore buying power to the farmers and producers. This in turn will increase employment and enable those who process raw materials to open their factories and return gradually to prosperous activity.

History shows that American money has been "tinkered" with in the past, and in every instance the tinkering has been brought about by a small but powerful group which profits by scarce and consequently high-valued dollars.

I have just said that the money question is the most important issue pending before the people. Money is that thing for which men plan, work, toil, and slave. Money is the one thing which men must secure if they are to enjoy any degree of success, prosperity, and happiness in our complex system of civilization.

I will not consume time in describing conditions, save as such conditions suggest or demand adjustment of our monetary policy.

MILLSTONE OF DEBT

We have a millstone chained to our necks, and such millstone is the two hundred and fifty billion of debts now bearing us down. How much is $250,000,000,000?

At the beginning of this year it was 21 times all the monetary gold in the world. It was 45 times all the money in circulation.

This debt is so large that much of the interest is not being paid, save in cases where funds can be borrowed with which to meet maturing coupons.

Already the Federal Government, itself a borrower, has appropriated and loaned or allocated some $13,000,000,000 as direct relief for the people or for loans to corporations and the several units of government.

When the Federal Government either spends or loans it has to either tax or borrow. For 4 years we have taxed and then increased our taxes. We have borrowed, and each year our borrowings increase. This year the Federal debt will be increased by more than five billions, making the consolidated total almost $32,000,000,000. The interest bill will amount to almost one and a quarter billion dollars, a sum almost as large as the total tax receipts for 1933.

With such conditions facing our people, our corporations, and our units of government, how can anyone, much less a public official, remain silent?

If these statements are correct, it is difficult for anyone to reach the conclusion that this debt burden can be met with the present high-priced dollars.

Although the value of the dollar has been cheapened in terms of gold, it still has an excessive value as measured by domestic prices.

As measured by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, in February the dollar still had a value of $1.38. We are demanding that this 38 cents of excess value or buying power be eliminated from the dollar.

REMEDIES

For years our fiscal policies have been formulated by the influential bankers of the country.

What is their remedy?

Their answer is a demand that the borrowers pay their loans. Instead of making loans they are collecting notes. Instead of expanding the credit they are deflating both currency and credit.

Today banks, as a rule, are institutions for deposit only. For the reasons stated, the Federal Government has been forced to open and operate the largest banking institution ever developed.

Again I ask, what is the remedy for the conditions confronting us? How can we meet $250,000,000,000 of debts?

The only conclusion I can reach is that either these debts must be repudiated or the dollar must be substantially cheapened so that the people can procure dollars with which to meet such debts.

RESPONSIBILITY ON CONGRESS

Under the Constitution the Congress has power to coin money and to regulate its value. The Congress, in recent special session, appointed and constituted the President its agent to exercise, within his discretion, its constitutional powers relative to money.

The President accepted the agency and is now exercising the powers conferred. In other words, President Roosevelt is now regulating the value of our money. He is managing and adjusting our monetary policy.

I have made the statement that in order for the people to pay their taxes, interest, and debts, the value of the dollar must be substantially reduced. A 167-cent dollar closed every bank in America. A 138-cent dollar will not make it possible for the people to pay their taxes, their interest, and the quarter of a trillion dollars of indebtedness now resting upon them.

We are not asking for a cheap dollar, but we are demanding that the value of the dollar be reduced to 100 cents as measured by the average of commodity and wholesale prices, based upon some 50 years of official Government statistics. Such statistics show that in 1926 we had a 100-cent dollar; hence the demand that we return to the dollar value of that year.

The definition of terms and interpretation of economic laws just made are supported by what I concede to be the best of authorities.

I contend that the same economic law that controls the price or value of commodities, such as wheat, corn, and cotton, also controls the value or the purchasing power of money.

When wheat, corn, and cotton are plentiful, the value of such commodities is low, and when such commodities are scarce, their value is high. Likewise, when money is plentiful the value or buying power of the dollar is low, and when money is scarce its value is high.

The Government at Washington has acknowledged and adopted the economic principles just stated. Within the last year the Department of Agriculture has withdrawn some 10,000,000 acres of cotton land from production in order to make cotton scarce and therefore higher in price. Wheat lands are being likewise withdrawn for the same economic purpose. Also some six and one half million pigs and hogs have been slaughtered and much of the meat destroyed in order to help the price of pork and meat products generally.

At any time it is necessary to lower the price of a commodity the reverse process is inaugurated, and, instead of decreasing production, an increase is planned and ordered.

ECONOMIC LAW APPLIES TO MONEY

The law of supply and demand applies to the value of money as well as to commodities. The Government, acting through its agents, has demonstrated the unfailing results from the application of such law.

The interpretation of the economic law governing the value of money, just given, is supported by such recognized economists as Ruffner, Taussig, Torrens, Ricardo, Nicholson, Sir James Graham, John Stuart Mill, and Gustav Cassell.

Again I say that the dollar must be cheapened. How may this be brought about? Let the economists answer:

Ricardo said: "The value of money in any country is determined by the amount existing."

Taussig said: "Double the quantity of money and, other things being equal, prices will be twice as high as before and the value of money one half."

If dollars are issued into circulation, such dollars become more plentiful and thereby cheaper. As dollars become cheaper, prices rise, and such is the goal of our efforts.

In order to secure cheaper money and higher prices, it will be necessary to have more money in circulation.

Who opposes the policy of a more liberal supply of money?

Only those who want a swollen dollar of excessive value or buying power.

It is contended by some that the act of removing the excess value from the dollar constitutes inflation. I deny that such an operation can be properly defined as an inflation of the currency.

The reducing of the value of the dollar to 100 cents is not inflation, but rather an act of simple honesty and justice toward the people of the United States.

AGAINST UNCONTROLLED INFLATION

Every citizen who has the faintest conception of our monetary problem shudders at the thought of uncontrolled inflation. The nations which have fallen under a flood of irredeemable currency were governments without gold, silver, or credit. Fortunately such is not the status of America.

As a remedy for our economic ills we have tried deflation, and more than $10,000,000,000 of added Federal indebtedness is only one of the results.

The annual income of our people has been reduced from ninety to some forty billion dollars.

Unemployment increased until we had some 14,000,000 men out of work and more than 20,000,000 men, women, and children in the public bread lines.

For 3 years we have financed the Government by a system of kiting checks through the Federal Reserve banks of the Nation.

Individuals, cities, counties, and the States cannot thus finance themselves.

How much longer must we wait before the dollar, in terms of commodities, will be cheapened?

How much longer must we wait for an ample supply of money to be placed in circulation?

PRINTING-PRESS MONEY

In some sections we hear much about "printing-press money." In a recent issue of a once reputable weekly publication we find on the editorial page the following:

"The forces led by Senator THOMAS are out-and-out inflationists. Frankly, Senator THOMAS wants to issue worthless printing-press money for the purpose of repudiating debts."

So says the poor, weak, and helpless editor who evidently has manacles on his limbs, a ring in his nose, and a mortgage upon his mind.

In another New York financial publication, we find the following—I quote the headlines as follows:

"Bankrupt cities to make determined fight for financial aid from incoming Congress."

From the body of the article I read as follows:

"Congressman WILCOX declares that with 1,105 cities, or public subdivisions, in default of bonds at the end of February and an even larger number hovering on the verge of bankruptcy something must be done."

Only recently the mayors and managers of our larger cities met in convention at Chicago and resolved to demand that Congress give their cities the right to file petitions of insolvency with the Federal court in order to void their bonds, bills, and debts.

As before stated, I am not an inflationist. Neither am I a repudiationist.

During the recent special session of the Congress, the House of Representatives passed the Wilcox bill giving cities the right to take bankruptcy. I opposed the bill in the Senate and voted against its passage. Individuals and corporations now have the right to go through bankruptcy. If the doors of the Federal bankruptcy courts are opened to the cities, then the counties and the States will join the procession, and before it is over your Uncle Sam may be leading the parade.

CAPITALISM THREATENED

The American economic system is the capitalistic system. This system grows, thrives, and expands upon profits and withers, dwells, and decays upon deficits; hence the life and continued existence of the capitalistic system is now in the balance.

Governments, great and small, live off of taxes paid by the masses of the people; hence if the people are impoverished and cannot get money, taxes default, governments fail, and the inevitable results are revolution and chaos.

MORE MONEY DEMANDED

Of deflation we have enough. We now demand an expansion of the currency.

Who is there among us who can say that it is not yet time to act?

The record before us demonstrates that we have but two roads open to possible travel. One is a continuation of deflation leading to bankruptcy and repudiation of debts, public and private.

The other road is an expansion of the currency leading to more money; hence cheaper money, higher prices for commodities, wages, and salaries, and thereby reinvesting the people with added buying power.

More money means the payment of taxes, interest, and debts. More money means the saving of homes, farms, and factories.

More money means the restoration of personal, corporate, city, county, State, and national solvency.

What program have the deflationists to offer?

Without a plan they are at Washington borrowing the peoples credit and spending some of the money in parading Russian and German inflation ghosts before the public.

POWER OF PRESIDENT

Today the President has practically unlimited power to coin money and to regulate the value of the dollar.

Already he has exercised some of the powers conferred.

Through the Federal Reserve Board and banks he has purchased bonds, paying for same with Federal Reserve money.

Through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation he has bought gold for the single purpose of forcing down the value of the paper dollar.

The President exercised the third power conferred by issuing silver certificates against silver recently received as partial payment of interest due from foreign governments.

Recently the President, under the authority conferred, issued a proclamation providing for the practical free coinage of all newly mined silver in the United States.

Then more recently he reduced the gold content of the dollar from 25 grains plus of gold nine-tenths fine to 15 grains plus nine-tenths fine.

The President has other powers in reserve—some of which he may never have to use.

However, the program is not yet completed. Our monetary problem is not yet adjusted. The following things remain to be done:

More actual money must be placed in circulation.

Credit or deposit money must be expanded and made available for the people and for industry.

Gold has been withdrawn from circulation and will not again pass from hand to hand among the people. Gold will be kept in the Federal Treasury as the base for the issuance of money.

SILVER

A wider use must be made of silver. All surplus gold is now monetary gold and, if the United States should acquire all the surplus silver possible and place same in circulation, we would not thereby increase the circulation sufficiently to meet the demands of either the conditions, times, or the people.

The longer the adjustment of our monetary system is delayed the cheaper the dollar must be made and the greater the danger of real inflation.

If confidence is to be restored, if business is to be revived, and if taxes, interest, and debts are to be paid, the people must be able to secure both money and credit; hence, to dispel the money famine is the paramount issue before the Congress and the country.

THE NEXT STEP

The next step is to dispel the existing famine of money and credit. Those who want the present high-valued dollar retained are those who have a corner on such dollars. The people, industry—great and small—and the several units of Government are begging for dollars, and dollars can be secured only from the Federal loan agencies at Washington.

To remedy this situation the people are powerless; industry is helpless; and even the banks themselves are not wholly to blame. The money in the banks does not belong to such banks but, instead, such money is the property of the depositors in such banks. Banks are not loaning the funds of their depositors, because the people, corporations, and industry generally are not making money and are not prosperous; therefore, are not good risks for loans.

Who is to blame?

What are the facts?

During this depression we have lost almost one half our banks and have lost some twenty billions of credit or deposit money. All gold and gold certificates have been withdrawn and retired from circulation. The remaining actual money in circulation is inactive and credit is frozen and dormant. Those who need money are denied, and those who have or can get money are afraid to either spend or invest; hence business, while improved, is creeping when it should be at full speed.

One year ago the dollar was worth, in terms of commodities, almost 200 cents. Today, although cheapened, the dollar is still worth, in domestic products, almost 150 cents. This excess value must be removed, and we cannot possibly return to prosperity until the value of the dollar, in terms of American products, is reduced to 100 cents again.

The people have made the demand and are insisting that the dollar be cheapened, and that the general price level of 1926 be restored. The people themselves are powerless to act save through their agents at Washington. The Congress, in both House and Senate, has repeatedly gone on record favoring such policy, but to date there is an influence greater than the Congress which has held the value of the dollar up, thereby keeping prices down.

This contest will not abate. The people must have money and credit, and if the private agencies controlling our financial system are either unwilling or unable to provide relief, then the Congress must act. Already the Congress has provided credit for the larger industries and is now extending and expanding its credit activities to the smaller institutions of the country.

If necessary to provide money and credit, the Congress, in addition to nationalizing gold, may be compelled to nationalize silver, to nationalize currency, and to nationalize credit; and, if necessary, will either nationalize all existing banks or provide a Federal system of banks, Government owned and Government operated.

If the financial system will not or cannot solve this problem, then nothing remains but for the Congress to undertake to provide relief.

Our economic system depends upon profits, and our plan of Government, in all its units, depends upon taxes; hence, money and credit must be made available if our present form of society and even civilization is to survive.

REPLY OF RAILWAY LABOR EXECUTIVES' ASSOCIATION

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD the reply of the Railway Labor Executives Association at Washington, D.C., March 17, 1934, to the statement made by the conference committee of managers on March 15, 1934.

There being no objection the reply was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPLY OF THE RAILWAY LABOR EXECUTIVES' ASSOCIATION AT WASHINGTON, D.C., MARCH 17, 1934, TO THE STATEMENT MADE BY THE CONFERENCE COMMITTEE OF MANAGERS ON MARCH 15, 1934

WASHINGTON, D.C., March 17, 1934.

MR. W. F. THIEHOFF,

Chairman Conference Committee of Managers,

Willard Hotel, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. THIEHOFF: We have given your statement, submitted to us on March 15, careful and serious consideration.

We must say at the outset that we are amazed by the spirit of pessimism, defeat, and despair which pervades the statement of the conference committee of managers. The revival of the characteristic American feeling of confidence in our economic future and in the ability of our country to meet and solve its problems, which animates our people and their leaders today, finds no echo in the dismal tones of the management's statement. While the whole Nation moves resolutely forward to renewed industrial health, you offer us but one more stanza of the dirge to which we have listened for 4 years. It is not surprising, in view of such an attitude by the railway managements, that so many people in the United States mistakenly believe the railway industry to be upon its deathbed.

But the facts show the situation to be exactly the reverse. Not only is general industrial recovery well under way throughout the Nation but the railway industry itself very definitely reflects that general recovery. You have told us again the distressing story of 1932 and the early months of 1933. We ask you rather to consider what has happened during the late months of 1933 and the first 2 months of 1934. In that record we believe you may find the courage and confidence to place our industry where it belongs, in the front line of our economic advance, rather than to keep it halting and stumbling in the rear guard.

Beginning with May 1933 every month in the latter part of last year showed a distinct improvement in gross operating revenues over the corresponding month of 1932—with the exception of October, which was one third of 1 percent under 1932. The last 8 months of 1933 showed operating revenue of $2,214,000,000 as compared with $2,039,000,000 for the same months of 1932. Net railway operating income for these months of 1933 was $419,000,000—against $241,000,000 for the same months of 1932. Surely an increase of 74 percent in net railway operating income ought to be enough to convince railway managements that the industry is emerging from the depression.

But if that is not enough, we ask you to consider the results to date in 1934. Your statement conservatively says that car loadings exceeded 1933, approximated 1932, but were 20 percent below 1931. For the month of January, car loadings this year were above 1933, but below 1932, and 25 percent below 1931. For the month of February, car loadings were above 1933, 3 percent above 1932, and 19 percent below 1931. For the latest week in 1934, car loadings were above 1933, 8 percent above 1932, and only 16 percent below 1931. No one can fail to see in these figures the fact that railway traffic is rapidly rising toward substantially higher levels.

Car loadings, however, are only a part of the story. A more significant change is that in the net railway operating income of the carriers. So far, only the figures for the month of January are available. But net railway operating income for January 1934 is 127.7 percent greater than it was for January 1933, 177 percent greater than in January 1932, and only 8 percent below 1931. Later months will certainly show 1934 net railway operating income passing that of 1931. The railway industry is regaining, has in fact already regained, a large part of the ground lost during the depression.

It is in the light of these conditions of the present and the future, rather than with our eyes fixed upon the long-past low point of the depression, that we must consider the problem of railway wages. We here are discussing wages for the year 1934, not for 1932, nor for 1933.

Railway managements understand, as well as railway employees do, that the foundation of railway activity is in the general economic condition of the country. You may perhaps not have realized the extent to which the United States has recovered from the low levels of 1932 and 1933. If so, we would call your attention to the fact that industrial production in January of this year is 16 percent higher than in January 1932, and 34 percent higher than at the low point of the depression. Output of the steel industry, in January, was 31 percent above January 1932, and 114 percent above the low point of the depression. Automobile production had risen 20 percent above January 1932, and had more than tripled the month of lowest production. Building contracts awarded in January were 124 percent higher in value than in January of 1932. The outlook for increased railway traffic, as indicated by these figures, is very different indeed from what it was when we met in January 1932 to consider the request of the railway managements for reduction in the wages of the men we represent.

We are very much surprised that the representatives of the management seem not to know about the change in our industry and in business conditions generally. We feel sure that if you will consider the facts to which we have referred, you will come to share with the railway employees their confidence in our industry, and that you will recover from the despondency which seems to have inspired the statement submitted to us.

But while we would emphasize current developments on the railways, there is one grave abuse surviving from the depression period which demands drastic action. This abuse was a legacy from the days of festive finance which ended in 1929, but its heavy cost has come to be understood only as a result of the last 4 years. We refer to the hopelessly topheavy capital structure of the railway industry.

In the management statement there is reference to the deficits of 1932 and 1933. Technically, and from the standpoint of I.C.C. accounting regulations, the term was correctly used; but actually the railways were operated in 1932 and 1933 not at a deficit but with a very large return to the owners of the industry. Other industries consider they have earned a net income if the investors who have supplied their capital have any return whatever above operating expense. The railway capital structure, with its overload of bonded indebtedness, is such that more than half of the actual capitalization is represented by bonds. No other industry earning a net of 1.8 percent on investment at the bottom of the depression would have reported a deficit. But the railroads report their earnings in a manner that makes return to the owners largely a fixed charge, and net income is calculated only after a half billion dollars has been paid to the owners of the industry. The word "deficit", therefore, is misleading. In 1932, when the carriers reported a deficit of $139,000,000, there was actually a profit from railway operations of $326,000,000. In 1933, when the class I roads reported a deficit of $14,000,000, there was, in fact, a profit on operations of $474,000,000. Even viewing the term "deficit" in its technical sense, we must take issue with your statement that "the slight improvement since the spring of 1933 has resulted only in decreasing the deficit for that year." While reports published by the Interstate Commerce Commission show that there was a deficiency in so-called "net income" for class I railroads of $13,800,000 for the year of 1933, they also show that for the year of 1932 this deficiency had been $139,204,000. This means that the 1933 technical deficit amounted to only approximately 10 percent of that for 1932, and such improvement certainly cannot be classified as slight.

The net result for 1933 was attained notwithstanding an increase of $8,000,000 in payments to security holders in 1933, as compared with 1932.

Twenty-three railroads, representing 25 percent of the mileage represented in this conference, and which showed a net income for both the years 1932 and 1933, realized an increase in net income of approximately $19,500,000, or 18.9 percent, in 1933, as compared with 1932. Fourteen roads, comprising 14.5 percent of the mileage, which reported a technical deficit totaling approximately $21,500,000 in 1932, realized a net income of approximately $17,500,000 in 1933, an improvement of approximately $39,000,000. The remaining lines and their subsidiaries, which showed a technical deficit in net income in each of the years, approximating $220,000,000 in 1932 and approximating $151,500,000 in 1933, were able to improve their position by nearly $69,000,000 in the later year, or approximately 31 percent. Most of the $1,500,000,000 of railroad bonds listed on the New York Stock Exchange upon which interest is not being paid are naturally those of railroads now in receivership. Many of these roads are notorious for their topheavy bonded capital structure. You are aware of the fact, of course, that for some of these lines receivership is not a new or unusual experience. It might not be out of place to remind you that of the total capitalization of the Rock Island, 68 percent is funded debt; of the Missouri Pacific, 72.6 percent; of the I. & G. N., 81.5 percent; of the M. & O., 86.3 percent; of the Frisco, 71.9 percent; of the Central of Georgia, 73.3 percent; of the Florida East Coast, 62.2 percent; of the Seaboard Air Line, 64.8 percent. No such structure can be maintained without a continued era of abundant prosperity. Some of the other lines with a lower ratio of funded debt to capital stock are in receivership for reasons entirely independent of the depression in business.

Despite the statement that railway bonds are not now all paying interest, we are not moved to any great sympathy for the bondholder, who has been taking most of this net railway income during the depression. We invite you to consider, and we believe the people and the Government of the United States should consider, the conduct of these bondholders in the years since 1929. No previous national calamity, neither war, nor disease, nor economic decline, has taken such toll from the American people as have these years of suffering. The scars left by the depression will never be effaced. The misery of the working people of the country cannot be measured nor described. Small business interests, too, paid heavily in losses and complete failures. But the railway bondholder has been above the storm. Class I railways paid to these bondholders in 1929, $511,000,000; in 1930, $509,000,000; in 1931, $518,000,000; in 1932, $525,000,000; and in 1933, $533,000,000. We have been told that these last 2 years have been the worst in railroad history, the only 2 when so-called "deficits" were incurred. But these very 2 years were the harvest period of the bondholder; never before have they taken such toll of the railway industry. And it is more than a coincidence that the worst years in net railway returns were the fattest years for the coupon clippers.

If these increased returns to railway bondholders had come without the active effort of their beneficiaries, it might still be said that the industry could justly have expected the bondholders to have volunteered a reduction in the interest burden upon the carriers. But so far from making any such reduction, so far from making any contribution during this period of economic distress, the bondholders have organized themselves for the purpose of forcing all other groups to shoulder the entire cost of the depression. These organizations have put pressure upon the railways to reduce employment and to lower wages; they have sought Government aid to bolster the crazy-quilt railway capital structure; they have filled the newspapers of the country with lamentations about the trials of the bondholders. And the interest bill has been paid. Railway employees of long service have been turned out to accept charity or to starve; hundreds of thousands have gone on part time, and have brought home the diminished earnings which meant drastic curtailments in their living standards, and painful privations for their families. But the interest bill has been paid—$22,000,000 more in 1933 than in 1929. If the men who collected that interest bill know the havoc they have wrought in the homes of these railway workers and if they had acted in that knowledge, no condemnation could adequately characterize the inhuman greed which such action would have evidence. But we know these bondholders are ignorant of the harm they do. They are the absentee owners of our industry, whose pressure is felt by the public, by the management, and most of all by the railway worker. Their ignorance excuses their avarice, but it does not justify a continuance of the suffering they have imposed upon the railway employees we represent.

If our condemnation of the railway bondholders seems severe, we ask you to consider what has been said of them by men whose authority even the bondholders themselves must accept. The Coolidge Commission, financed by the owners of railroad securities, said that "there is a need to reform the topheavy structures" of railway capitalization. Mr. Alfred E. Smith, a member of the Commission, said:

"There must be a scaling down of many railroad securities. I believe that the banks, trust companies, insurance companies, and other holders of railroad securities must be realistic about this phase of the problem. The public will not stand for making them a preferred class of investors."

Federal Coordinator Joseph B. Eastman, in his report of January 20, 1934, said:

"Many railroads are overcapitalized, whatever test be applied. . . . Important in this connection are the amount and character of the railroad funded debt. It aggregates 56 percent of the outstanding capitalization. This is a high percentage."

President Roosevelt, during his campaign for election in 1932, indicated in his Salt Lake City address that the Government should condition its assistance to the railways "upon acceptance of such requirements as may in individual cases be found necessary to readjust topheavy financial structures through appropriate scaling down of fixed charges." Newspaper reports of February 9, 1934, indicate that the President is still of the opinion that interest charges on railway securities must be reduced.

In recognition of this situation, and following out the pronouncements of 1932, the Congress of the United States included in the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act provisions for the reorganization of unsound railroads, looking to the rationalizing of the railway capital structure.

It is for the purpose of continuing these still untouched interest rates and debt totals that railway managements are now asking railway employees to continue their depression sacrifices. We believe the request to be indefensible.

In your statement, presented us on March 15, you stated in part that "recognizing the seriousness of the situation the representatives of the railroads and the employees agreed upon the 10-percent deduction which has been effective since that time", namely, February 1, 1932. We did agree to accept the 10-percent deduction for 1 year at the insistence of the management, but we did not agree then nor since that this procedure would lead to industrial recovery. On the contrary, we insisted that the policy then being pursued by big employers, including the railroads, of throwing men out of jobs, of extending part-time employment, of lowering wage rates and of considering only dividend and interest payments could only bring about further decreases in the purchasing power of the masses of the people, and thereby intensify the evils of the depression.

Our position has now been sustained. We find other industries making an effort to whip the depression by raising wages, shortening hours, and employing additional men. But the railroads are still clinging to the economic fallacy that business can be improved by destroying the foundation of business; that is to say, by lowering the purchasing power upon which business depends.

When the original 10-percent deduction was made, the representatives of the carriers strongly emphasized the hope that this contribution by railway workers would prove to be the turning point in this depression, a thought with which we did not agree. Now, after 2 years, you come before us representing the same carriers and admit that the emergency has continued during the 2 years since the original deduction agreement was made. In other words, you sustain the position that we took 2 years ago, you concede that your own economic predictions or hopes were poorly founded, and you advance the evil consequences of your own unsound economics of 2 years ago as justifying the continuance of this same industrial suicide for a still longer period. To put it frankly, your faith and hope in this unsound and antisocial economic policy has only led to the necessity of charity for hundreds of thousands of railroad workers.

Your reference to the cost-of-living figures is neither convincing nor impressive. We do not accept the current changes in living cost as being the proper yardstick for the measurement of wages. Moreover, the index figures published by the United States Department of Labor were never intended for any such purposes. These figures are predicated upon living standards that are acknowledged to be out of date by those who were originally responsible for their establishment. Ethelbert Stewart, a noted economist, who was in the service of the United States Government in various capacities for 45 years and who dealt directly with this subject as Commissioner of Labor Statistics from August 1, 1920, until his retirement in the middle of 1932, has publicly stated that "the use of the cost-of-living figures of the Bureau of Labor Statistics (for 1918), now 15 years old, is a crime, a fraud, and an outrage when used as an argument, or as a basis of reducing wages in the year of 1933." Isadore Lubin, the present United States Commissioner of Labor Statistics, has likewise condemned this use of the Bureau's figures, and three successive Secretaries of Labor, James J. Davis, William N. Doak, and Frances E. Perkins have also voiced their dissatisfaction with, and their disapproval of, such use of this index.

We respectfully submit, further, that your references to changes in the cost of living are glaringly inconsistent. We recall vividly that in 1919 and 1920, when the cost of living was increasing by leaps and bounds the same carriers you now represent appeared before Federal wage tribunals in vigorous opposition to wage increases. Following the depression of 1921, when we sought the restoration of wages that had been taken from us by a board that has since been discredited and abolished, your roads persisted in this opposition to wage increases, notwithstanding the current increase in living costs. You now seek to justify a further extension of the 10-percent deduction and a continued restriction of the purchasing power of your employees by referring to the same cost of living records that you have persistently refused to accept when the figures were on the upward trend. In the same breath, however, you admit that the cost of living is now rising.

Nor is it necessary that we possess the qualifications or wisdom of a prophet to see with reasonable certainty that prices will continue to increase at an accelerated rate. The devaluation of the dollar, the codes providing for higher wages and shorter hours in other industries, the fair-competition regulations, the destroying of surpluses of wheat, cotton, and hogs, and in fact the President's entire industrial-recovery program has for one of its major purposes the increasing of prices. The increase so far experienced is but the beginning. If changes in living costs are to be the criterion for wage determination, substantially higher rates of pay should be established immediately.

However, since you have introduced the question of living costs, we now desire to invite your attention to the present living standards of railway workers. As a result of total unemployment for nearly a million of these workers, part-time employment for about 400,000 others, the low basic wages and the 10-percent reduction, living standards for both the unemployed and the so-called "employed railroad workers" have been dangerously reduced.

An investigation conducted a year ago revealed that at that time the homes of railway men were being lost, savings exhausted, and necessary household equipment was being taken from them because of their inability to meet instalment payments. Life insurance was being dropped or greatly reduced, debts were increasing, necessary medical and dental care was being deferred, and families were undernourished, improperly clothed, and enduring unreasonable hardships. Naturally enough, these vicious conditions are more marked in the case of the railway workers falling in the lower-wage brackets. Since you desire to continue the 10-percent deduction for all railway employees, including those in the lower-wage brackets, we feel impelled to direct your attention to some of the sweatshop wages now being paid and as a result of which the living standards of certain railway classes have been reduced to the level of Chinese coolies.

Let us be specific on this point: On the Southern Railway, track and roadway section men are being paid as low as 25 cents an hour and in February worked 3 days per week. This provides a weekly wage of $6 from which you deduct 10 percent or 60 cents, leaving these workers $5.40 a week with which to care for their families and make their contribution to national industrial recovery. We understand you desire to continue this deduction, but no assurance has been given that part-time work will be reduced. If these men on the Southern were given 6 days per week, they would make $12, which, after the 10 percent deduction, would leave them $10.80.

On the Atlantic Coast Line, section men are paid $1.70 per day. We understand that you desire to continue a 10-percent deduction from this totally inadequate wage for a period to expire in April 1935.

On the New York Central, section men receive a basic wage of 43 cents an hour and are working as little as 10 days per month, or an average of 2½ days a week. This gives them $8.60 per week from which 10 percent or 86 cents is deducted, leaving $7.74 a week in a territory where the P.W.A. minimum is $15.

In Detroit, on the Michigan Central, section men are paid 46 cents an hour and work about 2½ days a week. Their weekly earnings are $9.20 from which 10 percent or 92 cents is taken by the management, leaving these workers $8.28 a week in a city where the relief basis for a totally unemployed man with a family of five is $11.40 a week.

In Chicago, section men on the Chicago Junction and the Chicago River & Indiana receive 41 cents an hour, work 3 days a week, earn $9.84 a week, give 10 percent or 98 cents of this back to the railroad and then try to maintain their families in that great industrial center on the remaining $8.86.

The Florida East Coast pays a basic wage of 20 cents an hour to section men and is one of the roads represented by you in your request for a continuation of the 10-percent deduction.

The Illinois Central pays section men as little as 25 cents an hour, works them as little as 2 days a week, enabling them to make $4 per week.

These specific cases could be dealt with in greater detail, but they are sufficient to illustrate the earnings prevailing on individual roads, and to show the totally inadequate living standards prevailing for some railway classes on roads represented by your committee. We have referred to section men, but conditions are equally bad for some other railway classes. Almost all railway workers have suffered reductions in living standards, and so far they have shared in none of the effects of the recovery program excepting to pay the increased prices of the necessities of life that have arisen from this program.

Still further evidence of the inadequate earnings of railway employees is to be found in the average earnings as reported by the Interstate Commerce Commission. For the year 1932 there were 140,000 railway employees whose earnings were approximately $50 a month, or less, which means about $12 a week. This number embraces about 13 percent of all railway employees. Approximately 266,000 railway employees, over 25 percent of the total number, earned $75 a month or less. There were over 434,000 railway employees, 42 percent of the total, who earned less than $100 a month. The railway employees who earned $125 a month or less, numbered 749,000, and this group embraced about 72 percent of all railway employees. Less than 7 percent of those engaged by the class I roads earned $175 a month or more. This 7 percent included the entire official family but embraced relatively few of those commonly referred to as employees.

In 1929 the average earnings of more than 200,000 track and roadway section men were $833 a year, declining to $621 in 1932, representing a loss of $260 or 29.5 percent. We direct this to your attention in view of your statement that since 1929 the cost of living had decreased 21.2 percent, and in order that you might see that this one big group of railway workers, who because of their low earnings are least able to meet additional burdens, have seen their earnings drop much more than has the cost of living.

In the light of these earnings and circumstances we hold that the current changes in the prices of the necessities of life from month to month mean but little to thousands of the railway employees involved in these negotiations. The price changes merely reflect the degree with which these workers will proceed with their gradual starvation.

You advised us on March 15 that you had addressed a letter to President Roosevelt under date of February 19 stating in part that "the conference committee of managers is most sympathetic to the important considerations of national welfare, etc. * * *". We are greatly pleased with this expression relative to the national welfare and we sincerely hope that the carriers represented by your committee will now demonstrate this sympathy by making your long-deferred contribution to the national welfare. The President on March 5 indicated precisely how this sympathy might be given practical application when he said:

"The immediate task of industry is to reemploy more people at purchasing wages and to do it now. Reductions in hours coupled with a decrease in weekly wages will do no good for it amounts only to a forced contribution to unemployment relief by the classes less able to bear it."

The President in further emphasizing the manner in which you can demonstrate the sincerity of your sympathetic interest in the national welfare stated:

"In working out the plans on a national scale, of which I have spoken before, we can list certain immediate objectives. I spoke last June of the fact that wage increases will eventually raise costs but I asked that management give first consideration to increasing the purchasing power of the public. I said that is good economics and good business. The aim of this whole effort is to restore our rich domestic market by raising its vast consuming capacity. What I said was true in June and it is true now. The first task of industry today, as it was then, is to create consuming power. We must remember that the bulk of the market for American industry is among the 90 percent of our people who live on wages and salaries and only 10 percent of that market is among the people who live on profits alone. No one is opposed to sensible and reasonable profits but the morality of the case is that a great segment of our people are in actual distress and that as between profits first and humanity afterward and humanity first and profits afterward we have no room for hesitation."

What confronts us, then, when we consider your proposal for an extension of the 10-percent wage deduction may be summarized thus:

In response to what we then considered an unjustified demand by railway managements, we consented in January 1932 to this 10-percent deduction from the earnings of the men and women we represent. What shadow of justification there was for this deduction at the low point of the depression has now disappeared, and rising railway traffic, increasing gross and net revenues, together with rising prices, at once require and permit the restoration of basic rates of pay. Your request would in effect continue this deduction in the interest of strengthening the position of the railway bondholders. But the lean years of the depression found interest payments to these bondholders steadily increasing, rising in the worst years of the slump to the highest level ever attained. The record shows an increase in interest payments from $511,000,000 in 1929 to $533,000,000 in 1933—while compensation of employees dropped from $2,941,000,000 in 1929 to $1,404,000,000 in 1933. The figures of decreased compensation only indicate the terrific privations forced upon these railway employees; men earning as low as $5 or $6 per week are among those being asked to continue their sacrifices from their pitiful wages to permit improved conditions for the railway bondholders. The managements here are asking us to agree with them in a policy which contradicts and must to a very large extent nullify the National Industrial Recovery program. We are asked to confirm a program of restricted wage payments and of reduced employee purchasing power. In plain language, you ask us to obstruct and retard American economic recovery and to support you in your refusal to contribute anything at all to the national rehabilitation. We cannot and will not acquiesce.

Therefore we most respectfully but definitely reject your proposal for a 15-percent reduction in basic rates of pay, and decline to agree to your proposal for an extension of the existing 10-percent wage-deduction agreement for a period of 10 months beyond its present expiration date, June 30, 1934. We insist that basic rates shall be restored on July 1, 1934, in keeping with the terms of the existing agreement.

AIR-MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD several telegrams from California relating to the air-mail situation.

There being no objection, the telegrams were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., March 17, 1934.

Senator WILLIAM G. McADOO,

Senate Office Building:

State chamber favors return air-mail contracts to private contractors on temporary basis pending congressional investigation and establishment of new rates. We feel that inconvenience to California business and loss of public confidence in air mail indicates clearly the necessity for such action.

N. H. SLOANE,

General Manager California State Chamber of Commerce.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., March 14, 1934.

WILLIAM GIBBS McADOO,

Senate Office Building:

Irrespective of merits of mail carriers it is a fact that present suspension of transcontinental and coastwise air mail is disastrous to all lines of business and finance in San Francisco. Situation here even more critical than other coast cities, and we strongly urge your utmost efforts for quick relief.

SAN FRANCISCO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,

GEORGE J. PRESLEY,
Executive Vice President.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., March 14, 1934.

Hon. WILLIAM GIBBS McADOO,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

Air-mail poundage has dropped to almost vanishing point because of inability business groups to use present unsatisfactory service. There is total lack of confidence by business heretofore heavily using air mail, and the injury will be cumulative unless service established equal to needs. This section had built up large air mail because of distance from eastern business and industrial centers with which southern California has urgent and daily communications. Heavy dependence was put on the service by important groups including motion pictures, banks, security houses, and dealers in style merchandise with New York, Philadelphia, and other eastern centers, oil-well supply inventories at branch plants throughout midcontinent fields, agricultural perishables with all large market centers, and miscellaneous business groups imperatively requiring dispatch. Our manufacturing plants stand to suffer loss of large plane and motor-building contracts if air mail not restored to commercial aviation with consequent serious unemployment.

HARRY L. HARPER,

President Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., March 13, 1934.

W. G. McADOO.

Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

Certain businesses, such as produce dealers, injured through doubling or perhaps trebling time within which sight drafts for fruit shipped can be cashed. Certain businesses using wires instead of air mail at considerably increased cost. Banks using air express at an average cost of 17 cents a letter, 8 cents for air-mail postage and 9 cents express. Many businesses undoubtedly seriously inconvenienced, even if not injured. Believe sentiment generally favors return Air Mail Service to commercial companies under proper conditions.

Security First National Bank of Los Angeles.

JOANNA A. SHEEHAN

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H.R. 3908) for the relief of Joanna A. Sheehan. This bill is identical with the Senate bill (S. 628) for the relief of Joanna A. Sheehan, introduced by my colleague the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and which passed the Senate on March 15.

I make this request in order to avoid the necessity of referring the House bill, already passed by the House of Representatives, to the Senate Committee on Claims.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

There being no objection, the bill (H.R. 3908) for the relief of Joanna A. Sheehan was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem, in favor of Joanna A. Sheehan, of Haverhill, Mass., United States Liberty loan permanent coupon bond no. 321,498 in the denomination of $1,000, of the third 4½'s, issued May 9, 1918, matured September 15, 1928, with interest from the date of issue to the date of maturity, at the rate of 4½ percent per annum, without presentation of said bond, the said bond, together with coupons due September 15, 1922, to September 15, 1928, inclusive, attached, having been lost, stolen, or destroyed: Provided, That the said bond shall not have been previously presented and paid, and that payment shall not be made hereunder for any coupons which shall have been previously presented and paid: And provided further, That the said Joanna A. Sheehan shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of the said Liberty loan bond and the unpaid interest which had accrued thereon when the principal became due and payable, in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, with condition to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the Liberty loan bond or the coupons thereof hereinbefore described: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

BONDS OF HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2999) to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, the principal purpose of the pending bill is to provide that the principal of the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation shall be guaranteed by the Treasury of the United States as well as the interest. The reasons for this change in the law may be briefly summarized.

Some mortgagees holding mortgages on homes have refused to accept in exchange for mortgages bonds not guaranteed by the Treasury. That has created an arbitrary distinction against certain mortgagors through no fault of their own. The only way by which we can provide for relief of all mortgagors who are deserving of relief is to add the Government guaranty to the principal of the Corporation's bonds.

The second reason for the step proposed is that the Government will save a considerable sum in interest. The bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation now carry 4-percent interest and have sold at considerably below par. With the guarantee of the Treasury, there is no doubt that bonds can be sold approximately for par, even at a very substantially lower rate of interest. It is presumed that the bonds guaranteed by the Treasury will carry a rate of interest not more than 3½ percent. If we assume that $2,000,000,000 of those bonds are outstanding, the saving in interest of one-half percent will amount to $10,000,000 a year. This will provide considerable additional margin to cover possible losses and thus more certainly relieve the Government of losses resulting from the operation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am sure the Senator will pardon the query when I say to him that I have not had opportunity to go through the particular measure in detail as I should like. There are certain outstanding bonds at the present time, are there not?

Mr. BULKLEY. There are.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the bill provide the guarantee for those outstanding bonds, for all the bonds issued, as well as for those which may be subsequently issued?

Mr. BULKLEY. No; it does not. It provides that the outstanding 4-percent bonds are exchangeable during a period of 6 months for new bonds guaranteed by the Treasury but carrying such lower rate of interest as may be fixed by the corporation, being the same rate of interest that will be offered to new mortgagees accepting the new bonds.

Mr. JOHNSON. As I understand, then, the outstanding bonds which have now been delivered to mortgagees and the like, may be exchanged for the bonds provided for, with the specific rate of interest indicated in this bill, and then those bonds, of course, will be in the same situation as those which may be issued in the future.

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes. The outstanding bonds may be exchanged, but this bill does not provide a specific rate of interest. It provides that the rate of interest may be fixed from time to time by the Home Loan Corporation Board with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is anticipated that the initial rate of interest on the new bonds will be 3½ percent. Anyone owning a 4-percent bond will have the privilege, during a period of 6 months, of converting it into a new guaranteed bond bearing a lower rate of interest.

Mr. JOHNSON. But the guaranty will attach to all the bonds at the lower rate of interest?

Mr. BULKLEY. All bonds issued after the enactment of this bill will bear the lower rate of interest and will be guaranteed by the Treasury. There is a provision, however, that commitments which may have been made before the passage of this bill are to be carried out by the delivery of 4-percent bonds similar to the bonds already outstanding, so that if a commitment has been made, regardless of the fact that the papers have not passed, the mortgagee will receive 4-percent bonds even after the enactment of this bill; but all new transactions closed after the date when this bill becomes a law will be based on the new guaranteed bonds.

Mr. JOHNSON. My query related solely to the guaranty, and its purpose was to ascertain definitely upon the floor, because of my inability heretofore to study the bill as I desired, that the guaranty will attach on the exchange that may be made of bonds now outstanding.

Mr. BULKLEY. That is correct. They may be exchanged for guaranteed bonds.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McADOO in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio to explain subsection (b) on page 5, which reads:

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) of this section (except with respect to refunding) shall not apply to any bonds heretofore issued by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation under such section 4 (c), or to any bonds hereafter issued in compliance with commitments of the Corporation outstanding on the date of enactment of this act.

Mr. BULKLEY. That is to say that the guaranty does not attach to bonds now outstanding or to bonds which may be issued in compliance with commitments made before the enactment of this bill.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. It is not very clear to me.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is one question I should like to ask in connection with the point brought out by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. What loss is it contemplated that the present bondholders will suffer by reason of this transfer to the new bonds?

Mr. BULKLEY. The present bondholders will not suffer any loss, because they will have the option of retaining the bonds which they already have; and as far as the market is concerned, the market price of the outstanding bonds has decidedly advanced since this bill has been expected.

Mr. BORAH. The bondholders have had to take those bonds at a lower price. They have sold below par, have they not?

Mr. BULKLEY. They have taken bonds, and the face amounts of the bonds are equivalent to the amounts they are entitled to on their mortgages. The market for the bonds has been below par, but the bondholders will have the right hereafter to exchange those bonds for new bonds which are to be guaranteed by the Treasury, and will, therefore, presumably sell at par or above.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to say that the present outstanding bonds are guaranteed only as to interest. The new bonds are guaranteed as to principal and interest, and when the holder of an outstanding bond wishes to exchange it for a new bond, he will be expected to do so at a lower rate of interest than he now receives.

Mr. BULKLEY. The Senator from Florida is exactly correct. The owner of a present bond who wishes to exchange for a new guaranteed bond will have to accept exactly the same rate of interest that is given to the mortgagees who accept the guaranteed bonds on original transactions that may take place hereafter.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further—

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think I understand the position the Senator now makes plain; but it ought to be absolutely clear that the bonds which are now outstanding may, by virtue of an exchange and acceptance of the rate of interest which may be prescribed in the exchange, be guaranteed and will be guaranteed exactly as bonds which may be issued in the future. That, I understand, is the position of the Senator, and that is the design of the bill.

Mr. BULKLEY. Oh, yes; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. JOHNSON. Did the Senator follow the section that was read by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] a moment ago, on page 5? I refer to the provision—

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) of this section (except with respect to refunding) shall not apply—

I presume that takes care of it—to any bonds heretofore issued by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation under such section 4 (c), or to any bonds hereafter issued in compliance with commitments of the Corporation outstanding on the date of enactment of this act.

Mr. BULKLEY. That is to say, we make it clear that we do not guarantee as to principal any of the bonds that are now outstanding. If the holders of those bonds want a guarantee as to principal, they must come in and exchange and get the new bonds.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the Senator thinks that is perfectly clear and that there can be no ambiguity in the language I have read, I accept that as conclusive.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me there is still one point that the Senator has not made clear. The question of the Senator from California, I think, does not cover this matter:

As to those bonds not issued now, but for which commitments have been made, this bill when it becomes a law will have the effect of permitting those bonds to be issued according to the commitments, regardless of the enactment of this measure.

Mr. BULKLEY. That is correct, because some holders might prefer the 4-percent interest. They might not want to exchange.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the question. If people have commitments for bonds not yet issued at 4 percent, and they are issued, can those holders come in under the provisions of this measure and surrender those bonds and get those of the lower rate of interest, but guaranteed as to principal?

Mr. BULKLEY. Oh, yes; they certainly can, but they are not obliged to do so. The commitment is carried out in accordance with its terms.

I am not sure whether the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] now feels clear about this matter.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes; I thoroughly understand the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BULKLEY. Then I shall proceed to review the other reasons for the Treasury guaranty of the Home Owners' Loan bonds.

The third reason is to facilitate the relief. The negotiation with mortgagees has in many cases taken a good deal of time, delayed the relief, and caused additional cost in the operation of the system. All of this will be facilitated by the Government guaranty of the principal as well as the interest of the bonds.

A fourth reason why it seems logical and necessary that the Treasury should guarantee these Home Owners' Loan bonds is that we have already provided for a Treasury guarantee of the bonds of the Farm Credit Corporation, and Congress would hardly wish to be in the position of having Home Owners' Loan bonds in any different position from those of the Farm Credit Corporation. I will say that the purpose of this bill has been to put these bonds as nearly as may be in exactly the same status as those of the Farm Credit Corporation.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Has the Senator made any investigation whatever as to the probable cost of this legislation in its finality?

Mr. BULKLEY. The limitation provided by law, which is not changed, is that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation may issue bonds up to $2,000,000,000. The amount of bonds guaranteed could, therefore, not exceed $2,000,000,000, and presumably it would be somewhat less than that, because it is quite likely that part of the owners of the bonds now outstanding will not bring them in for exchange.

What it will cost the Government, of course, depends on how the operation comes out. The advocates of the legislation, including myself, are confident that it will not cost the Government anything, that the operation will work itself out and pay for itself, and I have just undertaken to explain that it has a much better chance of doing so with the Government guarantee of the principal of the bonds, because a lower rate of interest can then be obtained.

Mr. FESS. In other words, the Senator thinks the project will be self-supporting, so that the Government, although guaranteeing the bonds, will not be called upon to pay the bonds?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes; it should be self-supporting, and in all probability will be.

Mr. FESS. Otherwise, there would be no possibility of estimating how much money would be needed by the Government to take care of any subsequent defaults.

Mr. BULKLEY. As I have said, the Government assumes a contingent liability limited to $2,000,000,000, but probably somewhat less than that on account of the failure of certain bondholders to exchange.

Mr. FESS. In making up the estimate of the obligation of the Government in its public debt, the Senator would not include this guarantee as a part of the public debt?

Mr. BULKLEY. I suppose that is a question of form of getting out a Treasury statement. It is not a direct liability; it is a contingent liability. If contingent liabilities are shown on the statement, it should be so listed.

Mr. FESS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BULKLEY. The second purpose of the bill is to provide for cash advances for rehabilitation, modernization, rebuilding, and enlargement of homes financed by the Corporation. The original act provided that cash advances might be made where necessary to pay taxes or for necessary repairs. The experience of the corporation is that in many cases cash advances could be made to the advantage of the borrower, to the advantage of the Corporation, and to the advantage of the country, by providing additional employment, for the purposes of modernization and enlargement of homes. Those advances will make the mortgaged homes a better security for the Corporation, and will provide the means of employment in our cities all over the country.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is this provision confined to homes that are already mortgaged, or could a home owner without a present mortgage negotiate a mortgage for the purpose of getting funds for improvements under this bill?

Mr. BULKLEY. Any loan which the Corporation might make in cash, for necessary repairs or for the payment of taxes, under existing law, may in future be made for the additional purposes of rehabilitation, modernization, enlargement, and rebuilding of homes. Advances for these purposes are subject to exactly the same limitations, as to amounts which may be loaned, as are the loans already authorized for the purpose of paying taxes and for necessary repairs. This bill simply enlarges the scope of cash advances which may be made by the Corporation.

It is clear that if the Home Loan Corporation is not authorized to make these advances for modernization, rebuilding, and enlargement, nobody else can, because if the Corporation has a first mortgage on a home, a second mortgage will be too difficult to place, or too costly, and so the home owner will not have the opportunity to rebuild or modernize his home. If the Corporation adds that much more to its mortgage, and keeps the mortgage still within the total limit provided by existing law, the advance may safely be made, and not only safely but actually to the improvement of the security behind the Corporation's mortgage.

The most important amendment which this bill would make in existing law is that which limits the Corporation's loans to cases where the applicant for the loan was in default on June 13, 1933, which is the date of the approval of the original Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act, with the exception that loans may be made where the borrower shows that a subsequent default was due to unemployment, or to economic conditions, or misfortune beyond the control of the applicant. Another exception is made in favor of cases where the mortgages are owned by institutions which are in liquidation, so that the liquidation of closed banks may be forwarded by the proposed legislation.

The limitation which is proposed in this bill was not considered necessary in the original act because, the bonds not being guaranteed by the Government as to principal, it was presumed that mortgagees would accept them only where there were cases of real distress. But now, with the principal of the bonds guaranteed by the Treasury, it is presumed that these bonds will be accepted on such a large scale as to swamp the Corporation unless a limitation is inserted confining advances to cases where default had actually occurred before the enactment of the Home Owners' Loan Act.

It is believed that even with this limitation there will still be eligible $5,000,000,000 of home loans, and, since the total limit of the corporation's activity is only two billions, it does not seem safe to permit loans except in cases where default had occurred prior to June 13, 1933.

Another amendment of the existing law is proposed by eliminating the so-called "compulsory moratorium." The original act provided that no payment of any installment of principal shall be required by the corporation during the period of 3 years from the enactment of the law. Experience shows that many mortgagors are perfectly well able to make their payments of principal installments, and there is no reason for a compulsory moratorium. The discretion to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is left very broad to give extensions of time in cases of real need.

Another important amendment is with respect to the recovery of homes lost by foreclosure or by surrender before the enactment of the law. The existing law provides that a home so lost within 2 years before the exchange of papers with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation may be recovered by a loan from the corporation. The pending bill extends the period to 3 years, and dates it back not from the final exchange of papers but from the filing of the application for the loan with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. This latter change is important because there is no reason why the borrower should be handicapped and penalized because of a delay in action by the Corporation on his application.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Are the bonds eligible only through Federal Reserve member banks limited to 15-day loans?

Mr. BULKLEY. That is a technical provision of the bill, making the bonds eligible as collateral with the Federal Reserve banks for the so-called 15-day loans. It puts them on the same basis with United States bonds in this respect.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. But there is a limit to 15 days?

Mr. BULKLEY. That is part of the Federal Reserve Act; it is not part of the proposed legislation. We are simply conforming to the Federal Reserve Act in giving these bonds a technical privilege, which they ought to have when they are guaranteed by the Treasury.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. But that provision is incorporated in the pending bill?

Mr. BULKLEY. It is incorporated by reference. The bill merely refers to an existing provision in the Federal Reserve Act.

Another provision of the bill is that the Secretary of the Treasury may buy full-paid income shares of common stock of the Federal savings and loan associations which were provided for by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act. The original act provided only for the purchase of preferred stock, and we would, by this bill, make it possible for the Treasury to buy common stock of these institutions, and make it possible for the Treasury to buy up to three quarters of the total amount of stock, instead of one half, as provided in the original act. This provision is believed to be necessary for the proper development and promotion of the Federal savings and loan associations.

The other provisions of the bill are of a more or less technical character, and have been adequately covered in the report made by the committee. Unless some Senator cares to ask further questions, I shall not take the time of the Senate to go into any further detail.

As I understand it, Mr. President, the question is now on the amendment of the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], which he has perfected since we last met, on Thursday. I have indicated that I have no objection to the amendment. I ask for a vote on it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, when the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska was under consideration on Thursday, the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] suggested its amplification to the extent of throwing the protection of the Civil Service around the employee structure. The Senator from Rhode Island is necessarily absent this morning. He has sent to me the amendment which developed the thought he submitted upon Thursday, and in behalf of the Senator from Rhode Island, I want to offer his amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. I send it to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment to the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In line 3 of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] it is proposed to strike out all after the word "employees" and the comma and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

All appointments, selections, and promotions, shall be made from the Civil Service: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to the appointment of attorneys, who shall be selected solely upon the basis of merit and efficiency.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the amendment submitted by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] speaks for itself. I merely add this word. The obvious purpose sought to be encouraged by the Senator from Nebraska is the complete elimination of politics in the administration of this admirable measure. The need for the elimination of politics has been amply submitted by the Senator from Nebraska himself.

In the first instance, since this proposed legislation involves the utterly sacred responsibility of dealing with the maintenance of home ownership, certainly it should be lifted completely out of the field of politics. In the second place, since the ultimate responsibility of the Government in respect to loss under the proposed bond issue depends entirely upon the propriety and the wisdom of appraisals and administration under the law, there is added reason why the legislation should be lifted completely out of the field of politics.

Everything that was urged by the Senator from Nebraska in behalf of his amendment, seeking to set up an abstract rule of efficiency, it seems to me, can be said with double emphasis in behalf of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Rhode Island in favor of reducing that generality to the specific protection of the Civil Service system.

I submit the amendment on behalf of the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think everybody who has paid any attention to my record since I have been in the Senate will agree with me when I say that I have always been a sincere friend of the Civil Service law, and have always tried to see that it was enforced in good faith.

During my argument on last Thursday in support of the amendment offered, when the Senator from Rhode Island suggested that it would be better to provide that appointees should be taken from the Civil Service, I said I had my doubts about that working to good effect in connection with this proposed law, which would apply to the whole country, and I suggested that it would probably in a good many instances delay the operation of the law. I said at that time, however, that if those who favored that change would get the word of Mr. Fahey, who is the head of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation—whom I have never seen and with whom I am not acquainted but whose ability and conscientiousness in making a success of this great Corporation I think everybody concedes—and if he should say that he preferred the language of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island to the language I had already incorporated in my amendment, I would agree to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, as far as I was concerned, and support it.

I have not taken up the matter with Mr. Fahey. The chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who has charge of this bill, has, I understand, taken the matter up with Mr. Fahey. I was told by my secretary this morning that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation had communicated with my office. In both instances the word I get is that the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Michigan would be entirely unsatisfactory and, Mr. Fahey thinks, unworkable as applied to the particular legislation under consideration. I had feared, Mr. President, that that would be true.

I will now ask the Senator from Ohio whether he can give us any information or throw any light upon the question, based upon his conversation with Mr. Fahey.

Mr. BULKLEY. I am very glad to confirm exactly what the Senator from Nebraska has said concerning Mr. Fahey's attitude. Not only has Mr. Fahey been consulted but other members of the Board have been consulted, and I have here a memorandum over the signature of Mr. Russell, counsel for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, written with the approval of the Corporation, which I shall be glad to read now, if the Senator from Nebraska wishes me to do so.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. BULKLEY. The letter is as follows:

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION,
Washington, March 19, 1934.

IN RE CIVIL SERVICE

HON. ROBERT J. BULKLEY,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: The placing of the employees of Home Owners' Loan Corporation under the provisions of the civil-service laws and regulations appears to be impracticable for the following reasons:

(1) A large number of employees have been selected and put to work in an emergency in a specialized task, and it is necessary, both in order to get the task done in a reasonable time and to protect the Corporation against financial loss, that large numbers of these employees be promptly changed. If the employees were placed under civil service, the time required to prefer charges, to conduct trials, and to accomplish these changes would hopelessly delay the program.

(2) The personnel of the Corporation has to be very substantially increased, both to replace incompetent employees and to complete the organization in many States. Many of these employees must be very carefully selected for their practical ability, experience, and training, such as appraisers, title attorneys, and others. It would not only delay us very greatly to provide civil-service regulations for such employment and to conduct examinations and to select the employees in this manner but it also appears to be impracticable to select such employees on a civil-service basis.

(3) Employees of the Corporation, both in Washington and in the field, engaged in an emergency task are working as many hours as may be necessary to try to accomplish their task. Civil service would tend to restrict operations to civil-service hours and would practically destroy the present esprit de corps.

(4) It is well known that civil-service laws and regulations involve a substantial amount of red tape, involving delays all the way through. It seems inconceivable that the task of Home Owners' Loan Corporation could be organized and performed in any reasonable length of time under such restrictions. It should be understood that the members of the board, the executives, and employees of the Corporation do not now understand the civil service and would have the greatest difficulty in conforming to the rules and regulations of the civil service.

(5) Home Owners' Loan Corporation program is worth a great deal more to the country if performed very promptly than it would be if extended over a long period. The very essence of the relief depends upon prompt action. The Corporation is about to get under way so as largely to perform its emergency task during 1934. If it were placed under civil service at this time, its program would undoubtedly be substantially delayed.

When the emergency task is performed of acquiring the distressed mortgages an entirely different situation may exist, and it may be appropriate for the Congress to consider this question at a later date and provide for the permanent employees of the Corporation to be under the civil service for the performance of the long-term task of servicing the mortgages held by the Corporation.

Very truly yours,

HORACE RUSSELL, General Counsel.

In view of the information contained in the letter, I sincerely hope that the substitute amendment will not be pressed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in addition to what has been said, I desire to say what I had in mind to say, but which I did not mention the other day, that a great many of the employees of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in different localities will be employed in positions of a very temporary nature. I should think their employment in some instances in carrying out the program would last but a short time. Appraisers, for instance, have been mentioned. I think if we give the Civil Service Commission time enough, they can get for us a set of appraisers who would answer the requirements of the bill, but they would be handicapped in their work.

The principal thing, which I did not desire to discuss previously and which I do not want to discuss now more than merely to refer to it, is that there are some employees now in the service, and if they were put under civil service and had to be removed under civil-service rules it would take considerable time and cause a great deal of delay. There will undoubtedly be a good many employees who will be replaced, or will be put to work in positions other than those in which they are now working. Since expedition is one of the necessities of the case I should prefer, under the circumstances, the language in my amendment which really seeks to accomplish the same thing.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I know the Senator's complete zeal to lift this whole operation out of politics. He has made that perfectly clear. May I ask the Senator whether he thinks his amendment actually will contribute specifically to that net result?

Mr. NORRIS. I do. I will say to the Senator that I am willing to concede that where the head of a department or the head of a bureau, or, as in this case, a corporation, wants to put politics into it, he probably will be able to do so even though we adopt the amendment putting it under civil service.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. That would be true in large measure even though the organization were under the civil service, if the head of the organization were not in sympathy with it.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. We have in this case an organization headed by Mr. Fahey, who, I think everybody concedes, is in dead earnest and in sympathy with the central idea to relieve the home owners' situation, to make this great Corporation a success, to accomplish that which it is the purpose of the bill to accomplish, and which can be done if the bill is properly carried into effect. The measure, if enacted, should prove to be one of the most useful and successful of any of the laws we have enacted for a great many years, because it comes directly to the home. If the head of the Corporation is wrong and does not want to carry out the full intent and spirit of the law, and cares more for making a lot of jobs for those who want to get jobs, and if he is only a politician, he is going to make a failure, I think, with this amendment or with any other amendment embodied in the law. Believing as I do, however, that he is just as earnest as one can be, and that it is one of the sincere wishes of the President of the United States that the Corporation be conducted on business lines, and that no politics enter into it, with a view to doing the greatest amount of good to the home owners for the least amount of money, I think the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, while offered in the best of faith, ought to be defeated and the original amendment ought to be agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield further?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, I am acting solely in behalf of the Senator from Rhode Island in offering this amendment. It is my assumption that when he drew it and sent it up to me to present in his name he thought he was in agreement with the Senator from Nebraska respecting it.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator from Michigan that when this question was debated in the Senate the other day, and when I made my offer to anyone who wanted to consult with Mr. Fahey and see what he thought about it, the Senate branched off onto a discussion of some other subject, and in effect we laid this bill aside for the day. I had a conversation with the Senator from Rhode Island, and I suggested that he change the amendment to the exact form in which the Senator from Michigan has today offered it. That change was not very material, but a change, nevertheless, was made willingly by him at my suggestion, and I told him I would agree to it.

When we came back into the Senate, while other Senators were discussing the subject of the air mail, I went to the Senator from Ohio and asked him whether any consultation had been had with Mr. Fahey in regard to the proposition I had made. He told me he had had a conversation with him, and that Mr. Fahey had agreed with me when I said that I did not believe the civil-service amendment would work as well as the other amendment would in this case, and that Mr. Fahey and the board were in favor of the amendment I had offered, but opposed to its modification in line with the amendment suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island.

When I learned those facts, I immediately went back to the Senator from Rhode Island—it all happened within 10 minutes—and told him of the information I had received, and I said that under those circumstances I thought it would be wrong for me to agree to his amendment. I gave him that information, and that was the end of it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In view of the situation as it develops on the floor this morning, I feel quite certain that were the Senator from Rhode Island here he would not press the amendment. Therefore, Mr. President, I will take the liberty of withdrawing it.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is it the intention of the Senator from Nebraska that the amendment shall operate retroactively?

Mr. NORRIS. I think it would have that effect.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the amendment were adopted, and the Senator were the manager of a home-loan office, would he feel under obligation to scrutinize with care, with respect to partisan affiliation, the members of his staff?

Mr. NORRIS. I would not say that I would scrutinize them with reference to their party affiliations, but if I found in the organization a man who was simply a politician and not doing his duty, I would not hesitate to discharge him; and I think that is the way this provision will operate if it shall be adopted.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In other words, the Senator would be guided by the services performed?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; exactly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska about a situation of the kind I am about to mention. I join him wholeheartedly in the desire to insure that men, and women likewise, who are in responsible positions in connection with this activity shall first of all be competent. I do not subscribe to the theory that seems to be entertained by some, that in order to insure nonpartisan operations of any activity, we have got to go to the opposite party in order to get a man to manage it. I do not think the Senator wants that kind of condition to prevail.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not want to convey that idea at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know the Senator does not believe in that theory; but I happen to have had this experience: When some of these new activities were coming forth during the last year, in connection with the employment of men I was asked by the head of a bureau to furnish a list of engineers in my State who were qualified to do engineering work. I went to the expense of fifty or sixty dollars in calling up over the long-distance telephone from Washington back to Kentucky to secure a list of such men, because I did not know them; I had no intimate association with engineers of the type desired. I submitted the list which was called for with the expectation that the names on the list would be considered for some engineering places. I did not inquire as to the politics of these men; I simply asked whether they were good engineers, what their experience was, and whether they were qualified to do engineering work. One of these engineers later came into my office and asked for a letter of recommendation to the appointing power. He presented that letter of recommendation to the head of the office in charge of such appointments. As soon as that officer read the letter, among others recommending him for appointment, he announced to this young engineer that his appointment would be impossible because he had secured a political endorsement, to wit, mine.

If the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is to be administered in any such silly, asinine fashion as that, so as to bar a man from appointment if he approaches the appointing power with a recommendation from a man who happens to hold a political office, it certainly ought not to be adopted. I do not believe the Senator from Nebraska would approve any such interpretation or administration; and yet it has been done by men who are so strait-laced or lean so far backward that they would not appoint a man, regardless of his qualifications, if he had a recommendation from someone who, holding office, might be designated with a contemptuous slur as a politician or as a political endorser. If this amendment is capable of any such interpretation as that, I think it should not be adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator, depending upon the man who is the appointing power, I suppose he could put such a construction on it, and I do not know any remedy for it. I look upon the particular case the Senator cites with a great deal of sympathy. I know, from my observation and from talking with men in the Government service and outside of it, that a great many jobs are put upon the appointing power with not always a political consideration in view but some other consideration, and, perhaps, a man who was listening to four or five thousand applicants who came before him probably would naturally become disgusted. A great many people are trying to use the name of somebody else in order to better their own interests.

I do not agree if I were administering such a law as I propose that I would consider that a recommendation from a Senator would necessarily vitiate the application; in fact, if the applicant, for instance, had given the name of a Senator, I would write to him and ascertain what he knew about the applicant, and I would give the endorsement such weight as I thought it ought to have. If he disclosed in his answer that he was personally acquainted with the applicant, knew his qualifications, had come in contact with him, knew his family, or something of that kind, I would probably give his recommendation a great deal of weight. Perhaps if he said, "I do not know this man, but he is recommended to me by some other good men", I would give it less weight.

Mr. BARKLEY. And yet, under this amendment, the appointing power would be subject to the criticism if he should make an appointment that he had made it through political preference.

Let us take this kind of a case: Let us assume that two men are applicants for a given position, both of them equally qualified; one of them is a Democrat and the other is a Republican; the appointing officer happens to be a Democrat. The two applicants come before him, each equally qualified. He happens to know that one is a Democrat and the other a Republican. If he appoints the Democrat he is subject to the charge that he appointed him because he was a Democrat, while, if he appoints the Republican he is subject to the charge that he appointed him because he was a Republican and because he was afraid if he appointed a Democrat somebody would accuse him of appointing a Democrat because of his politics. That may be an extreme illustration, but it is entirely possible that such a situation might arise; so that, indirectly, the appointing power would be doing exactly what the Senator is trying to get away from, either appointing a man because of his politics or denying him an appointment because of his politics.

Mr. NORRIS. No; Mr. President, if the Senator will yield there, in the first place, his illustration is very remote. I can hardly conceive of such a case arising, but suppose it should—

Mr. BARKLEY. As a partisan, I might say I could conceive of such a case, but I am not so partisan as not to concede that 2 men, 1 a Democrat and 1 a Republican might not be equally qualified.

Mr. NORRIS. In the case suggested the Senator puts the appointing officer in a situation where his action, no matter which way he goes, is probably going to be criticized, and probably by some honest men. I know no escape from it. I know there are judges on the bench who when attorneys whose recommendations perhaps secured their appointment to the Federal bench appear before them, while wanting to be fair, hardly give those attorneys justice; on the other hand, there are others who may act the other way and give them anything they want. The judge is going to be criticized in either case; and so the appointing officer is put in a difficult position, and it is probably beyond the power of the human race entirely to avoid going wrong to a degree on that question. I do not know of any law that will change that situation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Frankly, I do not believe there has been any abuse—

Mr. NORRIS. In this case?

Mr. BARKLEY. So far as my personal knowledge goes in the appointing of responsible officials of this institution.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me tell the Senator that, while I do not have personal knowledge, I am told by Senators who are now in this room, who are listening to what I am saying, that there have been built up under this law in their States political machines which are rotten to the core, and which eventually will bring disgrace and shame upon this administration if the conditions shall not be rectified.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator mean with reference to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, I do; I mean that and nothing else. I am also informed by men who are connected with the organization that here and there are sections where this corporation today is entirely inefficient. I am told by some men, who are as anxious as anybody can be to make this great service a success, men who are praying for this very amendment, that there are existing instances of such a character that unless conditions shall be rectified in some way, there eventually will be disclosures made in different localities that will throw discredit upon the whole law, and even upon the party of which the Senator is a member.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is at present no lack of authority or law to remedy that situation.

Mr. NORRIS. Yet I have said that very thing. I have told some of these officers that if such things happened and I was in control I would fire such a man by wire, and they have said, "Well, you do not know how much influence is behind this man; you do not know what political power is behind him. We do not want to have trouble with a Senator or with a Governor or with the chairman of a committee of a party"—I do not mean of national committee, but the chairman of a State committee; I do not want anybody to misconstrue what I am saying; I am not thinking of any particular case—"here is somebody who has all those influences behind him and my own job is not safe if I should fire him." I do not see any way out of it. I have had those people tell me, "I will not stay with an institution that is going to be bound down by politics, by some politician or someone who is called a politician, a Senator, or a Governor, or a member of the Cabinet." They may be just as careful as is the Senator from Kentucky, just as anxious to avoid politics creeping in, and be extremely careful about their recommendations, but some other man will not be careful at all and we will get somebody in office who knows that he has behind him a United States Senator or a Governor or the chairman of his State committee and the party to which he belongs, and he is not afraid to do almost anything. Officials with whom I have talked believe, and I, too, believe that if such a provision as this were on the statute books that situation would be clarified; but still difficulties will arise. I recognize that even with such a law as is proposed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course the Senator recognizes the fact that if, in the selection of anyone for an important office, we must go to those who have no political convictions, who have never taken sides in any political contest, we will have a lot of nonentities, because the man in these days who holds no political convictions on the great questions that confront the people of this country and the world, is hardly competent for any kind of service.

Mr. NORRIS. There is some truth in that, although the great majority of the people of the United States are not politicians and they do not care much about politicians. They are opposed to putting politics into the operation of this kind of a business institution. The Senator would find that probably 99 percent of the people should like to have politics kept out of it. In the town where I live, a comparatively small town, I could pick out Democrats and Republicans all along the street who would not countenance for a moment the putting of politics into an institution of this kind and yet who probably are in their way strong politicians, have always voted the straight party ticket. They realize that in a matter of this kind politics must not be permitted to enter, that here is a matter which goes to our homes, and we want it kept as pure as it can be kept. At the same time I could pick out, without making any inquiries, men who would oppose anybody not of the same political party, men of the type who would oppose the preacher in their own church if he were not of the same political party, men who would not go to prayer meeting if the class leader belonged to the other party. They are just that bitter partisan politicians.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not happen to know any such men. It may be there are such men, but I believe the Senator's illustration is about as extreme as mine was.

Mr. President, I do not care to delay a vote on the pending amendment, but it seems to me the efforts to minimize political convictions or even political activities are in a way misdirected. I think it is the duty of every citizen to take some part in politics, not necessarily to run for office, not necessarily to be a candidate. It is not in that sense that I use the word "politics." There is no governmental activity I know anything about that is not political in its nature. The very fact that it is a governmental activity makes it political. Everything that is governmental has to do with politics.

I am not going to oppose the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the extent that I am going to occupy any time arguing against it; but I do think, in view of the situation, that it will create about as many difficulties as it will solve. If there is in his State or in any other State a political organization or group of officials who are trying to use the distress of home owners in order to build up a political machine, either for their personal aggrandizement or for the benefit of their political party, I would denounce any such activities in unmeasured terms. At the same time I think it ought to be said in frankness that that really ought to apply to both political parties and to men in all political parties and all political factions. If there is any activity in any State brought about by this emergency where, in order to avoid the appearance of partisan politics, men of the opposite political party have been put in charge of activities, the same rule ought to apply to them. They ought not to be allowed to build up a political machine in order that they may use it to bring about the defeat of the very administration and the very policies under which they are working. I think the Senator from Nebraska will agree with that observation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I should not want this question to come to a vote without having made a statement as to my own individual position on the matter. I remember when Cleveland adopted what I believe to have been the first civil-service policy as to postmasters. I do not remember how far that extended, but I do remember that in the campaign that followed, when General Harrison opposed our then President Cleveland, of hearing the Republicans ridicule the idea of civil-service reform and, in order that the ridicule might be understood as such, it was referred to as "snivel service reform."

The reform idea, so far as civil service is concerned, is democratic and practical in a way and impractical in another way. If there was a method of enforcement I think every business man and every citizen of the United States who loves his country would favor it, but it will not be enforced as is evidenced by an incident that occurred last fall during the campaign. We then had civil-service reform applicable as to postmasters. We found the Republican Postmaster General speaking in Omaha declaring, in substance, to a convention of postmasters that they were expected to get busy and do their duty politically.

As an evidence that I have been interested at all times in any legitimate effort to build up and aid the administration in matters relating to the home-loan bank, the farm-land bank, and all other governmental banking agencies, I want to read into the RECORD a letter which I have just received from Governor Myers, of the Farm Credit Administration, in regard to a bill which I introduced here sometime ago but which I have not pressed because of the fact that the matter is under discussion in the Department in an effort to determine what should be done. The letter reads as follows:

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D.C., March 15, 1934.

Hon. WILLIAM H. THOMPSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring further to your recent conference with Deputy Governor Morgan, Land Bank Commissioner Goss, and the writer, you will be interested to know that the Farm Credit Administration is recommending experimental work in a number of land banks along the lines you have suggested in your bill for contact men. It is the thought of the Farm Credit Administration that the general public has a right to look to us to see that proper service is rendered in our various units. Inasmuch as the Farm Credit Administration is an aggregate of four different lending agencies, each designed to furnish a type of credit needed by agriculture, it is our thought that these contact men should represent the Farm Credit Administration rather than any one of the divisions. Our experience has demonstrated that some of the difficulties farmers are now facing are due to the fact that they have not had the type of credit best fitted to their needs, and it is our thought that these contact men should be consultants as well as trouble shooters.

We are therefore recommending the development of a department designed to operate about as I have outlined, and we believe that we have sufficient authority under existing law to build up an adequate service, modifying it from time to time as conditions warrant.

Sincerely yours,

W. I. MYERS, Governor.

It is my hope that this administration may succeed, not only along the line of the home-loan bank but along all lines. I think everything depends upon its general success. It is my wish to be helpful.

As to the question before us, as my colleague knows, I had nothing to do with the appointment of the officers for Nebraska who were to administer the home-loan bank in its first set-up. Those officers were appointed without even consulting me. The list was made here in the city and sent home for execution, so I was told. However, they make an efficient corps of workers, and I want to do everything I can to aid them. So far as I am individually concerned, if I felt that my colleague's amendment would accomplish that which he hopes and which we all hope it may accomplish, I should have no hesitancy in voting for it; and it is my intention, whether I hesitate or not, to give it a trial, and it shall have my vote.

When the Senator started first on the home-loan bank with this amendment and not on some other activity of the Government, and the head of the home-loan bank was located in Grand Island, my home, and that seemed to be the special thought of the Senator, I hardly knew how to take it. I do want to acquit him of meaning it to be personal or anything of that kind. And, as I believe in the merit system, I intend to join him in the support of his amendment. There is no man of my acquaintance for whom I have a higher regard than I have for my colleague the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris]. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Chair makes that announcement—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not announced that the amendment is rejected. The Chair has announced that the noes seem to have it, but he will suspend the final announcement.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MCGILL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas suggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	Keyes	Schall
Austin	Dickinson	King	Sheppard
Bachman	Dill	La Follette	Shipstead
Bankhead	Duffy	Logan	Smith
Barbour	Erickson	Lonerger	Steinwer
Barkley	Fess	McGill	Stephens
Black	Fletcher	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Frazier	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Brown	George	Metcalf	Thompson
Bulkley	Gibson	Neely	Townsend
Bulow	Goldsborough	Norris	Trammell
Byrd	Gore	Nye	Tydings
Byrnes	Hale	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg
Capper	Harrison	Overton	Van Nuys
Caraway	Hastings	Patterson	Walcott
Clark	Hatch	Pope	Wheeler
Connally	Hatfield	Reed	White
Coolidge	Hayden	Robinson, Ark.
Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ind.
Cutting	Kean	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on the viva-voce vote, as I heard it, there were only two Senators voting for my amendment. I do not intend to criticize any Senator for his stand on this or any other question; but after—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will please suspend for a moment. The vote was being taken, and the Chair had announced that the noes seemed to have it. Would not parliamentary procedure require—

Mr. NORRIS. Well, Mr. President, I had tried to get the Chair's attention. The Chair said that the noes seemed to have it, and the Chair said that that announcement would be withdrawn. On this question that we have been debating for portions of 2 days I think I am entitled to have a roll-call vote. If the amendment shall be voted down on a roll call, I shall have no complaint whatever; but I ask for the yeas and nays on this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may the question we are to vote upon be stated by the clerk?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to make clear his attitude. The Chair did not state the final result of the vote. The Chair said that the noes seemed to have it. The Chair did not announce that the amendment had been rejected, but suspended after the announcement that the noes seemed to have it, in order to give the Senator from Nebraska an opportunity to ask for a roll call if he desired one.

The Senator from South Carolina requests that the amendment be stated. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

(M) In the appointment of agents and the selection of employees for said corporation, and in the promotion of agents or employees, no partisan political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all agents and employees shall be appointed, employed, or promoted solely upon the basis of merit and efficiency. Any member of the Board who is found guilty of a violation of this provision by the President of the United States shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, and any agent or employee of the corporation who is found guilty of a violation of this section by the Board shall be removed from office by said Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska

[Mr. NORRIS], just read. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BULKLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], which I transfer to the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], and vote "yea." I am advised that if present the Senator from Wyoming would vote "yea", and the Senator from North Carolina would vote "nay."

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PATTERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who is necessarily absent from the Senate. I am not informed as to how that Senator would vote, and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] has a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]. I am advised that the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea" if present, and the Senator from Illinois would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. WALCOTT. I have a general pair with the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO]; and as that Senator is not present, I am not permitted to vote. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. NEELY (after having voted in the negative). I wish to change my vote from "nay" to "yea", so that I may move to reconsider the vote.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 33, as follows:

So Mr. NORRIS' amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I give notice of a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia makes a motion and spreads it on the RECORD to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, does the Senator from West Virginia make the motion, or has he simply given notice of intention to make a motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia gave notice of his intention to make the motion.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I desire to wait until a few more Democrats get home from their vacations over Sunday. It seems that on the Republican side they are able to get all their Members in, and I should like to have a few absent Democrats present, because if the bill shall be finally passed as at present worded, the board in West Virginia, based on past experience, will be 100 percent Republican.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill. I do not believe there is any amendment now pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] offers an amendment, which the clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 5, to strike out subsection (1) in lines 10 to 21, inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, on page 5, lines 10 to 21, inclusive, we find that the text of the bill contains a provision which proposes to discontinue loans and advances with respect to a certain character of home mortgages, and we also find that under the provision no loans may be made unless default has taken place prior to June 13, 1933, but there is an exception made with respect to the individual home owner—

That the foregoing limitation shall not apply in any case in which it is specifically shown to the satisfaction of the Corporation that a default after such date—was due to unemployment or to economic conditions or misfortune beyond the control of the applicant, or in any case in which the home mortgage or other obligation or lien is held by an institution which is in liquidation.

It occurs to me that this particular section is intended to curtail and reduce the rights or the privileges of home owners to negotiate loans through the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which at this particular time, I think, would be a very unfortunate departure from the law in its present form.

While many home owners have received relief under the act as it was approved on June 13, 1933, there is a large number of applications in course of investigation and in course of consideration, and there are many home owners in distress, who will be, in all probability, excluded not only from obtaining loans but from even having their loan applications given any consideration under the provisions of the pending bill.

There are, to my mind, also some discriminatory provisions in this section. I cannot understand why restrictions should be placed upon the home owner as to the character of proof which he should present in order to obtain a loan if a default has occurred since June 13, 1933, and, on the other hand, provide that institutions which are in receivership should have the opportunity of disposing of home mortgages without any restriction being applied to them.

As an illustration, when a home owner makes an application direct he is subjected to the conditions set forth in the bill, unless—

It is specifically shown to the satisfaction of the Corporation that a default after such date was due to unemployment or to economic conditions or misfortune beyond the control of the applicant.

That applies to the average citizen making an application for a loan; but if mortgages are held by an institution that is in receivership, there is no restriction placed upon the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in purchasing or acquiring those mortgages. I cannot quite understand why the discrimination and the difference in applying this requirement.

The individual has to comply with that condition to the satisfaction of the corporation, and it provides that in each specific case he has to do that.

If a mortgage is held by some institution which is in the hands of the receiver, the Corporation may purchase all the mortgages it desires without this restriction being placed upon such mortgages. My objection is not so much to that as it is to the fact that the bill would prescribe restrictions and throw around the average individual home owner in making application conditions which will make it much more difficult for him to obtain a loan, if they will not result in precluding him entirely.

If we have a hostile or unsympathetic set-up in some of our State managements of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, or if the central board should so determine, they could make it almost impossible for an individual to obtain a loan under the restriction as written into the bill.

My amendment proposes to strike out subsection (1) and leave the law as it is at present. There is no change of condition whatever which makes it necessary to strike out the original provision and insert the one that appears in the bill.

The original law up to July 13, 1933, provided for loans which might be made through the issuance of bonds. It provided to an extent for loans of cash to home owners, but did not place the character of restriction upon those loans which we find proposed in the pending bill.

I take the position that the same conditions exist now as existed then. There are thousands, if not millions, of home owners who are still in distress, who have not obtained a loan. There are thousands of them who are going to have their homes swept from under their feet and who are going to be driven into the street by foreclosure if they do not obtain loans through some source. There is just as much reason why the Government should continue this broad, expansive, and beneficent policy now as there was when the act was approved in June 1933. I do not think it is dealing quite fairly with those who have not received loans up to the present time to say, "Because you did not get in during the previous period when we were dealing more generously, we will preclude you now unless you can make certain proof and establish certain facts."

It just occurs to me that the provision is unnecessary and that it will help to deprive home owners in this country of the treatment which I felt they should receive when we passed the original law, and which I contend they should receive at the present time. That is my reason, Mr. President, for offering the amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7478) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include cattle as a basic agricultural commodity, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. JONES, Mr. FULMER, Mr. DOXEY, Mr. HOPE, and Mr. KINZER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

CARRIAGE OF AIR MAIL BY THE ARMY

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7966) to authorize the Postmaster General to accept and to use landing fields, men, and material of the War Department for carrying the mails by air, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, and Mr. SCHALL conferees on the part of the Senate.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8134) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. RUSSELL. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference requested by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. SMITH, Mr. KEYES, and Mr. NYE conferees on the part of the Senate.

MONETARY USE OF SILVER

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, my attention has been called to a statement which has been issued, apparently from authoritative sources, which reads:

Although the administration has turned a deaf ear to congressional pleas for further action to aid silver, the decision to undertake the survey in China indicated that the Treasury and White House still are keenly interested in the question.

It was considered significant also that announcement of Rogers' trip—

My understanding is that the administration or the Treasury Department is sending James Harvey Rogers to China for the purpose of studying the silver question—

It was considered significant also that announcement of Rogers' trip came as the House was ready to vote on silver bills in defiance of the administration.

China and India are the world's leading silver-money countries. The Shanghai silver market probably is the most important in the world in its effect on this country.

Some Shanghai bankers recently protested to President Roosevelt that uncertainty of the American silver policy was having an adverse effect there. Some Shanghai interests have threatened to seek an embargo on Chinese silver if this country acts further to increase the price.

The statement goes on to say that of the things Mr. Rogers is going to find out—

The first is whether increased prices would mean greater exports from the United States to China. The other seems to be that if prices of silver are increased China will have to curtail imports.

Rogers will seek to find out which is which. He will see the small business man, farmers as well as people in the banking business.

His mission, Morgenthau said, will be to get information only, and he will not act as an official negotiator. His trip will be purely an economic survey.

China already has ratified the London silver agreement, which is designed to bolster the world price of silver through working off of surpluses. Canada and Mexico are the two countries which, so far, have failed to ratify the agreement.

The statement goes on to say:

United States trade with China has shrunk in recent years in about the same proportion as that with other countries.

Last year's Chinese-American trade was valued at $56,170,600, compared with $166,233,000 in 1929 and an average of $150,448,000 for 1922-26.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the fact that now, when it appears that the House of Representatives is about to vote measures affecting silver, the Senate having already come within 2 votes of passing silver legislation, the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purpose, apparently, of delaying further action by the Congress of the United States with reference to the silver question, sends to China an economist from Yale University to ascertain, as he says, what the effect will be upon our commerce in the Orient. From whom is he to obtain the information? From Chinese merchants, from Chinese farmers, from Chinese bankers. Bear in mind, if you will, Mr. President, that 90 percent of the 500,000,000 Chinese are illiterate, and that includes many of the merchants as well as the Chinese coolies and so-called "farmers." So, naturally, the only people whom Professor Rogers will come in contact with or be able to get any information from will be the Chinese manufacturers and the Chinese bankers; and when I say "Chinese manufacturers" I do not mean Chinese who are manufacturing, but I mean

British manufacturers and Japanese manufacturers who are living in Shanghai, in Tientsin, Hong Kong, and Peiping, who are actually enslaving some of the Chinese and who are engaged in manufacturing in China for the purpose of making money out of the Chinese people; and yet our representatives are going over there to consult them as to what we should do about the money policy of the United States of America.

It seems to me that is the height of asininity to do a thing of that kind, particularly in view of the fact that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], himself one of the best informed men on silver, went over to China as a member of a commission appointed by the Senate a few years ago for the purpose of studying this question. Other Members of the Senate have also visited China and have likewise studied this question; but now the Treasury is going to send Professor Rogers, of Yale University, who starts out, in my judgment, with a prejudice against doing anything for silver, ostensibly to consult Chinese coolies, Chinese merchants, and Chinese manufacturers, but in reality, as I have suggested, to consult Japanese and British manufacturers as to what our monetary policy should be.

Let me call attention, if I may, to an article which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post by Sir Henry Detering. Sir Henry Detering is the president of the British-Dutch Shell, and I wish to call attention to the article because he probably knows more about oriental trade and oriental business than almost any other man in the world today, because of the vast interests which his company has in the Orient. He said:

To reestablish gold as the sole standard strikes me as fundamentally dishonest, since we all know that there is not enough gold to go around and the role it is supposed to fill as a yardstick, or measuring rod, becomes correspondingly ineffective. A shopman who has not enough yardsticks with which to measure his goods must fall back on some other system of measurement; he may even have to measure the goods out with his arm. But why reduce world commerce to this ridiculous extremity when there is an abundance of silver at hand? For hundreds of years silver served well as a standard in many countries.

If silver as well as gold were made standard, what would be the immediate effect? The silver-using peoples of the earth still comprise three fifths of the world's population and millions upon millions of the world's wealth would be converted into a huge purchasing power which would come as healing balm at a time when world production and world credit alike have been too long reduced. Instead, our so-called "economists" have thought it wiser to destroy the value of silver by not using it and thus diminishing demand for it. When all is said and done, the world's real wealth is not gold but labor in its actual results, either manual or mental. Wealth cannot be created by act of Parliament, only by actual production. Only let this wealth be plentiful in—real—currency and the benefits of the resultant distribution will soon be felt.

This article appeared in the Saturday Evening Post of October 14, I think it was, of last year.

Now I wish to call attention, if I may, to the statement from the Treasury Department to the effect that last year Chinese-American trade was valued at $56,170,600, whereas in 1929 it was valued at $166,233,000, and the average for the period 1922 to 1926 was $150,448,000.

The Treasury Department goes on to state that our trade with the Orient had dropped in proportion and approximately the same as it dropped with Europe. Our trade with Europe dropped, to a large extent, because of the fact that European countries depreciated their currencies in terms of the American dollar and we were constantly losing our trade with them, as they could not buy from us. President Roosevelt, recognizing that fact, went off the gold standard, depreciated our dollar in terms of the then value of the pound sterling and the French franc and other European currencies.

Also let me call attention to the fact that low-priced silver means depreciated currencies in the Orient; low-priced silver means the same to the Orient as depreciated paper currencies mean in Europe, or as a depreciated pound sterling means in London, or a depreciated franc in France, or a depreciated mark in German money. While the President has sought to overcome the advantages that Great Britain and other countries had in the world markets with reference to our money, and has endeavored to put us in a position where we could compete with Great Britain and the other countries of Europe by depreciating our currency and reducing the gold content of the dollar, nothing has been done by the administration looking toward a recovery of our trade in the Orient.

The article states that some of the Chinese bankers or some of the Chinese merchants have cabled the Government saying they are going to put on an embargo if we raise the price of silver. That, of course, completely refutes the idea which has been advanced from time to time that if we raise the price of silver in this country we would be flooded with silver. I have repeatedly said that we would not be flooded with silver, because of the fact that those countries could not divest themselves of the only money they have and still carry on trade and commerce in their own countries.

If Mr. Rogers consults with the manufacturers or bankers in Shanghai, of course, they are going to say to him, "You are going to ruin Shanghai and other port cities of China if you raise the price of silver", because of the fact that Japanese and British manufacturers have been making huge profits, in some instances as high as 100 percent, and in many instances have paid 20- or 30-percent dividends during the last few years in the cotton-textile business, while our plants have been shut down. They have been doing that because, by reason of the low price of silver and by reason of their coolie and slave labor, they could undersell American manufacturers in the United States.

Yet we are going to send to China and consult those manufacturers and those bankers, the British and Japanese manufacturers, who are exploiting the Chinese people by buying and selling them in slavery, to determine what our money policy shall be in the United States with reference to silver.

I, for one, am heartily disappointed that the Secretary of the Treasury should adopt such an unwise policy and what seems to me almost a silly thing under the circumstances; because if he wanted any facts upon the situation, he could consult the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], who has been to the Orient and made a complete study of the situation. I, too, have visited the Orient and visited all of those places, and believe I have learned something about the situation.

But now, when the Congress is about to enact some legislation, the Treasury Department comes out and says, "We want to send somebody over there to consult with the Chinese coolies to determine whether or not it is going to affect them adversely", as if we could learn something by talking with that class of people among the 500,000,000 inhabitants of China, 90 percent of whom can neither read nor write. Yet it is proposed to consult some of the Chinese merchants, when even most of our own merchants know very little whatsoever about the money question.

Of course the information the Treasury Department may obtain will come from the manufacturers who are being benefited at the expense of American manufacturers; it must come from them who are benefiting because of the low price of silver to the detriment of the wheat and cotton farmers of this country. It must come from those people who are benefiting by the low price of silver at the expense of the cotton textile manufacturers, and the manufacturers of this country in general.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think it was on Thursday last that the Secretary of the Treasury gave out an interview in which he said that the investigations of the Treasury Department had revealed that some of the advocates of silver were acting from personal, selfish motives, leaving the clear implication that the Treasury Department had discovered that there is something in the nature of corruption upon the part of some of the advocates of silver.

I think the Secretary of the Treasury owes it to those who are interested in the silver question to state more fully just what he had in mind. His interview leaves an impression which, I presume, is much broader in its effect than the Secretary intended it should be, but clearly there is an implication that some of the advocates of silver were speculating and had an opportunity, in case there should be any favorable legislation, to make large amounts of money. I presume in all probability there are those, as there were some connected with the gold legislation, or with any other legislation which might possibly be considered here, who would have some advantage in case the legislation was enacted. But there is a vast number of people throughout the United States, and that constitutes practically all of those who are interested in silver, who believe in it as humanitarians that it is a wise financial policy.

I had intended to introduce this morning a resolution asking the Secretary of the Treasury for the information which he professes to have, but I trust he will make a statement which will relieve us of the necessity of adopting a formal resolution calling for the information.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. My attention was drawn to the statement attributed to the Secretary last Saturday, and I read in the Chicago Tribune the statement which purported to have come from him. I called his assistant over the telephone and challenged his attention to the statement, and then followed it with a letter enclosing to him the article. I expressed the hope that we would be advised as to just what the situation is and whether the Secretary had made such a statement. I have not as yet had a reply, but I am inclined to think that the statement in the newspaper was broader than was intended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BORAH. Undoubtedly the Secretary of the Treasury has read what appeared in the newspapers. If the statement there attributed to him was broader than he intended, or if it carried implications which he did not intend, then it is clearly fair and just that he should make a statement in that respect.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. When I saw that statement I at once called the Secretary on the telephone and he stated he was going to issue a statement. I am informed that he immediately called in the representatives of the newspapers and said that no Member of Congress, of either House, was in any wise connected with it, and that statement was carried in some of the newspapers.

Mr. BORAH. I understood that to be true, but I am not interested alone in the Members of either House. I want to know more specifically whom he had in mind. I should like to locate those people. They may be first cousins to some who were interested in the gold legislation.

Mr. WHEELER. As I have said, of course, there are probably some mining companies and some people who would make money if the price of silver went up. I feel it was a very unfair and very unjust statement to be given out by the Secretary of the Treasury because of the broad implications which were placed upon some one by him. It was a reflection, it seems to me, upon every Member of Congress and everybody else who has been interested at all in the subject.

Mr. BORAH. Let me say a word upon the general subject which the Senator from Montana has been discussing. In the last 10 or 15 years one method or another has been adopted to postpone any definite action upon the silver question. In fact, it runs further back than that. When there comes a time that it seems entirely probable there will be definite action upon the part of the Congress to effectuate something with reference to silver, there is some program or some plan proposed for the purpose of postponing action. I do not know of an instance in which the Congress has been nearing a decisive vote upon this question when that has not happened. Away back in the nineties the system began, and then under the former President we had the proposal for an international conference, provided the other nations would ask for it. During the campaign statements were made with respect to an international conference. We had a conference. We know the views of these peoples and these nations as well as they can be ascertained. We know the conditions in China. We know the influences there which are against the remonetization of silver for the same reason that certain influences here are against the remonetization of silver.

Of course the manufacturing establishments which have gone into China and built up industries by reason of the advantage which low-priced silver gives them, and by reason of the fact that they have very low-paid labor, not only generally speaking but accentuated because of the low price of silver, will naturally from a selfish viewpoint be opposed to anything in the way of remonetization or stabilization or raising the price of silver.

There is nothing to be gained, there is no information to be had, that is not now available to the Government of the United States. There is no phase of the silver question that has not been discussed. There are no data in regard to it that have not been gathered. There is no kind of information that is not available to the Congress and to the administration. I feel, as the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] has said, that as we now approach what seems to be definite action upon this matter, this program is again thrown out for the purpose of confusing the situation.

Let us have a definite program and definite action upon the part of the law-making body of the United States in regard to silver. Let us act upon our judgment and our information, and record our views in our laws, and not postpone indefinitely and for all time to come the decision in order to secure information which we already have. The silver question has been discussed and considered by economists, leaders, and statesmen for years and decades. That which postpones is not want of information; it is unwillingness to meet the issue.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I associate myself with the Senators from Montana and Idaho in the criticisms which they have leveled against methods employed in the past to prevent legislation favorable to the remonetization of silver, and I regret that the Treasury Department has found it expedient or necessary to send a professor to China to learn something about silver. In my opinion no investigation made by the professor will be of any particular value to Congress, and I do not conceive that his investigations will prove of any particular advantage to the Treasury Department of our Government.

The silver question is not a new one. It has been the subject of exhaustive investigations for hundreds of years. These investigations have been made by experts, financiers, industrial organizations, governments and banks; indeed, by groups, associations, and individuals from every walk of life. This question has been examined and investigated and studied in connection with the financial systems of the world, and gold and silver, as everyone knows, for thousands of years constituted the primary money of the world. They were the foundation upon which rested currencies and credits. Complete data are available showing the production of gold and silver during many centuries and the uses to which these metals have been put, the quantity now in the world, the position which silver occupies in China and in India, and, for that matter, in all countries of the world for monetary purposes or as the basis of credit or as a medium of exchange. We are not ignorant of conditions in China and the important position which silver occupies there in the monetary system of that country. We know the uses to which silver is put not only in the great cities of China but also in the remotest parts of that vast territory. Comprehensive studies have been made by commissions, experts, banks, and industrialists of the monetary situation in China, and the effect upon the trade and commerce of the hundreds of millions of people there residing. In international conferences where monetary and fiscal questions and policies have been discussed, representatives of China have been present, and where information was lacking concerning silver and the uses to which it was put in China and the purposes which it served, the same was supplied by such representatives.

When Germany in 1871 and 1872 determined to demonetize silver, and carried her purpose into execution, and other European nations followed her evil course, and the United States joined in the destructive movement, there were prolonged discussions of the money question in all countries. In the many sessions of Congress since 1873 the silver question has been the subject of prolonged investigation. Senator Jones, of Nevada, a man of learning and ability, delivered in the Senate a number of addresses upon the silver question, and demonstrated beyond all question the importance—indeed, the necessity—of both gold and silver being employed as primary money. During the past 3 years the question of bimetalism has been canvassed not only in Congress but in political, industrial, and commercial conventions in nearly every State of the Union. Many industrial, labor, and farm organizations have devoted a great deal of time to a careful consideration of the money question, including, of course, the remonetization of silver.

Commissions have been appointed by the British Government to study monetary questions and particularly the gold standard and bimetalism, and the monetary systems in China and India. The League of Nations has given attention to the monetary systems of the world and has secured data and published reports dealing with these questions. Recently, pursuant to a resolution adopted by the Senate, the Committee on Foreign Relations, of this body, made a rather exhaustive study of conditions in China, and particularly the position of silver as a money in the economic and, indeed, the political life of that country. Senator PITTMAN, representing the committee, visited China and submitted a report upon his return to the United States, which contains information important to those who are interested in the silver question.

At various sessions of the International Chamber of Commerce, representatives from China and Japan, as well as from other nations, have discussed the silver question in connection with the monetary systems of the world. Two or three years ago, the International Chamber of Commerce convened in this city. Hundreds of representatives from most of the nations of the world participated in this important economic conference. Among them were bankers and business men from China, Japan, and India. The silver question was there discussed and a resolution adopted which, in effect, requested the delegates when they returned to their respective countries, to urge their governments to consider the question of enlarging the monetary base of the world by a larger use of silver. Books and pamphlets and reports by the scores are available, showing the economic, industrial, and political conditions in China. These reports show the use to which silver is put; the part which it plays in the economic and business life of the people; the investments by Japan and other countries in textile and other manufacturing plants in Shanghai and other large cities of China. These voluminous reports contain very much more information than the professor referred to can secure, if he should spend many months in China; and in making this statement, I am not questioning his ability and learning. I might add, by way of parentheses, that at the International Chamber of Commerce conference, representatives from India and China took an active part and urged that silver be restored to its former position in the monetary system of the world.

I do not desire to be critical, but I cannot help but believe that a mistake is being made by the Treasury Department in this plan to send Professor Rogers to China. It is certain that those who believe that before Congress adjourns legislation should be enacted looking to the rehabilitation of silver, will regard this plan as an attempt to delay legislation. A few moments ago, when it was learned that Professor Rogers was being sent by the Treasury Department to China to study the silver question, it was remarked to me that the movement was inept if not stupid, and that by many persons would be regarded as an effort to draw a "red herring" across the trail for the purpose of diverting attention from the consideration of pending legislation looking to the rehabilitation of silver.

With the regard which I have for the officials of the Treasury Department, I cannot believe that they would knowingly adopt any policy that would defeat silver legislation. My information is that they have not fully appraised the situation or realized the implications that will arise from the announcement of the plan referred to.

I take this opportunity to challenge attention to the fact that the Democratic Party, in its platform, and President Roosevelt accepted the platform and gave it his approval, declared in favor of the remonetization of silver. That declaration was a recognition of the inadequacy of the gold standard.

The rehabilitation of silver means that it shall be restored to the high station which it occupied as primary money prior to its demonetization by many nations of the world. The Democratic Party owes it to the country to redeem the promise made in its platform, and I cannot help but believe that before the present session ends a measure will be enacted that will lift silver to the station which it occupied for thousands of years as a copartner with gold in carrying forward the trade and commerce of the world.

It is obvious that the gold standard has failed and has not met the demands of trade and commerce or the monetary needs of the world. It is a narrow base, wholly inadequate to sustain the currencies and credits of the world. The sooner that fact is recognized the better it will be not only for the United States but also, indeed, for the people of all countries.

Recently I received a communication from Hon. J. F. Darling, one of the leading bankers of Great Britain and one of the advocates of bimetalism. He had forwarded to me an issue of the London Times, dated February 20, 1934. This issue of this great English paper discusses the silver question and gives evidence of the fact that in Great Britain bimetalism is commanding the attention not only of industrialists but also of the representatives of financial interests in Great Britain.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 8573) to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BONDS OF HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2999) to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, the pending amendment is one offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to strike out the provision of the bill which restricts advancements from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to cases where the mortgages were in default on June 13, 1933, with certain exceptions in favor of distressed cases.

I shall take a few moments only to state why, in my opinion, the amendment of the Senator from Florida ought to be rejected.

The original purpose of the act was to relieve mortgages that were actually in distress. Inasmuch as the bonds provided by the original act were guaranteed by the Government as to interest only, it was believed that mortgagees would accept those bonds in exchange for their mortgages only in cases of actual distress. The bill now pending proposes that the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation shall be guaranteed as to principal as well as guaranteed as to interest, and therefore makes the exchange much more desirable from the mortgagee's point of view.

The fear the committee has, and the fear which the Home Owners' Loan Board has, is that if we leave the other provisions of the act as wide open as they are in the existing law, and at the same time provide for guaranteeing of the principal of the bonds by the Treasury of the United States, we will bring on such a flood of applications for exchanges as to make it more difficult for the cases of actual distress to be adequately served.

The embarrassment the Corporation has had since it began has been to handle its business rapidly enough to take care of cases of distress. It has applications for exchanges of mortgages into bonds running up to about $3,000,000,000, and yet only $325,000,000 of bonds have actually been put on closed loans. The effect of leaving the act wide open to relieve anybody regardless of distress would be to slow down the operation of the Corporation and make it more difficult for distressed cases to get proper attention.

As the bill stands, there is an exception in favor of borrowers whose default subsequent to June 13, 1933, can be shown to have been due to unemployment, or to misfortune beyond the control of the borrower. There is also an exception in favor of cases of distress on the part of mortgagees, where institutions holding mortgages are in process of liquidation. The very fact of their having been put into liquidation shows that they are in extreme distress, and presumably their depositors and creditors are in distress, and need the relief offered by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Mr. President, I submit that the exceptions permitted by the bill as it stands are as liberal as they can be made without accomplishing the result we do not want to accomplish, the slowing-down of the operations of the Corporation in serving cases of real distress.

I am ready for a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BULKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there are two amendments to be offered by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS]. In his absence, I was about to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BULKLEY. I was just about to suggest the absence of a quorum. The Senator from Michigan spoke to me about the amendments.

Mr. McNARY. I defer to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BULKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Cutting	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Davis	Keyes	Russell
Bachman	Dickinson	King	Schall
Bankhead	Dill	La Follette	Sheppard
Barbour	Duffy	Logan	Shipstead
Barkley	Erickson	Loneragan	Smith
Black	Fess	McAdoo	Steiwer
Bone	Fletcher	McGill	Stephens
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	George	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	Gibson	Metcalf	Thompson
Bulow	Glass	Neely	Townsend
Byrd	Goldsborough	Norris	Trammell
Byrnes	Gore	Nye	Tydings
Capper	Hale	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg
Caraway	Harrison	Overton	Van Nuys
Clark	Hastings	Patterson	Walcott
Connally	Hatch	Pittman	Wheeler
Coolidge	Hatfield	Pope	White
Costigan	Hayden	Reed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, on page 4, line 3, after the word "price", to add the words "not to exceed par", so that the sentence would read:

The corporation shall have power to purchase in the open market at any time and at any price, not to exceed par, any of the bonds issued by it.

Mr. BULKLEY. I shall not oppose that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I offer another amendment, on page 4, line 6, after the word "price", to insert the words "not less than par", so that the sentence would read:

Any such bonds so purchased may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be sold or resold at any time and at any price not less than par.

Mr. BULKLEY. I shall not oppose the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, notice was given of a desire on the part of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] to ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which the Norris amendment was agreed to. I supported the amendment, but I do not want advantage taken of the absence of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. SMITH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I inquire what is the status of the motion made by the Senator from West Virginia to reconsider the vote whereby the Norris amendment was agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia gave notice that he would make a motion to reconsider the vote.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, what is the status of the bill at the present moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, that being the situation, I now make my motion. I first make the point that there is not a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Cutting	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Davis	Keyes	Russell
Bachman	Dickinson	King	Schall

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The Chair understands the parliamentary situation to be this: The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] gave notice that he wanted to move to reconsider the amendment adopted by the Senate to this bill; and, after the Senate had ordered the bill to be engrossed and to be read a third time, and it was read the third time, the Senator from West Virginia made the motion. If he desires to get a vote on that amendment, he will have to move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, so as to get the bill back before the Senate for amendments.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and read a third time be reconsidered, for the purpose of enabling the motion of the Senator from West Virginia to be put.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the votes are reconsidered. The question now is on reconsidering the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was adopted.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, is that question open to debate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is debatable.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the proposal to make this Democratic administration nonpartisan in the matter of appointing the officials and employees of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is idealistic and beautiful from a Republican point of view. If those who are in control of the Republican Party were as generous and just as the illustrious Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], no one would object to his amendment. It would probably be a godsend to the American people if all appointments in the public service were made by someone who is as wise and as magnanimous and as free from partisanship as the distinguished author of the amendment is known to be. But, in practice, the nonpartisanship that is habitually proposed from the other side of the aisle during a Democratic administration is humbuggery of the first magnitude and most repulsive form.

Let me very explicitly and emphatically assert that I believe the Senator from Nebraska is actuated by the purest of motives and the most patriotic of desires in urging the adoption of his amendment. But, unhappily the Republican reactionaries who are so enthusiastically, gallantly, and unanimously following the leadership of the great Nebraska Progressive on this occasion know that to make the Home Owners' Loan Corporation nonpartisan will be to make it eventually solidly Republican, in spite of the intentions of the Senator from Nebraska to the contrary.

Under existing law this Democratic administration has in 12 months given more appointments to Republicans than were ever given to Democrats by Republican administrations in any 12 years in the country's history. Republican office holders are so thick in Washington today that a Democratic Member of the Congress needs police protection when he visits some of the governmental departments. But like Oliver Twist, our insatiable friends across the aisle unblushingly clamor for more.

Senators of the minority, we appeal to your sense of fairness to permit us to retain upon the pay roll a few of the millions of capable and deserving Democrats who for 12 long years have not had even the shadow of a chance to hold a public office.

Let us see just how nonpartisan our Republican friends actually are. For example, I came here on the 4th of March 1923 as a Member of the Senate, and assisted by the Democratic Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], demanded of the Republican Senator charged with the assignment of offices that I be given rooms in the Senate office building, whereupon I was told that all the offices were needed by the Republican Senators, and that the only room in the Senate office building that I would be permitted to occupy until the Congress convened in the following December, was one which had seven machines in it and which would be used throughout the summer as sewing headquarters by the female employees of the Senate office building. That room I was compelled to accept, and in it I was kept until a Senator unfortunately died, and I, fortunately, inherited his offices.

Mr. NORRIS. Why was not the Senator glad to stay there?

Mr. NEELY. Because I was not as attractive as the Senator from Nebraska, and consequently the girls refused to sew in my presence, and I was obliged to keep company with the sewing machines instead of the sewing girls, and to that I strenuously objected. [Laughter.]

Six years later a Republican Senator from an eastern State moved into my offices at 9 o'clock in the morning,

3 hours before my term of office had expired and 3 hours before his term had begun, all of which illustrates the pious nonpartisanship of our Republican friends.

I am reliably informed that within a week after the Roosevelt administration began, a Republican banker from West Virginia was given an appointment by the R.F.C. at $6,500 a year. But to this hour I have not been able to obtain an appointment for a Democrat at a salary of more than $5,000 a year.

I am also informed that within the last month a Federal board of three was appointed in West Virginia to discharge important duties, and that every member of that board is a Republican.

In a West Virginia county within a hundred miles of Washington the C.W.A. board was set up to administer nonpartisan relief; it is composed of 18 Republicans and 3 Democrats. The C.W.A. in West Virginia recently gave one of the most important offices at its disposal to the treasurer of the Republican State executive committee. A few days before or after this eminent Republican received his appointment a newspaper in his home city carried two columns from his pen which, in effect, specified the means by which the Republicans could defeat the Democrats at the next election.

I am further informed that in the city of Huntington a former Democratic national committeewoman, who immediately after Al Smith's nomination, bolted her party, took the stump for Mr. Hoover, ridiculed and abused the Democratic candidates in 1928, and as a reward for her apostasy was given a lucrative appointment by the Hoover administration, was recently appointed to an important post by the C.W.A.

I am still further informed that the Federal Relief Administration in Logan County, W.Va., appointed a committee of five on sanitation. It was composed of the last Republican jailer of Logan County, the last Republican assessor or assistant assessor of the county, the present Republican chairman of the executive committee of the city of Logan, and a Republican who had completed a term in the penitentiary for having dynamited a Democratic newspaper in 1928 [laughter], and one lone Democrat. And you Republicans seek to make this administration nonpartisan.

If the adoption of the Norris amendment meant that there would be a fair distribution of offices between Democrats and Republicans in the future, regardless of which of the great parties was in power, I should vote for it, and fight for it; but in West Virginia it will simply mean that no Democrat will hold an appointment in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

It has been reported to me that upon the recommendation of a Republican representative of this Corporation, the Democratic appraiser for West Virginia has been removed from office and the Democratic State manager has been asked to resign. I predict that if the Norris amendment becomes a law every prominent office in this Corporation will, so far as West Virginia is concerned, be held by a Republican within 60 days after the adjournment of this session of the Congress.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NEELY. Not now, but in a moment I shall gladly yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia declines to yield.

Mr. NEELY. I have voted with the Senate progressives on practically all important measures since I became a Member of this body, because I have believed them to be right. I now appeal to them to vote against the pending amendment because I believe it to be wrong and wholly unfair to the members of the party in power. If future Republican administrations could be bound by it, I should eagerly support it. But let us not be deceived by specious pretenses. This situation is similar to that indicated by the following:

At the conclusion of a great religious revival in the county in which I was born, an old saint was requested to offer the closing prayer. It was after this fashion:

"Good Lord, we have had a great meeting. Everybody has professed religion. But good Lord, these old hypocrites will fool you. But they can't fool me. Before the summer is over, they will all backslide and be in sin up to their eyes." [Laughter.]

So with the Stand Pat Party. Before the next Republican administration is a week old, it will be in political sin up to its eyes [laughter], and every Democrat in West Virginia will be driven from office.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator tell me why an amendment, which merely requires the appointment of public officials based on merit and efficiency, is going to put all of the Democrats in West Virginia out of office? [Laughter.]

Mr. NEELY. Certainly; for the same reason that a trained prize fighter would annihilate one who did not know how to box. For 50 years Republicans have held practically all the offices in West Virginia. They are highly trained experts in the matter of obtaining them and holding them. The Democrats have had scarcely a chance in a half a century to learn the technical office-holding game.

Let me pay my sincere compliments to the great Senator from Nebraska and measure my words when I say that in my opinion, excepting George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and Abraham Lincoln, the United States Government owes him more than it owes any other American citizen, living or dead.

That is my estimate of the Honorable GEORGE W. NORRIS, the greatest progressive since the crucifixion. It is with the deepest regret that I am compelled to oppose his amendment with all my heart and mind and strength.

Mr. President, I yield now to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I was thinking, as I heard the statement of the Senator from West Virginia relating how during his career in the Senate he has voted with the progressives at all times, that I have sat here, especially during the last session, when he was one of only eight Democrats who dared stand up in behalf of the injured soldier, and it occurred to me that that might have something to do with all those Republican appointments in his State.

Mr. NEELY. I do not attempt to specify the cause; I only state the fact. I do know that West Virginia Democrats and 50,000 West Virginia progressive Republicans who voted the Democratic ticket in the last election are very unhappy because multitudes of the stand-pat, life-time job holders have been continued upon the public pay roll under this administration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I discussed this subject last Thursday and supposed that the question of the amendment was settled and that there was no objection to it except on the part of some who said they were in favor of it but could not vote for it. I discovered later that the Democrats in this body were almost unanimous in their opposition to the amendment. I was dumfounded.

I am almost breathless now as I have listened to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] declaiming against the amendment. I do not see how it is possible for him to occupy that position. He has told us, as others have done, of the great evils of the past, that the Republicans have done this and that—and I admit it. And now, because the Republicans have done wrong and filled offices with Republican incompetents, those now in power are going to do the same thing and fill them with Democrats. They are going to follow on the heels of the men whom they have denounced and who they say were wrong. Yet, in the next breath, they vote to do the same things that were done by those whom they condemn.

The Senator from West Virginia has said that there will be a Republican President again some day. If the Democrats keep on doing as he would have them do, there will be one much sooner than he anticipates. Democrats, do your duty and you will stay in power; but go crazy and get wild and drunken with power and do what you have condemned your enemies for doing, and you will go out of power.

The present administration came into power because of the very things Democrats have condemned but which they are now doing. Such conduct in the past had disgusted millions of progressive-minded men and women of the country, and they voted the Democratic ticket. They did it with some reluctance. They were more anxious to vote against the Republicans than they were to vote for the Democrats. But they put the Democrats into office and into power. Many Democratic Senators would not be here now looking into my face if it were not for those progressive Republicans who were thinking of the country, who were thinking of humanity when they cast their votes. Every one of them is being slapped in the face, it seems to me, by what is now being tried to be done here.

Mr. President, here is a provision offered by me at the request of members of the Democratic administration who feared Democratic politicians would take their political lives if they dared let it be known where they stood. Here is a Democratic administration going to deal, under the terms of this bill, with millions of American citizens who are trying to save their homes. They want to do a businesslike job in a businesslike way. The man selected by Franklin D. Roosevelt to do that job is praying for the adoption of this particular amendment. He wants it. He is not thinking, it is true, of the man who is hunting a job. He is thinking of the man in his humble home who wants to save his home, who has lost his job and has to have assistance from the Federal Government. That is the man about whom he is thinking. He wants machinery based on efficiency. He does not want the positions all filled with politicians who care nothing about the purposes of the bureau or what it is trying to accomplish, but who are anxious only to save their own jobs. That is not what he wants.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator know any home owner in this country whose right to preserve his home and not have it foreclosed has been denied by anybody who has charge of an office connected with this administration?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I have not heard of any of them coming for relief, but I know there are thousands of them who need help and that a man will have to say in some instances, perhaps, that he voted the Democratic ticket at the last election in order that he may get any money or get an extension of his loan.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on second thought I think the Senator will not want to make that statement.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, of course, I have not been able to make a statement applying to a particular case, because none has happened. I know something about human nature, however. So does the Senator from Kentucky; and there is no use in beating around the bush. The country knows that if this amendment should be defeated, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation will become a political machine. It will become a rendezvous for politicians.

I do not charge anybody with being corrupt. The men who will be put in there probably will be put in by men who would rather they should not be corrupt, but that is always the tendency.

When you are electing a cashier of your bank, a business institution, why do you not put up a sign and say, "We do not want any Republicans in this bank"? When you are selecting a president of your local business corporation, why do you not say, "We cannot have any Democrats in this organization—it is going to be Republican throughout"? What kind of a business move would that be? What kind of a business man would stand for that?

There is no use in fooling ourselves. If politicians are going to name the men for these offices, we are going to have politicians running the machinery. We may assume for argument's sake that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], as pure and white as the driven snow, sends in names of Democrats by the hundreds, anxious that only competent men shall get in; but many incompetent men will creep in under the guise of political pull.

Those who want to keep this institution out of politics, the Democrats who want to have it operated on a basis of efficiency, who themselves want to be relieved of making the appointments, ought to be for this amendment. If they will enact it, they will relieve themselves of much labor which they ought not to be called upon to do. Senators and Representatives ought not to be simply errand boys getting offices for people, but that is what many of us are. We cannot help it, because they come down on us by the thousand; and we hear Members every day, in the cloakrooms and at the lunch tables, say, "I wish I could be relieved of that. I cannot attend to those things. I ought to look after something in the Senate." Vote for amendments such as this and they will get some relief.

Mr. President, I have not talked with any officials on this subject. I have not received any word from the President of the United States and cannot speak for him. There is not any doubt that the President wants this Corporation to be a success. There is not any doubt that those in charge, a letter from one of whom has been read by the Senator from Ohio, want this Corporation to be a success. They do not want it to fail. Referring to Presidents coming into power who are Republicans, let this giant Corporation become a stinking mass of political corruption and even men like Franklin Roosevelt will be brushed aside because under his administration corruption grew and spread; and it is going all over the country. There is not any hamlet but what is going to have an agent of this Corporation there to do something. Shall he do it on partisan lines or shall it be a business institution?

The Senator from West Virginia speaks of what happened in the Senate Office Building. A Republican administrator of the Senate refused to give him justice by letting him have a suitable room. I uphold what the Senator said about that incident. The action was wrong. Are we going to make it right by having a Democrat do the same thing to me? Is it going to right the wrong to do it over again? Of course it will not make the situation any better than it was; but the Democratic Party will go down to defeat, as the Republican Party went down to defeat, because it is just following in the lines of the Republican Party that took it to defeat.

That is one of the things that hurt the Republican Party. Now the Senator from West Virginia wants the Democratic Party to do the same thing. That will be one of the things that will contribute to throw the Democrats out.

The Senator complains that in his State he has not had one appointment drawing more than $5,000 a year. I should not think that ought to influence a Senator's vote here. I have not had one drawing $500 a year. I have just received notice that the postmaster in my home town has been supplanted and his successor has been appointed. I received the notice from the newspapers. Nobody consulted me about it. I might have raised Ned, and said that Roosevelt ought to come down to me and ask me what I thought about this nominee; but he did not. The Democratic Member of the House of Representatives did not consult me, directly or indirectly. I am not kicking about it. I am not going to object to it. The Republicans did the same thing when they were in office. It is a little thing about a job.

This great Home Owners' Loan Corporation, while it will be in operation, will do a business greater perhaps than any other corporation in the United States. It will be using my money, Republican money, just the same as Democratic money, the taxpayers' money, to relieve the common home owner of a debt, to enable him to keep his home. I am not willing that such an institution should be run on the basis of partisan politics, and the people of the country will never stand for it.

A big outcry may come from several sources, but in the main it will be from men who want the jobs. If we will consult with the people, we will find that there are more honest men and women in the country who are anxious that this great Corporation shall succeed, and that it shall not be thrust into dirty partisan politics.

Mr. NEELY and Mr. SCHALL addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senator has stated that under the present administration he has not obtained an appointment that paid even so much as $500 a year. I presume, however, that the Senator did have appointments that paid more than $5,000 a year during the 12 years of Republican rule under Presidents Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I never had one.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I knew there was something the matter with those administrations, but I never knew before exactly what the trouble was. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. That is probably one of the troubles; but I never complained about it. When the President had an appointment to make, given to him by law, I said that if he wanted to consult with my political enemy and select him, that was his business, not mine. If he selected a man who I thought was competent, I had nothing to say. That was the law as I understood it. We passed a law, for instance, that gives to the President of the United States power to appoint certain postmasters. It is on the statute books in black and white.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield pretty soon.

The President can take his own method of making appointments. He can advise with me about doing it. He can advise with the Senator from West Virginia. He can advise with a man in jail if he wants to do so. That is his privilege. I will not object, no matter where he goes or with whom he advises, just so long as he obtains competent and efficient men.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield once more?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator has referred to the misfortune that would result from selecting bank officials with reference to political considerations. I inquire of the Senator if in Nebraska, during the past 12 years of Republican control, they pursued the policy which they pursued in the State of West Virginia, to my certain knowledge, which was to permit no one to be even an attorney for a receiver of a national bank who was not an active and aggressive member of the Republican Party; and in most instances—particularly in my county, in every instance—the chairman of the Republican executive committee, if he was a lawyer, was made the attorney for the receiver for the bank; and if he was not a lawyer, a former chairman of the Republican committee was appointed; and no Democrat could obtain the slightest consideration for appointment as an attorney for a receiver of a bank, no matter how little or how great the compensation might be.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well. So far as that question applies to my State, I want to answer it.

I have no personal knowledge on the subject. I have been told by those who, I think, know the facts that the statement the Senator has made about Republicans and the appointment of attorneys is correct. I think the practice is wrong. I condemned it when my party was in power. I have always condemned it. It has been wrong from the beginning. It is wrong now. Then, why do the Democratic Party want to do it if they want to be right? They are pleading here for the rejection of an amendment without which they will have the power to make this Corporation a political machine all the way through.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just once more?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. NEELY. Did the Senator, during the 12 years which preceded the beginning of the Roosevelt administration, ever seek, by amendment to any bill—

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I will answer that.

Mr. NEELY. Pardon me until I finish the question, if the Senator please.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well, if the Senator will not make it so long that I will forget the question.

Mr. NEELY. No; I will not do that. I just want to make it so concrete that it will apply to a specific question.

Mr. NORRIS. It is very concrete now, and I understand it exactly.

Mr. NEELY. I was going to restrict my question to the field of exploration in which we now are. Did the Senator ever offer an amendment to prevent the Republican administration from appointing only Republicans as attorneys for bank receivers, or to provide the same measure of relief against partisanship under Republican administrations during the past 12 years that is proposed under the amendment now before the Senate under a Democratic administration?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I will cite a particular instance. I have offered the amendment in various forms, civil-service amendments and otherwise, in various forms, many times during that time to different bills that have been pending; but I am going to answer the Senator by saying that I have. The Muscle Shoals bill is an illustration of it. I did it over and over again in that bill, from the very first bill I introduced to the last one. It was in all of them.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I knew the Senator from Nebraska had taken that very liberal and fair-minded view in regard to that measure, and that is why I restricted my question to the appointment of attorneys for receivers of banks.

Mr. NORRIS. I can say further to the Senator that from the time President Harding went into office down to the incoming of this administration—not completely down, because I left off when I found that my intercession was no good—he will find my letters in the Post Office Department, in the Treasury Department, and in other departments where there would be a receiver to be appointed, for instance, for a bank, protesting against making that a political machine, and protesting against the selection of attorneys by receivers on the basis of partisanship. I pled for the depositors whose money was at stake. I wanted to save every dollar I could for them. If a record of conversations I had with Presidents had been kept, it would be found that I pled with pretty nearly every Republican President, beginning with Harding, that the Post Office Department should not be a great political machine, that it ought to be a great business institution, that it ought to be kept out of politics, and that the Postmaster General should not be a man whose chief business was to furnish jobs for Republicans who had supported the President. That will be found in letters I wrote. It would be found that a good many times I made remarks on the floor of the Senate and the House bearing out that attitude. Some bills I introduced along those lines could be found. But I failed, and it is evident that I am failing now to get the support which it seems to me this kind of a proposition ought to have from the friends of President Roosevelt for another friend who is trying to make his administration a success, who is anxious that this great corporation shall not be a stench in the nostrils of the American people, who wants to lift it out of the mire of politics and place it on a business basis.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I will have to yield to the Senator from Minnesota, who requested that I yield to him.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I am very heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I understand that in my State, under the C.W.A., people are not allowed to get jobs unless they join the Farmer-Labor organization and pay $2, a practice which I understand has been going on for some time. The Farmer-Labor Party in my State, in the last election, was closely allied with the Democrats. I am not so well informed as to what the Democrats are doing out there, but newspapers of my State have called attention to this practice and I have personally heard read an article to that end from the St. Cloud Sentinel and I have been told that there are a number of affidavits supporting the statement, that before one can get a job he has to pay $2 to join the Farmer-Labor organization. It is a fact beyond dispute, and at least one Representative of Minnesota of the Farmer-Labor Party has sent out a letter in which he calls attention to the fact that he has paid his 3-percent tax to the Farmer-Labor association stating further that all loyal public officials of the party are expected to make similar contributions, and that he knows of no one, except two Members of Congress, of the entire party who has not paid such a tax. As I understand, the only distinction here is that the C.W.A. pay before they get in and the officials of that party pay after they get in. The beginning of a sort of a young Tammany. So, in or out, it is a question of pay and no one gets recognition unless his party affiliations are correct.

Mr. President, I am very strongly in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, and I hope the motion of my friend, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], to reconsider may not carry.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. Not now; I desire to speak with reference to what has been said by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. President, I think Senators make a mistake in jumping at conclusions. If we look into the facts, many times we will find that we should trim off the rough corners. Sometimes we will find that we have been misinformed, as we are very apt to be misinformed on a question of this kind, sometimes by a disappointed office seeker. It is inevitable that there will be thousands of disappointed office seekers in this country, because there are about 10,000 applicants for every office, and I refer to them with respect. I have never seen the time when conditions have been so aggravated. I say that with a breaking heart, because it causes me real pain to have to turn down men and women, competent as they appear to be, to turn the cold shoulder to them and say that there is no hope, that there is no place for them, that there are now too many asking for the few places which are available. I do not refer to them with any disrespect, but disappointed office seekers who make their complaints to their Senators and to their Representatives and to their governors are very apt to exaggerate things. They are very apt to have a wrong viewpoint, and to say of this man or that man that he was too cold, that he turned a cold shoulder to them. Perhaps I have done so many times when I have become exasperated, when I was trying to do something that required my attention, and have been diverted all day long, from early in the morning until dark, sitting in a chair in one place and telling people I could not help them.

I have become exasperated after a while, and I suppose I have insulted some of those folk. I suppose some of them have gone away cursing me, perhaps many of them have. I cannot help that. I did not mean any disrespect to them. Many of them have no doubt been asking for things they ought to know better than to ask for. Men have often said to me, "You can get me a job under the Tennessee Valley Authority." I have said, "I am the author of that law. Are you my friend? Do you want me to succeed? Do you want me to be honorable? If you do, do not ask me to violate the very law I helped to enact."

The provision we inserted in the Tennessee Valley Authority Act has proven a relief in a great many cases, and a similar provision in this case will prove to be a relief to Senators if it shall be enacted, and it will help to bring about honest government.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that I animadverted on this subject, earlier in the day, I wish to add just a little to what I said then.

I agree with the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from West Virginia that it would be very fortunate if Members of the United States Senate were relieved entirely of the pressure of being importuned to obtain political appointments under an administration of which they are supposed to be a part, and I am not so sure but that I would vote for a measure that would make it unlawful for any United States Senator to recommend to any Department in the Government anybody for any place. Yet I can well understand how for 150 years the system has been growing up whereby executive departments do depend upon Members of Congress for recommendations in many cases.

For instance, the Comptroller of the Currency, and I have no reference to the present incumbent, but any Comptroller of the Currency having to appoint an attorney for a receiver of a national bank in a small town in my State, or in Nebraska, or in West Virginia, or in Tennessee, or in Alabama, would naturally communicate with a Senator or Representative from the State affected. We may assume that the Comptroller of the Currency has no general information concerning the qualifications of lawyers in the various States. We may assume that he has not the slightest knowledge as to who ought to be appointed attorney for the receiver of a national bank. We may assume that he does not know who ought to be appointed receiver of a bank, because he may not be acquainted with the bankers, and is not generally acquainted with the lawyers, in any given State. This is, of necessity, the case with any Comptroller in any State except his own.

Are we to require him either to get on the train and go down into the State and find a lawyer, or to send an inspector, or a representative, at public expense? Are we to condemn him because he calls up a Member of Congress, either a Senator or a Member of the House, who is acquainted with the lawyers and says, "Recommend to me a good lawyer to represent the receiver of a national bank"? Are we to be condemned, and is the Comptroller to be condemned, because between the two of us we try to find the best qualified lawyer in the community to represent the bank?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if I were answering the question I would say "no"; but the Senator ought to add something. I have received many letters making requests of that kind, and they always add another string. If it was a Republican Comptroller, the letter said it must be a Republican lawyer. If it was a Democratic Comptroller, he said that the lawyer must be a Democratic lawyer.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say this to the Senator from Nebraska: That I have received many letters of that sort from the present Comptroller of the Currency suggesting recommendations, and in no single one of those letters has the question of a man's politics ever been mentioned. The word "Democratic" or the word "Republican" has never been in any request the present Comptroller has ever written to me along the line suggested.

Mr. NORRIS. I have never received such a letter from the present Comptroller, and I am not speaking of him. I am speaking of the past. But if what the Senator says be true, that is an added reason why the Senator ought to be in favor of my amendment. If that be true, the present Comptroller is trying to run his office on a basis of efficiency rather than of partisanship.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that is true, but that does not appeal to me as a reason why an amendment ought to be adopted which would embarrass every executive officer in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Mr. NORRIS. They want it.

Mr. ASHURST. If they want it, why did they not ask the Banking and Currency Committee to put it in the bill? They appeared before us on this bill, but did not ask for this amendment. They do not have to have this amendment to get rid of bad men.

Mr. NORRIS. They are afraid.

Mr. BARKLEY. Afraid of whom? They are not afraid of me.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know whether they are or not.

Mr. BARKLEY. I undertook this morning to draw to the Senator's attention an illustration. My vehemence in this matter is not to be taken by the Senator from Nebraska as indicative of any lack of respect for his views, because I join with the Senator from West Virginia and all other Senators in my admiration and my respect for the independence and the statesmanship of the Senator from Nebraska. But we need not become virtuous all of a sudden. I want to take it in doses.

I recall that in 1912, after the election of Woodrow Wilson, when William Howard Taft was President of the United States, between the election in November and the inauguration of Woodrow Wilson on the 4th of March 1913, Mr. Taft issued an Executive order putting about 45,000 Republican postmasters of the fourth class under the civil service, without an examination, without any evidence of their qualifications, except that some Republican Congressmen had recommended them for those appointments. When Mr. Wilson was inaugurated, recognizing the injustice of that action, and undertaking to modify it at least to the extent of requiring that these appointees take a civil-service examination, and that thousands of other applicants have a chance to qualify for these appointments, the cry was raised that he was opening up the Postal System to spoils, and he was denounced by those who were fanatic on the subject of civil-service reform because he gave others an opportunity to show that they were qualified for these places.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Has the Senator from Kentucky observed, in his long service in the House of Representatives and the Senate, that the enthusiasm of Republicans for nonpartisanship and for civil service is always violent immediately after a Democratic administration begins, and, with the exception of a few, like the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, that no Republican ever suggests being nonpartisan until a Democratic President has been inaugurated?

Mr. BARKLEY. I was coming to that, Mr. President.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. When the Senator gets to it, I wish he would remember that the same rule applies to the Democratic Party, and is being illustrated right now.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have gone back, Mr. President, to the Taft Executive order with reference to fourth-class postmasters, and I believe the Senator from Nebraska agrees with my criticism of the injustice of that order. I do not know what position he took with regard to it at the time. I do not remember whether the Senator from Nebraska criticized that order or not, and it is not material whether he did or did not. If he did, I am sure he was sincere about it; and if he did not, I am sure it was because of an oversight.

Then Mr. Wilson was President for 8 years. I do not recall that Mr. Wilson, during a single year while he was President of the United States, by Executive order covered into the civil service a lot of Democrats appointed by him. I remember that he issued an order that required a civil-service examination for first-, second-, and third-class postmasters, which were not covered by the Taft order, and he required that the man who made the highest grade should be appointed postmaster; and I recall that in some communities which were almost unanimously Democratic communities, Republicans were appointed postmasters under Woodrow Wilson as a result of that order.

Then along came Mr. Harding, and then Mr. Coolidge, and then Mr. Hoover, and all three of those gentlemen, after filling the Executive Office, the Treasury Department, the Department of Agriculture, and all other departments with Republican appointees, issued Executive orders covering them into the civil service. There are today in every department of the United States Government thousands of employees, who were appointed as partisan Republicans either by Harding or by Coolidge or by Hoover, who were then covered into the civil service by Executive orders, and we cannot remove one of them except by filing charges of inefficiency or corruption, or for some other cause that would be justification for removal.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I join with the other Senators in my expressions of respect and love for the Senator from Nebraska, but I think he is reasoning illogically in reference to his amendment. I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he did not consider the last election an absolute landslide repudiation of the Republican Party and its administration, testifying that the people wanted to try the Democrats? Under the Senator's proposition he is trying to open the door for the same rotten crowd to have a part of the pie when the public said, "We want the Democrats to run the Government."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think there is a good deal of force in what the Senator from South Carolina says.

I wish to say another thing: The Senator from Nebraska says we are trying to do the very thing that brought about the defeat of the Republican Party. The Republican Party was not defeated because of the men who were appointed postmasters. The Republican Party was not defeated because of the men who were appointed United States marshals or United States district attorneys. The Republican Party was defeated because of the failure of its policies, and because the people believed that the policies of the Democratic Party, as proclaimed and promised by Mr. Roosevelt, would mean more toward the welfare and the growth and development of our country than those advocated and put into practice by his predecessor and his opponent, Mr. Hoover. If the Democratic Party, as many of us hope and believe it will, shall become and remain the majority party in the United States, it will not be because of a sop or a bribe being held out to some Republicans in the way of appointments, but it will be because of the fact that the independence, the foresight, the statesmanship, the progress, and the vision of Mr. Roosevelt appeals to millions of independent Republicans, who will vote to keep that administration in power or keep those policies in control of the Government. It will not be brought about because some petty Republican or some petty Democrat has been given some petty job, either in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or any other activity inaugurated by this administration.

We must appeal to the American people upon the quality of our leadership, upon the quality of our legislation, and upon the quality of our administration. If I were in charge of the appointments to office in this country, I would, without regard to politics, put in key positions those men and those women who are in sympathy with what we are trying to do, regardless of how they may have voted in previous elections. I would not confine all appointments to Democrats. I would appoint men and women of the character and stripe of the Senator from Nebraska and of the Senator from Wisconsin and others who are in sympathy with and have tried as much as I am trying to make this administration a success. President Roosevelt has very properly recognized the propriety and the justice of this policy.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator seems to adhere to the old adage that "to the 'victim' belongs the spoils."

Mr. BARKLEY. That, Mr. President, is to me a new adage.

Let us see what the amendment, if agreed to, will do. It says that no man shall be appointed to an office under the Home Owners' Loan Corporation because of any partisan or political consideration. What does that mean? If there is anybody in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation who has not the courage or the ability or the intelligence to prevent the appointment of incompetent and corrupt men, or who has not the courage or the intelligence or the ability to fire men who are incompetent, who are not efficient, or who are corrupt, then he ought not to be in the position he holds. What the Senator is doing here is asking Members of Congress to pass a resolution, as he says, giving courage to the appointing power.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, they need it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let us go back to the beginning of the set-up in connection with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, or any of the rest of them, because if this amendment ought to go into the act, such an amendment ought to go into every other act.

Here is the State director of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation appointing the manager for some district in the State with headquarters in some city. He is the manager, for instance, in the city of Omaha, and he has to make appointments and to manage, within a certain district, the affairs of this great business institution. There are two outstanding men of equal ability, either one of whom would be a successful manager and administrator. One of them is a Democrat and the other a Republican. These two men are standing before the State director of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and he cannot find any appreciable difference between the two so far as qualifications or character or background are concerned. One is a Democrat, the other is a Republican. He will say, "I should like to appoint the Democrat; but if I appoint him, although he is equally qualified with his Republican opponent, I shall be guilty of a violation of this amendment, because, being a Democrat, I will have allowed that fact to have some weight with me in making the appointment." Therefore, in order that he may not be criticized, he will turn down the Democrat and appoint the Republican, and the appointment of that Republican will have been brought about because he is a Republican and not a Democrat.

Therefore I say that we will have injected the political element into the corporation just as much as if the State director had appointed the Democrat simply because he was a Democrat. The result will be that he will appoint a Republican because he is a Republican and the other man is a Democrat.

So it seems to me it is impossible to get away from some political considerations in the appointment of men not only in this organization but in all the organizations.

Politics is in reality the science of government, and the real politician ought to be one who is versed in the science of government, though often the term is used derisively as meaning a mere office seeker.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President—

Mr. BARKLEY. However much we might desire to escape, however much out in the cloakrooms and around in the dining rooms we say we wish there were some way by which we might be relieved from the annoyance and the burden and the exasperation of being called upon to choose from among our friends in making recommendations for positions, the experience of this Nation for 150 years has been that we cannot escape it; we cannot be relieved of that burden. Whenever the time comes that I am compelled to say that no man who entertains honest political convictions on any subject, no man who honestly tries to carry those convictions into effect by trying to make them successful, shall be entitled to consideration for any appointment, then I will relieve myself of any obligation or any embarrassment, because I would not recommend men who had no convictions on any subject; and no such man is entitled to any office, because he is not qualified to fill it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I think both the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from West Virginia were rather caustic and hardly fair in their criticism of the Republicans. Has the Senator thought about the number of new bureaus requiring additional officers that were created incident to the war during Wilson's administration and the enormous make-up under the new program that comes as an incident of the new deal and of getting out of the depression? Has the Senator considered at all the large volume that is involved in these new bureaus?

Mr. BARKLEY. Why, of course I have. Of course, the war brought on the necessity for employing thousands of men. Those of us who were here in 1914 and 1917 and 1918 remember the feverish activity with which men and women were gathered here from all parts of the country to administer the agencies of war; but there was no partisanship there. I venture the statement that Woodrow Wilson was more liberal in the appointment of Republicans during the war than any Republican President, or all of them combined, since the Civil War in the appointment of Democrats.

I will venture the statement that during the last 12 months in the selection of men to administer the emergency laws which have been passed under President Roosevelt, by the liberality of his policy and by recognizing that these measures were nonpartisan, he has given more appointments to outstanding Republicans than all the Republican Presidents since the Civil War ever gave to Democrats in all the administrations that have served from that day until now; and I dare the Senator from Ohio to challenge that statement. President Roosevelt has exemplified his liberality and his desire to call to the service of the country in this emergency men of all political persuasions.

Mr. FESS. I should like to have the Senator from Kentucky name one Republican in Ohio who has been appointed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know anything about Ohio, but I have no doubt there are some.

Mr. FESS. Certainly not.

Mr. BARKLEY. But I am satisfied I can name many of them in my State, and I can name many of them in other States. I am not complaining of that; I am rather commending the President on account of his liberality. There is no complaint here that the Democrats have been unduly favored in the appointments in the emergency bureaus.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I think that I agree with the Senator with reference to the appointment of those who must have special equipment or special fitness. I have always thought that where appointments are made to positions which require particular ability, it is almost impossible to make sure of getting what is desired through the Civil Service Commission, and I have rather leaned toward such appointments being left very largely to the discretion and will of the President; but it seems to me, when it comes to the large number that are fit to do the work under the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, that we ought to put the appointments under the Civil Service.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this amendment does not involve the Civil Service.

Mr. FESS. I understand that.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the Senator knows that in the organization of an emergency set-up of men, both high and low, it is impossible to wait around for the Civil Service Commission to hold examinations and grade papers, because the emergency might be over before they would ever get to it. I have in mind some vacancies in offices in my State which were vacant a year ago when the administration came into power, and the Civil Service Commission has not as yet held an examination or created an eligible list from which appointments may be made. There may be special reasons why this has been so. But in most of the emergency activities which we have undertaken in the last year it was more important to get relief to the people than to hold a Civil Service examination.

What I am complaining about is that every time the Democratic Party comes into power our opponents assume that the time has arrived for them to preach the doctrine of nonpartisanship, whereas they never preach it when they are in power. I do not refer to my good friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who has offered this amendment, because I pay him the tribute to which he is entitled, that he treats all parties alike; he knows no difference; he is in favor of this proposal because he believes it is right; but I think that the same thing cannot be said about many Senators on the other side who are voting with the Senator from Nebraska on this question. None of them ever felt in their breasts the surge of nonpartisan political virtue when they were in power.

What I have in mind is not a partisan question here at all, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska; but what I have in mind is, as I said a while ago, if there is any administrative officer in the Government of the United States, whether he be a Democrat or Republican, who has not the courage to take action so far as dishonest or incompetent employees or officials are concerned and wants us to adopt a resolution stiffening up his backbone, then I must say, if this amendment shall be adopted it ought to operate on him first. I do not believe there is any such man. I am quite confident that such a thing cannot be said about the President of the United States; and I have no doubt, if there is any administrative officer who will go to the President and complain that in Nebraska or in Wyoming or in Michigan or in Kentucky there is some officer in charge of the President's program who is unworthy, that the President will very promptly remove any such officer without a resolution or an amendment on the part of the Senate of the United States. I know and admire and respect the members of the board of directors of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and I think they will do the same.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do.

Mr. CLARK. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that that has taken place in several States. In one State the President removed the Democratic lieutenant governor of the State from an important position in connection with the administration on charges of too great political activity.

Mr. BARKLEY. And if there is any Senator on this floor who has recommended and secured the appointment of any inefficient or corrupt man in any department in any State and he shall be removed by the President, there is not one of us who will have the courage to stand up on this floor and denounce the President for such removal.

I hope the vote whereby the amendment was adopted will be reconsidered, and when it shall be reconsidered, if it shall be, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska will be defeated. I do not make that statement lightly, for I have followed the Senator from Nebraska more earnestly than I have followed some of my own colleagues on this side of the Chamber. I have as great admiration for him as I have for any man in public life in the United States, but I believe on this particular occasion he is wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS, Mr. McNARY, and other Senators demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BULKLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is necessarily absent. I am advised that if present he would vote as I intend to vote. I am therefore free to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HASTINGS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HAYDEN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. RUSSELL (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. If he were present, he would vote "yea", and if I were at liberty to vote I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WALCOTT (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that the Senator from California has not voted.

Mr. WALCOTT. Then, under the circumstances, as I do not know how he would vote, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and that the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL]. If the Senators from Rhode Island, Missouri, and Maine were present, and permitted to vote, they would vote "nay", while the Senators from Illinois, New York, and Washington, I am informed, if present and permitted to vote, would vote "yea."

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THOMPSON] is necessarily detained from the Senate on official business. If present, he would vote "nay."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], and the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—34

Adams	Clark	King	Stephens
Ashurst	Connally	Loneragan	Thomas, Okla.
Bachman	Coolidge	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Barkley	Duffy	McKellar	Trammell
Brown	Erickson	Neely	Tydings
Bulow	George	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Byrd	Gore	Robinson, Ark.	Wheeler
Byrnes	Harrison	Sheppard
Caraway	Hayden	Smith

NAYS—35

Austin	Fess	Johnson	Overton
Barbour	Fletcher	Kean	Pope
Black	Frazier	Keyes	Reed
Bulkley	Gibson	La Follette	Robinson, Ind.
Capper	Goldsborough	Logan	Schall

Bone	Glass	Norbeck	Wagner
Borah	Hebert	Patterson	Walcott
Carey	Lewis	Pittman	Walsh
Copeland	Long	Reynolds	White
Costigan	McAdoo	Russell

So the Senate refused to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of Mr. NORRIS was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE—HOUSE BILL PLACED ON CALENDAR

The bill (H.R. 8573) to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and ordered to be placed on the calendar.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3055) to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is it the purpose of the Senator to do more today than have the bill made the unfinished business?

Mr. TYDINGS. No. I understand the matter cannot be disposed of today. The Senator from Utah, who has an amendment pending, will have an opportunity tomorrow to discuss it, I imagine. Of course, I cannot bind the Senate, but that is my opinion.

Mr. KING. I am sure the Senate would not go contrary to the understanding of the Senator from Maryland under the circumstances.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, what is the bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Philippine independence bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3055) to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, which has been reported from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs without amendment.

ORDER FOR CALL OF THE CALENDAR TOMORROW

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, beginning where we left off on last Thursday, at Order of Business No. 471.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on several occasions the request has been made of me that we might have a call of the calendar without restriction so that a motion could be made to take up a bill on the calendar in the usual way which obtains at any other time than on Monday by unanimous consent. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has made such a request within the last few days, that we might proceed to take up bills in their order by the usual form of motion. I wonder if the Senator would be willing tomorrow that we call the calendar under rule VIII?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; not tomorrow. May I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that there is a considerable number of bills on the calendar that have not been called, which have been placed there since the calendar was last called. It is my intention and purpose to make an arrangement for the consideration of unobjected bills tomorrow. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that in all probability an arrangement will be effected to consider the calendar under rule VIII at an early date.

Mr. McNARY. May we not have an understanding that some day later in the week we may take up bills on the calendar under rule VIII?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will confer with the Senator about it.

Mr. McNARY. Then I may feel at liberty to say that during the week we will reach a call of the calendar under that rule?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will confer with the Senator and try to arrange it. I submit the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. McNARY. Just a moment. I want to cooperate with the Senator from Arkansas, but I should like to have a little better understanding that the next time we reach the calendar it will be called under rule VIII, so that a motion may be made to take up a bill against objection. May I have that understanding with the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I thought I had an understanding with the Senator from Oregon. I am not in a position now to fix a day upon which that may be done.

Mr. McNARY. I am not asking for that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will arrange it for the early future.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. RUSSELL submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8134) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5 and 6.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 19, 21, 29, 30, 31, 33, and 34, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,348,619"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,394,323"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$230,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$312,701"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$136,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$16,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 1, 3, 4, 25, 26, 27, 28, 32, and 35.

RICHARD B. RUSSELL, Jr.,
CARL HAYDEN,
HENRY W. KEYES,
GERALD P. NYE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN N. SANDLIN,
M. J. HART,
CLARENCE CANNON,
J. H. SINCLAIR,
LLOYD THURSTON,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, there are involved in the bill several matters which the Department of Agriculture is very anxious to have enacted into law as promptly as possible. The approval of the report at this time, therefore, is of vital importance. I move its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate several messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

NOMINATION OF POSTMASTER AT RISING SUN, MD.—RECONSIDERATION

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the nomination of Taylor R. Biles to be postmaster at Rising Sun, Md., was confirmed on March 14 may be reconsidered, and then that the nomination be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. The reason for this request, I will say to the Senate, is that, by accident, this nomination was not submitted to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers in the Regular Army.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Frank J. McDonnell, of Pennsylvania, to be United States attorney, middle district of Pennsylvania, to succeed Andrew B. Dunsmore, whose term expired February 6, 1934.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the calendar.

The calendar is in order.

The first nomination on the calendar will be passed over under the unanimous-consent agreement.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Harry J. Warner to be medical director.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Robert Olesen to be medical director.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Charles M. Fauntleroy to be medical director.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Knox E. Miller to be senior surgeon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Joseph G. Wilson to be senior surgeon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Clifford E. Waller to be senior surgeon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Charles V. Akin to be senior surgeon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of John H. Linson to be senior surgeon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Newton E. Wayson to be senior surgeon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Frank M. Faget to be senior surgeon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be considered en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and, without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 24 minutes p.m.) the Senate, in legislative session, adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, March 20, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MARCH 19, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Teach us how to live, our blessed Heavenly Father. Today is our own; we thank Thee for its providence. O Spirit divine, plead with us that we may have sweet and understanding minds. With clear seeing and straight thinking, let us fulfill the obligations of our great calling. May our thoughts respond to Thy thoughts—harness our purpose with Thy purpose and key our desires to Thy holy will. Impress us that a benevolent heart is more rewarding than self-interest and allow not dreary selfishness to be the prison of our souls. Almighty God, lead us just now to consecrate ourselves at the altar of our country. O clothe us with the spirit of dedication that crowned and made memorable our forefathers in the establishment of the cause of good and righteous government in a new land and in a new world. In the name of the world's Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, March 17, was read and approved.

THE COTTON BILL

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House agreed to on last Saturday, the unfinished business is the bill H.R. 8402, to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on the final passage of the bill I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 251, nays 115, answered "present" 2, not voting 64, as follows:

Mr. Kennedy of Maryland with Mr. Green.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, I change my vote from "nay" to "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. Jones, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 7478) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include cattle as a basic agricultural commodity, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if I understand this bill correctly, this is the bill that has the La Follette amendment attached to it to provide a certain amount for the purchase of diseased dairy cattle, and so forth, the amount being $150,000,000.

Mr. JONES. The Senate put in everything except the kitchen stove.

Mr. SNELL. May I say in all seriousness to the gentleman, this amendment, as I understand it, is more important than any measure that we have had before us in recent times affecting the dairy interests of the country. It is the only direct aid, as far as I can see, that would come at once to this industry, and as far as I am concerned, and as far as others who are very deeply interested in the dairy situation are concerned, we feel that the amendment should come back to the House and be agreed to. We should at least give the House a chance to express its opinion before the House conferees insist on the Senate withdrawing the amendment. If this goes to conference I would ask the gentleman to agree that before any such thing happened he would bring it back to the House and give us an opportunity to express ourselves on such an important amendment.

Mr. JONES. I may state to the gentleman, as I have stated to several others, that the purposes outlined in the La Follette amendment are in the main the features that were intended to be used under the declared purposes of the bill as it passed the House. There was a committee of livestock men representing both the dairy- and beef-cattle people of the entire country who met here, and the purposes named in the La Follette amendment were outlined as a part of the program that would be adopted if the House bill passed. Of course I am not authorized to speak for the conferees, but I think some good purposes are outlined in the amendment, and they are specified now rather than stated generally as heretofore.

Mr. SNELL. That is the main point. Furthermore, the question of a processing tax is not involved in this amendment.

Mr. JONES. I think at least part of the funds should be used for the purposes outlined. I do not know whether we will be able to use as much money as here involved, but I may state to the gentleman that personally I believe a part of the funds should be devoted to these specific purposes.

Mr. SNELL. The original bill is very general in its purposes. This is a definite, specific appropriation for a main specified project, and that project is the thing in which we are deeply interested.

Mr. JONES. The original bill provided that at least 40 percent should be used for dairy cattle.

Mr. SNELL. Yes; but it might be used in a general way and not for the specific purposes mentioned in the La Follette amendment.

Mr. JONES. With all the various matters outlined in the bill, the gentleman knows we cannot have direct and positive commitments; but I do not think the gentleman and I are far apart in our opinion as to what should be done or what could be accomplished. I am in thorough sympathy with reserving a part of what we may be able to hold in the bill for this purpose, but I do not know whether we will be able to hold as much as this would involve in the bill and secure its approval.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. It seems to me one very important element in the La Follette amendment is the fact that it is specifically provided that the funds which it authorizes to be appropriated shall not be raised through a processing tax. I think it is the thought and the purpose of those interested in the dairy industry that a processing tax would be a very unfortunate thing to impose on that industry at this time.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman was present at the hearing and knows what was the declared purpose and that any processing fee will probably be deferred a short time and then put on in a small way until conditions get better, and the funds authorized would be made immediately available for the program. The gentleman will be on the conference committee, and I think, under the circumstances, we will ask that five Members be in this conference, including the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KINZER]. I think we will be able to work out a very satisfactory agreement and one that none of you gentlemen would object to.

Mr. SNELL. That is not quite satisfactory. I want the bill to go to conference, but I want a definite understanding that the La Follette amendment is coming back to the House, or some part of it. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] has raised the matter of the processing tax and that is very important to our people.

Mr. JONES. I will state to the gentleman that, personally, I am in favor of at least having a part of whatever fund may be appropriated set apart in this fashion. I can only speak for myself, but I think the men concerned are reasonable, and I do not think any of us are very far apart in our wishes in the premises.

Mr. SNELL. That is satisfactory so far as it goes, but I do not want something to happen that will cause this to slip away from us.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman knows that this is the same conference that has considered a number of bills, and I do not think he feels we are going to try to put anything over on the House.

Mr. SNELL. I do not mean entirely that, but this is so important to the dairy industry that I would want an understanding that at least part of it is coming back to the House to be definitely acted upon, because the question of a processing tax is involved and that is a very important matter with this industry.

Mr. JONES. I cannot assure the gentleman what the conferees will do. I have said that, personally, I favor doing just what the gentleman has suggested, insofar as it is practical to do so, to wit, setting part of it aside for the specific purposes mentioned. I am in favor of that, personally, and that is as far as I can go. I cannot speak for the other conferees.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I would suggest to the gentleman that, so far as I am concerned, the minority leader is not talking for the Republicans on this side of the aisle. I do not see any reason why the dairy farmers should be made an outright gift of $100,000,000 or $150,000,000. Why should they not be cared for out of a processing tax like the tax imposed on all other farm products?

Mr. JONES. I think if the gentleman from Illinois will read the amendment he will find that it is a provision for eliminating diseased cattle, in which I think everybody is interested, and also distributing a certain amount for relief purposes.

Mr. BRITTEN. What I want to convey to the House is the fact that because the distinguished minority leader over here, with whom I am always in accord, has the dairies in his district, he is very anxious about this particular bill, but there are other Republicans on the floor of the House who are just as anxious to see justice done the National Treasury.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman's discussion has shown the impossibility of making a definite promise on any of these things, and I hope the gentleman will not object to the bill going to conference.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman has stated that he is in favor of retaining the provisions of the La Follette amendment that would make something available for the eradication of tubercular and other disease-infected cattle.

Mr. JONES. Part of the fund.

Mr. BOILEAU. The bill we passed originally would make those funds available for that purpose if the Department of Agriculture wanted to use them in that way.

Mr. JONES. Yes; absolutely.

Mr. BOILEAU. So the whole sum and substance of it is that the La Follette amendment actually increases the appropriation or the amount that would be made available for this purpose.

Mr. JONES. Yes; it not only increases it, but makes it certain that some of the funds will be used for those specific purposes. It might be that if the cattlemen and the dairymen did not insist, part of the $200,000,000 would not be used.

Mr. BOILEAU. I appreciate that, but it seems to me that in order to carry out a program of that magnitude a substantially larger amount than that appropriated would be required.

Mr. JONES. I am not in position to assure the gentleman how much would be used, but I can assure the gentleman that, personally, whatever fund is allotted, I should be pleased to have part of it, at least, earmarked for that purpose.

Mr. BOILEAU. Can the gentleman also assure us that he will make an effort to have a larger amount appropriated than the amount in the bill as passed by the House?

Mr. JONES. I would rather the gentleman did not press that.

Mr. BOILEAU. I hope the gentleman will make that effort.

Mr. JONES. I am pleased to have the gentleman's thought in the matter.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. I infer the gentleman is of the opinion that this distribution should be made by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. JONES. I do not think that is particularly important. They call in the various groups with respect to the part that affects them, and the Secretary has stated he would call in these groups and let them help work out the program. I do not think they will have any trouble about that.

Mr. McFADDEN. What I am fearful of is that the conference will so mix up this question that the House will not have an opportunity to express itself on these particular matters.

Mr. JONES. We will try to be fair with the House, and I hope the gentleman will not insist on any objection. We must go to conference to get anything, and we have in the offing a program that will really do something for the dairy- and beef-cattle industries and we all know that they have been in extreme need of stabilization. At the same time we can do something of advantage to the public by using some of the funds, as has been outlined, to much better advantage than some other relief funds have been used.

Mr. McFADDEN. Has the gentleman in mind the same method of distribution that was considered in the past—a 60-40 division?

Mr. JONES. No. That was simply a limitation. It must be as much as 40 percent for one or the other.

Mr. McFADDEN. Are these additional funds to be distributed on the same basis?

Mr. JONES. I do not believe there is such a limitation.

Mr. SNELL. It is entirely different.

Mr. JONES. This is a dairy proposition, and it may be necessary to make some readjustment.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is it not a fact that if the money were to be spent in accordance with the La Follette amendment that both the dairy and cattle money spent in that way would help both industries?

Mr. JONES. I am rather inclined to think that is correct. However, I would rather not undertake to construe the amendment at this time.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, considering the assurances I have received from the chairman of the committee, I think the dairy interests will receive fair consideration, and I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. JONES, FULMER, DOXEY, HOPE, and KINZER.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOEPEL. A morning paper publishes the Democratic black list. I should like to know if they are going to publish it in the RECORD now or after election.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 3908. An act for the relief of Joanna A. Sheehan.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 7966) entitled "An act to authorize the Postmaster General to accept and to use landing fields, men, and material of the War Department for carrying the mails by air, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. McKellar, Mr. Hayden, and Mr. Schall to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 8134) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Russell, Mr. Hayden, Mr. Smith, Mr. Keyes, and Mr. Nye to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 8573) to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The bill follows:

H.R. 8573

A bill to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc.:

CONVENTION TO FRAME CONSTITUTION FOR PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

SECTION 1. The Philippine Legislature is hereby authorized to provide for the election of delegates to a constitutional convention, which shall meet in the hall of the house of representatives in the capital of the Philippine Islands, at such time as the Philippine Legislature may fix, but not later than October 1, 1934, to formulate and draft a constitution for the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, subject to the conditions and qualifications prescribed in this act, which shall exercise jurisdiction over all the territory ceded to the United States by the treaty of peace concluded between the United States and Spain on the 10th day of December 1898, the boundaries of which are set forth in article III of said treaty, together with those islands embraced in the treaty between Spain and the United States concluded at Washington on the 7th day of November 1900. The Philippine Legislature shall provide for the necessary expenses of such convention.

CHARACTER OF CONSTITUTION—MANDATORY PROVISIONS

Sec. 2. (a) The constitution formulated and drafted shall be republican in form, shall contain a bill of rights, and shall, either as a part thereof or in an ordinance appended thereto, contain provisions to the effect that, pending the final and complete withdrawal of the sovereignty of the United States over the Philippine Islands—

(1) All citizens of the Philippine Islands shall owe allegiance to the United States.

(2) Every officer of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands shall, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, take and subscribe an oath of office, declaring, among other things, that he recognizes and accepts the supreme authority of and will maintain true faith and allegiance to the United States.

(3) Absolute toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and no inhabitant or religious organization shall be molested in person or property on account of religious belief or mode of worship.

(4) Property owned by the United States, cemeteries, churches, and parsonages or convents appurtenant thereto, and all lands, buildings, and improvements used exclusively for religious, charitable, or educational purposes shall be exempt from taxation.

(5) Trade relations between the Philippine Islands and the United States shall be upon the basis prescribed in section 6.

(6) The public debt of the Philippine Islands and its subordinate branches shall not exceed limits now or hereafter fixed by the Congress of the United States; and no loans shall be contracted in foreign countries without the approval of the President of the United States.

(7) The debts, liabilities, and obligations of the present Philippine government, its Provinces, municipalities, and instrumentalities, valid and subsisting at the time of the adoption of the constitution, shall be assumed and paid by the new government.

(8) Provision shall be made for the establishment and maintenance of an adequate system of public schools, primarily conducted in the English language.

(9) Acts affecting currency, coinage, imports, exports, and immigration shall not become law until approved by the President of the United States.

(10) Foreign affairs shall be under the direct supervision and control of the United States.

(11) All acts passed by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands shall be reported to the Congress of the United States.

(12) The Philippine Islands recognizes the right of the United States to expropriate property for public uses, to maintain military and other reservations and armed forces in the Philippines, and, upon order of the President, to call into the service of such armed forces all military forces organized by the Philippine government.

(13) The decisions of the courts of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States as provided in paragraph (6) of section 7.

(14) The United States may, by Presidential proclamation, exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands and for the maintenance of the government as provided in the constitution thereof, and for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for the discharge of government obligations under and in accordance with the provisions of the constitution.

(15) The authority of the United States High Commissioner to the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, as provided in this act, shall be recognized.

(16) Citizens and corporations of the United States shall enjoy in the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands all the civil rights of the citizens and corporations, respectively, thereof.

(b) The constitution shall also contain the following provisions, effective as of the date of the proclamation of the President recognizing the independence of the Philippine Islands, as hereinafter provided:

(1) That the property rights of the United States and the Philippine Islands shall be promptly adjusted and settled, and that all existing property rights of citizens or corporations of the United States shall be acknowledged, respected, and safeguarded to the same extent as property rights of citizens of the Philippine Islands.

(2) That the officials elected and serving under the constitution adopted pursuant to the provisions of this act shall be constitutional officers of the free and independent government of the Philippine Islands and qualified to function in all respects as if elected directly under such government, and shall serve their full terms of office as prescribed in the constitution.

(3) That the debts and liabilities of the Philippine Islands, its Provinces, cities, municipalities, and instrumentalities, which shall be valid and subsisting at the time of the final and complete withdrawal of the sovereignty of the United States, shall be assumed by the free and independent government of the Philippine Islands; and that where bonds have been issued under authority of an act of Congress of the United States by the Philippine Islands, or any Province, city, or municipality therein, the Philippine government will make adequate provision for the necessary funds for the payment of interest and principal, and such obligations shall be a first lien on the taxes collected in the Philippine Islands.

(4) That the government of the Philippine Islands, on becoming independent of the United States, will assume all continuing obligations assumed by the United States under the treaty of peace with Spain ceding said Philippine Islands to the United States.

(5) That by way of further assurance the government of the Philippine Islands will embody the foregoing provisions (except par. (2)) in a treaty with the United States.

SUBMISSION OF CONSTITUTION TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Sec. 3. Upon the drafting and approval of the constitution by the constitutional convention in the Philippine Islands, the constitution shall be submitted within 2 years after the enactment of this act to the President of the United States, who shall determine whether or not it conforms with the provisions of this act. If the President finds that the proposed constitution conforms substantially with the provisions of this act, he shall so certify to the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, who shall so advise the constitutional convention. If the President finds that the constitution does not conform with the provisions of this act, he shall so advise the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, stating wherein in his judgment the constitution does not so conform and submitting provisions which will in his judgment make the constitution so conform. The Governor General shall in turn submit such message to the constitutional convention for further action by them pursuant to the same procedure hereinbefore defined, until the President and the constitutional convention are in agreement.

SUBMISSION OF CONSTITUTION TO FILIPINO PEOPLE

SEC. 4. After the President of the United States has certified that the constitution conforms with the provisions of this act, it shall be submitted to the people of the Philippine Islands for their ratification or rejection at an election to be held within 4 months after the date of such certification, on a date to be fixed by the Philippine Legislature, at which election the qualified voters of the Philippine Islands shall have an opportunity to vote directly for or against the proposed constitution and ordinances appended thereto. Such election shall be held in such manner as may be prescribed by the Philippine Legislature, to which the return of the election shall be made. The Philippine Legislature shall by law provide for the canvassing of the return and shall certify the result to the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, together with a statement of the votes cast and a copy of said constitution and ordinances. If a majority of the votes cast shall be for the constitution, such vote shall be deemed an expression of the will of the people of the Philippine Islands in favor of Philippine independence, and the Governor General shall, within 30 days after receipt of the certification from the Philippine Legislature, issue a proclamation for the election of officers of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands provided for in the constitution. The election shall take place not earlier than 3 months nor later than 6 months after the proclamation by the Governor General ordering such election. When the election of the officers provided for under the constitution has been held and the results determined, the Governor General of the Philippine Islands shall certify the results of the election to the President of the United States, who shall thereupon issue a proclamation announcing the results of the election, and upon the issuance of such proclamation by the President the existing Philippine government shall terminate and the new government shall enter upon its rights, privileges, powers, and duties, as provided under the constitution. The present government of the Philippine Islands shall provide for the orderly transfer of the functions of government.

If a majority of the votes cast are against the constitution, the existing government of the Philippine Islands shall continue without regard to the provisions of this act.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY AND RIGHTS TO PHILIPPINE COMMONWEALTH

SEC. 5. All the property and rights which may have been acquired in the Philippine Islands by the United States under the treaties mentioned in the first section of this act, except such land or other property as has heretofore been designated by the President of the United States for military and other reservations of the Government of the United States, and except such land or other property or rights or interests therein as may have been sold or otherwise disposed of in accordance with law, are hereby granted to the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands when constituted.

RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES PENDING COMPLETE INDEPENDENCE

SEC. 6. After the date of the inauguration of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands trade relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands shall be as now provided by law, subject to the following exceptions:

(a) There shall be levied, collected, and paid on all refined sugars in excess of 50,000 long tons, and on unrefined sugars in excess of 800,000 long tons, coming into the United States from the Philippine Islands in any calendar year, the same rates of duty which are required by the laws of the United States to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from foreign countries.

(b) There shall be levied, collected, and paid on all coconut oil coming into the United States from the Philippine Islands in any calendar year in excess of 200,000 long tons, the same rates of duty which are required by the laws of the United States to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from foreign countries.

(c) There shall be levied, collected, and paid on all yarn, twine, cord, cordage, rope, and cable, tarred or untarred, wholly or in chief value of manilla (abaca) or other hard fibers, coming into the United States from the Philippine Islands in any calendar year in excess of a collective total of 3,000,000 pounds of all such articles hereinbefore enumerated, the same rates of duty which are required by the laws of the United States to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from foreign countries.

(d) In the event that in any year the limit in the case of any article which may be exported to the United States free of duty shall be reached by the Philippine Islands, the amount or quantity of such articles produced or manufactured in the Philippine Islands thereafter that may be so exported to the United States free of duty shall be allocated, under export permits issued by the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, to the producers or manufacturers of such articles proportionately on the basis of their exportation to the United States in the preceding year; except that in the case of unrefined sugar the amount thereof to be exported annually to the United States free of duty shall be allocated to the sugar-producing mills of the islands proportionately on the basis of their average annual production for the calendar years 1931, 1932, and 1933, and the amount of sugar from each mill which may be so exported shall be allocated in each year between the mill and the planters on the basis of the proportion of sugar to which the mill and the planters are respectively entitled. The government of the Philippine Islands is authorized to adopt the necessary laws and regulations for putting into effect the allocation hereinbefore provided.

(e) The government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands shall impose and collect an export tax on all articles that may be exported to the United States from the Philippine Islands free of duty under the provisions of existing law as modified by the foregoing provisions of this section, including the articles enumerated in subdivisions (a), (b), and (c), within the limitations therein specified, as follows:

(1) During the sixth year after the inauguration of the new government the export tax shall be 5 percent of the rates of duty which are required by the laws of the United States to be levied, collected, and paid on like articles imported from foreign countries;

(2) During the seventh year after the inauguration of the new government the export tax shall be 10 percent of the rates of duty which are required by the laws of the United States to be levied, collected, and paid on like articles imported from foreign countries;

(3) During the eighth year after the inauguration of the new government the export tax shall be 15 percent of the rates of duty which are required by the laws of the United States to be levied, collected, and paid on like articles imported from foreign countries;

(4) During the ninth year after the inauguration of the new government the export tax shall be 20 percent of the rates of duty which are required by the laws of the United States to be levied, collected, and paid on like articles imported from foreign countries;

(5) After the expiration of the ninth year after the inauguration of the new government the export tax shall be 25 percent of the rates of duty which are required by the laws of the United States to be levied, collected, and paid on like articles imported from foreign countries.

The government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands shall place all funds received from such export taxes in a sinking fund, and such funds shall, in addition to other moneys available for that purpose, be applied solely to the payment of the principal and interest on the bonded indebtedness of the Philippine Islands, its Provinces, municipalities, and instrumentalities, until such indebtedness has been fully discharged.

When used in this section in a geographical sense, the term "United States" includes all Territories and possessions of the United States, except the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and the island of Guam.

SEC. 7. Until the final and complete withdrawal of American sovereignty over the Philippine Islands—

(1) Every duly adopted amendment to the constitution of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands shall be submitted to the President of the United States for approval. If the President approves the amendment or if the President fails to disapprove such amendment within 6 months from the time of its submission, the amendment shall take effect as a part of such constitution.

(2) The President of the United States shall have authority to suspend the taking effect of or the operation of any law, contract, or executive order of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, which in his judgment will result in a failure of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands to fulfill its contracts, or to meet its bonded indebtedness and interest thereon or to provide for its sinking funds, or which seems likely to impair the reserves for the protection of the currency of the Philippine Islands, or which in his judgment will violate international obligations of the United States.

(3) The chief executive of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands shall make an annual report to the President and Congress of the United States of the proceedings and operations of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands and shall make such other reports as the President or Congress may request.

(4) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a United States High Commissioner to the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands who shall hold office at the pleasure of the President and until his successor is appointed and qualified. He shall be known as the United States High Commissioner of the Philippine Islands. He shall be the representative of the President of the United States in the Philippine Islands and shall be recognized as such by the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, by the commanding officers of the military forces of the United States, and by all civil officials of the United States in the Philippine Islands. He shall have access to all records of the government or any subdivision thereof, and shall be furnished by the Chief Executive of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands with such information as he shall request.

If the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands fails to pay any of its bonded or other indebtedness or the interest thereon when due or to fulfill any of its contracts, the United States High Commissioner shall immediately report the facts to the President, who may thereupon direct the High Commissioner to take over the customs offices and administration of the same, administer the same, and apply such part of the revenue received therefrom as may be necessary for the payment of such overdue indebtedness or for the fulfillment of such contracts. The United States High Commissioner shall annually, and at such other times as the President may require, render an official report to the President and Congress of the United States. He shall perform such additional duties and functions as may be delegated to him from time to time by the President under the provisions of this act.

The United States High Commissioner shall receive the same compensation as is now received by the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, and shall have such staff and assistants as the President may deem advisable and as may be appropriated for by Congress, including a financial expert, who shall receive for submission to the High Commissioner a duplicate copy of the reports of the insular auditor. Appeals from decisions of the insular auditor may be taken to the President of the United States. The salaries and expenses of the High Commissioner and his staff and assistants shall be paid by the United States.

The first United States High Commissioner appointed under this act shall take office upon the inauguration of the new government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands.

(5) The government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands shall provide for the selection of a Resident Commissioner to the United States, and shall fix his term of office. He shall be the representative of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands and shall be entitled to official recognition as such by all departments upon presentation to the President of credentials signed by the Chief Executive of said government. He shall have a seat in the House of Representatives of the United States, with the right of debate, but without the right of voting. His salary and expenses shall be fixed and paid by the government of the Philippine Islands. Until a Resident Commissioner is selected and qualified under this section, existing law governing the appointment of Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands shall continue in effect.

(6) Review by the Supreme Court of the United States of cases from the Philippine Islands shall be as now provided by law; and such review shall also extend to all cases involving the constitution of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands.

SEC. 8. (a) Effective upon the acceptance of this act by concurrent resolution of the Philippine Legislature or by a convention called for that purpose, as provided in section 17—

(1) For the purposes of the Immigration Act of 1917, the Immigration Act of 1924 (except sec. 13 (c), this section, and all other laws of the United States relating to the immigration, exclusion, or expulsion of aliens, citizens of the Philippine Islands who are not citizens of the United States shall be considered as if they were aliens. For such purposes the Philippine Islands shall be considered as a separate country and shall have for each fiscal year a quota of 50. This paragraph shall not apply to a person coming or seeking to come to the Territory of Hawaii who does not apply for and secure an immigration or passport visa, but such immigration shall be determined by the Department of the Interior on the basis of the needs of industries in the Territory of Hawaii.

(2) Citizens of the Philippine Islands who are not citizens of the United States shall not be admitted to the continental United States from the Territory of Hawaii (whether entering such Territory before or after the effective date of this section) unless they belong to a class declared to be nonimmigrants by section 3 of the Immigration Act of 1924 or to a class declared to be nonquota immigrants under the provisions of section 4 of such act other than subdivision (c) thereof, or unless they were admitted to such Territory under an immigration visa. The Secretary of Labor shall by regulations provide a method for such exclusion and for the admission of such excepted classes.

(3) Any Foreign Service officer may be assigned to duty in the Philippine Islands, under a commission as a consular officer, for such period as may be necessary and under such regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe, during which assignment such officer shall be considered as stationed in a foreign country; but his powers and duties shall be confined to the performance of such of the official acts and notarial and other services, which such officer might properly perform in respect of the administration of the immigration laws if assigned to a foreign country as a consular officer, as may be authorized by the Secretary of State.

(4) For the purposes of sections 18 and 20 of the Immigration Act of 1917, as amended, the Philippine Islands shall be considered to be a foreign country.

(b) The provisions of this section are in addition to the provisions of the immigration laws now in force, and shall be enforced as a part of such laws, and all the penal or other provisions of such laws, not inapplicable, shall apply to and be enforced in connection with the provisions of this section. An alien, although admissible under the provisions of this section, shall not be admitted to the United States if he is excluded by any provision of the immigration laws other than this section, and an alien, although admissible under the provisions of the immigration laws other than this section, shall not be admitted to the United States if he is excluded by any provision of this section.

(c) Terms defined in the Immigration Act of 1924 shall, when used in this section, have the meaning assigned to such terms in that act.

SEC. 9. There shall be no obligation on the part of the United States to meet the interest or principal of bonds and other obligations of the government of the Philippine Islands or of the provincial and municipal governments thereof, hereafter issued during the continuance of United States sovereignty in the Philippine Islands: Provided, That such bonds and obligations hereafter issued shall not be exempt from taxation in the United States or by authority of the United States.

RECOGNITION OF PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE AND WITHDRAWAL OF AMERICAN SOVEREIGNTY

SEC. 10. (a) On the 4th day of July immediately following the expiration of a period of 10 years from the date of the inauguration of the new government under the constitution provided for in this act the President of the United States shall by proclamation withdraw and surrender all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty then existing and exercised by the United States in and over the territory and people of the Philippine Islands, including all military and other reservations of the Government of the United States in the Philippines (except such naval reservations and fueling stations as are reserved under sec. 5), and, on behalf of the United States, shall recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as a separate and self-governing nation and acknowledge the authority and control over the same as the government instituted by the people thereof under the constitution then in force.

(b) The President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into negotiations with the government of the Philippine Islands, not later than 2 years after his proclamation recognizing the independence of the Philippine Islands, for the adjustment and settlement of all questions relating to naval reservations and fueling stations of the United States in the Philippine Islands, and pending such adjustment and settlement the matter of naval reservations and fueling stations shall remain in its present status.

NEUTRALIZATION OF PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

SEC. 11. The President is requested, at the earliest practicable date, to enter into negotiations with foreign powers with a view to the conclusion of a treaty for the perpetual neutralization of the Philippine Islands, if and when Philippine independence shall have been achieved.

NOTIFICATION TO FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

SEC. 12. Upon the proclamation and recognition of the independence of the Philippine Islands, the President shall notify the governments with which the United States is in diplomatic correspondence thereof and invite said governments to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands.

TARIFF DUTIES AFTER INDEPENDENCE

SEC. 13. After the Philippine Islands have become a free and independent nation there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles coming into the United States from the Philippine Islands the rates of duty which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from other foreign countries: Provided, That at least 1 year prior to the date fixed in this act for the independence of the Philippine Islands, there shall be held a conference of representatives of the Government of the United States and the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, such representatives to be appointed by the President of the United States and the Chief Executive of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, respectively, for the purpose of formulating recommendations as to future trade relations between the Government of the United States and the independent government of the Philippine Islands, the time, place, and manner of holding such conference to be determined by the President of the United States; but nothing in this proviso shall be construed to modify or affect in any way any provision of this act relating to the procedure leading up to Philippine independence or the date upon which the Philippine Islands shall become independent.

IMMIGRATION AFTER INDEPENDENCE

SEC. 14. Upon the final and complete withdrawal of American sovereignty over the Philippine Islands the immigration laws of the United States (including all the provisions thereof relating to persons ineligible to citizenship) shall apply to persons who were born in the Philippine Islands to the same extent as in the case of other foreign countries.

CERTAIN STATUTES CONTINUED IN FORCE

SEC. 15. Except as in this act otherwise provided, the laws now or hereafter in force in the Philippine Islands shall continue in force in the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands until altered, amended, or repealed by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands or by the Congress of the United States, and all references in such laws to the government or officials of the Philippines or Philippine Islands shall be construed, insofar as applicable, to refer to the government and corresponding officials respectively of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands. The government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands shall be deemed successor to the present government of the Philippine Islands and of all the rights and obligations thereof. Except as otherwise provided in this act, all laws or parts of laws relating to the present government of the Philippine Islands and its administration are hereby repealed as of the date of the inauguration of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands.

Sec. 16. If any provision of this act is declared unconstitutional or the applicability thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and the applicability of such provisions to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

Sec. 17. The foregoing provisions of this act shall not take effect until accepted by concurrent resolution of the Philippine Legislature or by a convention called for the purpose of passing upon that question as may be provided by the Philippine Legislature.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I will detain the House but a few moments. The pending bill involves no partisanship, no politics, and insofar as I know, little if any dissension in the views of Members of the House.

The bill is substantially a reenactment of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act.

That act was the result of the work of the Insular Affairs Committee of the Senate, the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House, with the earnest and fine efforts of the Commissioners from the Philippine Islands, the sturdy patriot and able Commissioner GUEVARA, and the brilliant OSIAS, whose fine ability and excellent qualities of statesmanship have endeared him to us all. That bill, I assume, is thoroughly understood and has the approval of this House and the entire country. The outstanding work of former Senator HAWES for Philippine independence will go down in history. The former Chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, Mr. HARE, of South Carolina, and Senator CUTTING contributed their statesmanlike and most effective efforts. To these three Americans must go the major credit for Philippine independence. I am not unmindful that the name of Senator PITTMAN will always be associated with those whose assiduous labors have brought about this legislation.

The Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act provided that the legislature of the islands should meet not later than January 17, 1934, to consider the calling of a convention to frame a constitutional form of government for the islands.

The Philippine Legislature, assigning several objections, refused to accept that bill. No further consideration by that legislature can now be had without extension of the time by Congress. Representatives of that school of thought which opposed the bill in the islands, and indeed some of those in the legislative branch of the island government, came to Washington several weeks ago.

A series of conferences followed not only with the President of the United States but also with many of us who are interested in settling the very important question of the independence problem, which has confronted us for many years.

The only change involved under the terms of this bill, or I should say the major change presented in this bill, is that provision in section 10 whereby we agree when independence is accomplished to remove our Army and relinquish the Army reservations. We continue to retain our naval bases and coaling stations, but agree to enter into negotiations with the new independent government to determine the feasibility of further maintenance of our Navy in the islands.

Among those who came to Washington representing that school of thought in the islands, which had opposed the provisions of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act, is the former commissioner, indeed one of the first commissioners from the islands to sit in this House, the splendid patriot, the brilliant Emanuel Juezon, now president of the senate of the Philippine Islands, and who honors us with his presence on the floor of the House today. [Applause.] I am glad all major factions in the islands are now apparently ready to urge acceptance of this bill. With Quezon, Quiniro, and others of their views, joining hands with Roxas, Osmeña, and Osias, there can be no doubt of favorable action and there is glory enough for all.

As the result of conferences with him and others, including advocates of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act, we have the assurance that if the Congress reenacts the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act with the changes I have indicated, it will have the approval of the Filipino people, and the legislature will be called together immediately to give its approval.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand the gentleman's statement, the main objection to the original legislation was the fact that we maintain an army over there and a naval base.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That was one of several objections.

Mr. SNELL. That was one of the outstanding objections?

Mr. McDUFFIE. That was one of the outstanding objections.

Mr. SNELL. And that has been removed?

Mr. McDUFFIE. That has been removed insofar as keeping our Army in the islands is concerned, and while other objections were assigned, those who opposed the bill are now willing to accept it, and present it to the people and urge them to accept it.

Mr. SNELL. And the gentleman is of opinion that with these exceptions it will be ratified very quickly by the Philippine Legislature?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is the gentleman in position to state the attitude of the Navy and Army with reference to these changes?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I assume that the Bureau of Insular Affairs, which is a part of the Army, is favorable to the change and to this bill with some exceptions. They would like to have a few amendments which may be worked out in the future, but they have raised no material objection, insofar as I know. I have heard no objections to passing this bill from the Army or Navy.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Would it be improper if I were to ask as to whether or not the administration has taken a position with reference to this bill?

Mr. McDUFFIE. The attitude of the administration, of course, is represented in a message to Congress by the President of the United States suggesting the enactment of this bill.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. What is the status of the naval stations, as worked out under the provisions of this bill, and the fueling stations?

Mr. McDUFFIE. We retain those after independence is an accomplished fact, but we agree to negotiate with the independent government as to the propriety or feasibility of further retention of naval bases. We further promise to urge neutrality for the islands. The gentleman, I am sure, can see the absolute necessity of that.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. In a moment. The House realizes, I am sure, that it has been the fixed policy of this Government since we acquired the islands ultimately to make them free and independent. Every President, from the lamented McKinley down to the present occupant of the White House, has assumed that attitude, and has expressed properly and correctly the attitude of the American people. President Roosevelt very correctly expressed it when he said in his message to us that "we desire to hold no people over whom we have gained sovereignty through war against their will." As a result of that policy and carrying out our responsibility, and, as I take it, discharging the solemn duty of this Government, this bill, setting up the processes under which ultimate independence may be achieved, is again presented, and we believe, as already stated, that it will be accepted in the islands.

There are 14,000,000 Filipino people, as many people as there are in the Republic of Mexico, a greater population than in any of the 18 countries to the south of us on the Western Hemisphere, with the exception of three. The islands comprise an area as large as all of New England and New York combined. These people have made wonderful strides under the American flag. They have an educational system that ranks amongst the best systems in the world. They have 9,063 schools and colleges, 7,000 of which were established since our flag was raised on the islands. They have a million and a quarter students in these colleges; 30 percent of their revenues is expended for education. Eighty percent of them, I am informed, speak our language, which is required to be taught.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield first to the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH].

Mr. WELCH. Referring to the inquiry of my colleague from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT], the only change in this bill from the bill enacted last year is the one in reference to the military and naval reservations?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. WELCH. That is the only change in the bill?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes. I now yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. COLDEN].

Mr. COLDEN. Is it not a fact that only about one third of the children in the Philippine Islands are in school, and that the average term is only about 3 years?

Mr. McDUFFIE. We have no such information before the committee.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. THURSTON. The chairman of the committee will agree that if this had been initial legislation upon the subject, a number of members of the committee would have insisted on the much shorter term than the provisions in the present bill.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I agree to that. There are some who would like to see independence granted immediately.

Mr. THURSTON. Within a 5-year period.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes; and doubtless some selfish interests want to cut those 14,000,000 people adrift immediately, which might result in their seizure by some nation within 24 hours. To pull down our flag and retire immediately, without giving them an opportunity to readjust their economics and without an opportunity to fix their place in the sun, which they are capable of doing, would be an act of moral cowardice upon the part of the American Republic, especially in the light of present conditions in the Far East. The Congress and the American people are not willing to follow such a course.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. When the gentleman was interrupted he was making a very splendid statement regarding the achievements of the Filipino people. Would he kindly continue that statement in an extension of his remarks, if he has not the time to do so now?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I should be glad to do so. There are 8,442 public schools in the islands, staffed by 28,519 supervisors, principals, and teachers, all Filipinos except about 300. Included in the educational establishment is the university in Manila which was founded in 1611, 25 years before the foundation of Harvard. Many Filipinos are attending colleges and universities in America and other countries. For the last 15 years the health service has been administered almost wholly by Filipinos. Sanitation became one of the first concerns of the American Government, and the present director of the health bureau is a Filipino, as are nearly all of his 522 medical and 2,083 lay assistants. In 1930 there were 105 hospitals of all types in the islands. One of them was founded in 1596. A civil-service system is used in the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, and in 1930 there were more than 21,700 civil-service employees, all but 461 were Filipinos. The administration of justice in the islands is a matter of pride to the Filipino people as well as to Americans. There is a supreme court, 28 courts of first instance in 28 districts, and 865 justices of the peace. There are 31 auxiliary judges who assist the district judges.

All the justices of the peace except two are Filipinos. The supreme court until 1913 numbered 9, 5 Americans and 4 Filipinos. Maj. Gen. William C. Rivers, United States Army, retired, who spent many years in the islands, writing recently, had this to say with reference to the capacity of the Filipino people:

I believe the Filipinos will surprise many by their capacity to govern themselves. Great numbers have long had extensive and successful experience in executive, legislative, and judicial positions. I never heard a rumor against the integrity of a Filipino judge in any of the 26 Provinces, though I was working among people some of whose relatives may have suffered imprisonment or worse after trial before a Filipino judge. The record of the Filipino judges in the Supreme Court and in the provincial courts, in the troublesome post-revolution time and under new and strange codes of procedure, with the innumerable questions arising after the long armed conflicts involving three races and in trials where two languages were used, deserves more mention than it has received.

The bonded indebtedness of the Philippine Islands in 1932 and as of today is $170,000,000, or $65,000,000, against which there is a sinking fund of $50,000,000 now deposited in American banks. The present national debt is but 48 percent of the bonded-debt limit fixed by Congress. The Philippine Government is regularly meeting both interest and the required amortization of its bonded indebtedness. Nearly 92 percent of approximately 13,500,000 inhabitants in the islands are Christians, 4 percent are pagans, and 4 percent are Mohammedans, and there is little or no evidence that the Moros have protested against Christian preponderance in the government.

The commerce of the islands amounts in dollars to approximately $270,000,000 more than 72 percent of which is with the United States. They are our best customers in the purchase of dairy products sold abroad. They wear cotton clothing and purchase much of our cotton. Their national wealth was estimated in 1927 as $5,905,085,000. Former Congressman Hare stated that—

If independence be bestowed on them, the Filipino people will begin their separate existence with a greater patrimony than was possessed by many of the peoples who recently have joined the ranks of sovereign nations.

The most important provisions of the pending bill are:

First. Formation of a constitution to be submitted to the President.

Second. Limitations on importations from the islands. An export tax after the fifth year to be applied on their bonded indebtedness.

Third. Immigration provisions, fixing quota of 50.

Fourth. Providing office of American High Commissioner and prescribing his duties during the interim government.

Fifth. Withdrawal of American sovereignty July 4 following the 10-year period of the Commonwealth government.

Sixth. Relinquishment of the Army bases, including some 300,000 acres of land, after independence is established.

Seventh. Negotiating between the two Governments with reference to retaining the naval bases and fueling station.

The limitations of the hour will not permit recalling all the romantic history of the Filipino people. Much of this is set out in the hearings and in the report of the committee, which I commend to your reading. They are patriotic, proud, ambitious, and possess much culture. He who denies their capacity to manage their own affairs, in my opinion, is not cognizant of present conditions in the islands, nor does he understand the remarkable progress they have made. This people will become, relatively speaking, the thirtieth nation in the world from the standpoint of natural resources, population, and economic development. I am glad to be a Member of this Congress which is carrying out the solemn pledge of our Nation given from year to year, and fulfilling every responsibility in discharging a great American duty in a big American way. I yield now to the Commissioner from the Philippine Islands [Mr. GUEVARA].

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Speaker, to many of the Members of this House the bill now under consideration presents no new issue. The Seventy-second Congress thoroughly considered a similar bill, and the committees of the Senate and House of Representatives held extensive and exhaustive hearings on the economic, political, social, and international aspects of the Philippine question. There are, therefore, no new arguments either for or against the bill.

The Philippine Legislature, acting in accordance with the provisions of section 17 of Public Act No. 311 (after which the bill now under consideration is patterned), saw fit to decline to accept it, in the sincere conviction that political conditions and circumstances would change in the United States in such a way as to assure the modification of some of the provisions which it believed would imperil the political, social, and economic stability of the islands. The Philippine Legislature was mindful that Act No. 311 was the best obtainable from the Seventy-second Congress. Also, it realized the changes that were forthcoming. The message of the President on March 2 of this year, followed by the report of the Committee on Insular Affairs on the bill now under consideration have crystallized the hopes of the Philippine Legislature.

Credit should be given to the Chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE], in his efforts to find a common ground upon which my own fellow countrymen who held divergent views as to the meaning and effect of some of the provisions of act 311 could meet. Needless to say, Mr. McDUFFIE has been completely successful in his undertaking, and I am sure that confidence and harmony will be restored in the Philippines.

I would be recreant to myself if I did not acknowledge at this moment the valuable services rendered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYRINGS], Chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs of the Senate, in making possible the reunion of mind of the Filipinos who supported and opposed Act 311 in their patriotic desires to assure for their mother land a future which will insure happiness and prosperity to their children and their children's children.

Mr. Speaker, I am now in a position where I can say that if the bill now under consideration is passed by the Congress of the United States it will be accepted by the Filipino people. It is my expectation that this House will pass the bill as the Seventy-second Congress did on April 4, 1932.

It is not inopportune to say that I regard the bill now under consideration as the epitome and synthesis of America's aim and purpose in the Philippines. It is the fulfillment of her pledge and the glorious crowning of her humanitarian task.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUEVARA. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Can the gentleman tell the House whether or not this bill, which is substantially the Hawes-Cutting Act, will meet with the approval of all factions in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. GUEVARA. It will.

Mr. CULKIN. There will be no division this time?

Mr. GUEVARA. No division this time.

Mr. CULKIN. Although there is no real distinction between the Hawes-Cutting Act and this bill?

Mr. GUEVARA. There is no distinction, and in view of the message of the President of the United States, there will be no division.

Mr. CULKIN. And there is peace now between the several groups and factions?

Mr. GUEVARA. Oh, yes; there is no question about it.

Mr. CULKIN. It must be gratifying to the distinguished gentleman to have his views finally concurred in by all his nationals.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GUEVARA. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. One of the most eminent, brilliant, and patriotic Filipinos is Commissioner OSIAS. Can the gentleman state whether he is in favor of this bill?

Mr. GUEVARA. Yes; he is in favor of this bill.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] has stated that he would yield the Commissioner from the Philippines an additional 3 minutes.

Mr. BEEDY. I stated to the gentleman from Alabama that I will be glad to extend that courtesy to the gentleman from the Philippines. I will yield him 5 additional minutes.

Mr. GUEVARA. I thank you.

The arrangement proposed in the bill will place the Filipino people in a position of more responsibility, and it lays not only within their reach but in their own hands the instrumentalities of their salvation. The bill also gives the Filipino people an opportunity to work out their destiny in accordance with their own genius and traditions, and to my mind there is no doubt that in this task they will not only preserve what America has done in the last 34 years but also will develop and love it as the precious heritage of future generations.

The part of the bill which grants the Filipino people the right to formulate and adopt their own constitution is the romantic phase of the American sovereignty in the Philippines. The grant of this fundamental right in itself constitutes an event never heretofore recorded in the history of colonization. It is the consecration of those lofty principles for which the American people have fought in the past. It is the imperishable monument to be erected on the graves of those brave American soldiers who fought and died in the Philippines for their flag, not in the name of conquest but for the sake of justice and liberty. While this humanitarian spirit guides the mind of the American people we can say that the world is safe from tyranny. The small and weak nations can turn their eyes to the United States for relief and inspiration with full confidence that the call to duty will not fail to find response.

The acknowledgment of the right of the Filipino people to formulate and adopt their own constitution is the glorious culmination of American efforts to build a new nation in the Far East. With this grant the Filipino people can face the world and say with pride that America's interests are their interests and her safety their safety.

As to the time fixed in the bill when independence for the Philippines shall be granted, it is within the wisdom and sense of justice of the American people. It is to be reminded that the aims and purposes of the United States in the Philippine Islands were and are to assist the inhabitants therein, firstly, to prepare for self-government, and, secondly, for their independent life. The fulfillment of this task, as announced by the United States, necessarily requires a friendly and sympathetic spirit. Not only do the Filipino people need a reasonable period of economic adjustment like that granted to Spain by the United States in the Treaty of Paris, but American investment in the Philippines, made under the auspices of American sovereignty, should in fairness and justice be given ample time either to liquidate or to continue if the new situation to be created by the bill proves satisfactory and advantageous.

This policy not only will not cause any detriment to the best interests of the United States, but it will, without question, place her in the position to say that she has completed her mission in the Philippines with honor to herself and with justice to the Philippines.

If this policy and philosophy which inspired the formulation of the bill now under consideration is finally adopted by the Congress of the United States, the Filipino people can look to the future with confidence. The United States has helped them to solidify the cultural and political foundation of self-government. This mission would not be complete if that help were not extended also to strengthen the structure upon which the independent government of the Philippines is to be built. The bill covers this aim and purpose. It translates into reality what America announced to the world at the inception of her occupation of the Philippines.

Mr. Speaker, it would be presumptuous for me to say that the cooperation of the Philippines would ever be needed by the United States in her international affairs. However,

I conceive it to be my duty to say that the bill under consideration assures the loyal, friendly, and undying gratitude of the Filipino people to the United States. They will be attached to this Nation by spiritual bonds which are stronger than any political or physical ties, and consequently there is nothing that they possess which they would refuse to offer to the service of the United States.

I wish to say before concluding that on this momentous occasion, when the final solution of our common problem is about to be reached, it is indeed inspiring to see both parties cooperating to make of the bill a document expressing the wishes and longings of both the United States and the Philippine Islands. The unanimous vote of the Committee on Insular Affairs of this House in reporting this bill proves my statement. Therefore, permit me to convey my gratitude and that of the Filipino people. [Applause.]

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, this is a reenactment of the Hawes-Cutting Act which passed this House 2 years ago. I opposed it at that time, and I oppose it now. I hope my good friend, the Commissioner from the Philippine Islands, and my other good friend, the president of the Senate of the Philippine Islands, will not take amiss anything that I may say in opposition to this bill, because I have high regard not only for them but for the Filipino people.

I opposed this bill 2 years ago because I honestly and sincerely believe that under the Constitution of the United States the Congress of the United States has no right to turn the Philippine Islands loose without a constitutional amendment. Our title to the Philippine Islands is better than our title to a large part of continental United States, and I do not believe there is anyone here who would agree that we could turn loose Texas, Alaska, Arizona, and New Mexico, or Florida, for example, without a constitutional amendment.

Our title to the Philippine Islands not only came by treaty but also by purchase.

However, I am not going to discuss the constitutional question further. Constitutional lawyers and judges who have examined into this question have agreed that the Congress of the United States has no right to alienate the Philippine Islands without a constitutional amendment. I am simply stating that I have studied this question for many years, and I honestly and sincerely believe that the Congress has not the right to alienate this or any other American territory legally acquired.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I only have 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the constitutional inability of the Congress to act is one of the reasons why I oppose this bill and why I did so 2 years ago.

Furthermore, I do not believe this bill is fair to the Philippine people or that it is fair to the high moral purpose that this country of ours has shown toward the Philippine people for the past thirty-odd years. I know they are willing to accept this bill, but I believe honestly in their hearts they are only doing it because it is the best thing that they can get and because of home politics. When this bill passed 2 years ago, those of you who were in the House will recall the persistent efforts of lobbyists who did not like the fact that Philippine sugar was coming in, lobbyists who did not like the fact that coconut oil was coming into this country from the Philippine Islands, and when the bill passed 2 years ago the whole atmosphere on the floor of this House was to get rid of the Philippine Islands. They did not care what became of the Filipinos. I, for one, do care what becomes of them. I believe we have a high moral purpose to carry out, and I, for one, believe that if this bill should be defeated, a much better and more satisfactory arrangement for the future of the Philippine Islands could be worked out if we tackled the problem with a high moral purpose, and without any thought of sugar and coconut oil.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Is the gentleman really in favor of the independence of the Philippine Islands, deep down in his heart?

Mr. BACON. No. I will state frankly that my personal belief, after many years of study of this question, is that eventually a dominion status might be worked out for the Philippine people so that the Philippines might have the same relation to the United States as Canada and Australia have to Great Britain.

I appreciate that my opposition to the bill is futile, but I do want to express my sincere convictions on the subject at this time, and I want to do so because I have visited the Philippine Islands, and I have probably traveled more extensively in the Philippine Islands than any Member of Congress. I have a sincere liking for the Filipino people. I want to be fair to them as well as fair to the United States and to the civilized world. This bill is fair to no one. We are scuttling our entire position in the Far East because of local selfish interests. The Far East today is in a troubled and uncertain state. By passing this bill we are adding to the uncertainties. For the next 8 years we are putting ourselves in the perilous position of having great responsibilities without authority. Continued American authority in the Philippines would make for stability and tranquillity in the entire Far East. Many momentous questions are involved, and yet we are passing this bill with but 40 minutes of debate.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH].

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to again take the time of the House to discuss this bill, with which every Member is familiar. A question has been raised, however, with reference to section 8 of the bill, the section concerning immigration.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WELCH. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is section 8 in the bill now under consideration the same as the immigration section of the bill which was passed last year?

Mr. WELCH. Section 8 of this bill is identically the same as section 8 of the original bill; there is no change whatsoever.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Was any opposition shown to this section by the Philippine people when the matter was being considered?

Mr. WELCH. I have been informed that the representatives of the Philippine people who are here expressed a desire to have this section changed, but they did not press it, and a change was not recommended by the President in his message to Congress.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I have not had time to read this section carefully. As I remember, however, the immigration quota was fixed at 50 pending the final independence of the Filipinos; and after that they would take the same status as other people of that race.

Mr. WELCH. Exactly. Under the interim government they will have a quota of 50 not eligible to citizenship; at the expiration of the interim government, or at the time of complete independence, they will have the same quota as other nations whose nationals are not eligible to citizenship; that is, 100.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WELCH. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Is this satisfactory to the people of California and the west coast?

Mr. WELCH. It is very satisfactory to us. As a matter of fact, the original bill, the Hawes-Cutting bill, and the Hare bill, contained no immigration provision. Section 8 was inserted in the bill at my advocacy during its consideration by the Committee on Insular Affairs, of which I am a member.

I might say in passing that the entire California delegation joined with me in this request to the committee. It was inserted in the bill and was approved by every member of both the House and Senate committees. There has been no change from the original bill.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Is this provision satisfactory to the American Federation of Labor and other labor groups?

Mr. WELCH. Absolutely so; as a matter of fact, they participated in the preparation of section 8, which was drawn by the legislative counsel of the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. COLDEN].

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, about 4 years ago at this time of the year I was approaching the Philippine Islands. As some of my fellow passengers were residents of the islands and were returning from a trip to their native land to their oriental home by adoption, I inquired about the question of Philippine independence. The first time my question was answered I was somewhat surprised and shocked by the abrupt reply of a rugged American who had been a veteran in the Spanish-American War and had participated in the Philippine campaign. His former home was in North Carolina, but now he was a prominent business man of Manila. He replied: "Nobody in the Philippines cares a damn about independence excepting the politicians, who use 'independence' as a popular slogan for reelection. Much of the propaganda you read back home for Philippine independence is financed by the Sugar Trust and sugar interests of New York and Cuba. The sugar clique want to get rid of the islands in order to get more money for their own sugar. It is all a lot of buncombe and hokum."

My American friend was so emphatic and utterly frank—but yet I was not convinced. I discussed the same topic with a refined gentleman of Spanish ancestry who was born on the islands and lived on the Island of Negros. His reply was characteristic of his race, and he replied in soft and polite language, but the meaning was identically the same as given by the American. When I arrived in Manila, I conversed with American newspapermen and business men, and invariably the reply was the same. I conversed with Army and Navy men and American teachers at Baguio, the mountain city, but there seemed to be no difference of opinion among those who are most competent to judge.

During the last "lame duck" session of Congress, beginning in December 1932, I sat on the floor of the House and listened to the debate on the Philippine independence bill, which was then discussed and passed. I was disappointed at the repetition of the arguments relating to sugar and butter and cottonseed oil. Conceding that the commercial aspect is of importance and should be considered, yet there are other factors that deserve careful consideration from the Membership of this House. Before we haul down the American flag and set a helpless people adrift in the face of a neighboring empire that is rampant with imperialism and militarism, we should pause and reflect. A nation that is disregarding its solemn treaties as mere scraps of paper, a nation that today is maintaining a mandate over the islands of the Pacific and flaunting the League of Nations, a nation that has invaded the territory of a peaceful neighbor and is taking advantage of China's chaotic domestic afflictions should not be given a license to override the will of the Filipinos. We cannot at this moment overlook the conditions that exist in the affairs and policies of nations whose good will, cooperation, and international integrity are necessary to preserve the independence and the Territorial boundaries of the people we profess to protect.

So far as my brief observation goes, the opinion of many substantial citizens of the Philippine Islands is that when the American flag is hauled down, the peaceful penetration of the islands by Japan will begin. Cut off from American markets and American ships driven from oriental shores, and Japanese business men taking up where America leaves off, the Philippines will fall into the lap of Japan. The question involved at this time is more than the competition of sugar and butter and cottonseed oil, but reaches into the relations of this country with the nations of the Orient. It is our duty as Members of Congress to weigh this subject from the national standpoint and the international welfare of the other nations concerned.

What facilities have the islands for national defense when the American flag is hauled down, when they are turned adrift and must rely upon themselves? Let us take a look at the map for a moment. The Philippine Archipelago consists of not a few islands but of 7,083 islands scattered over a distance from north to south of 1,152 miles and from east to west of 682 miles. Spread over the map of the United States the islands would reach from Chicago to Galveston north and south, and from Washington to beyond the borders of Indiana east and west. These islands have more than 20 harbors, a coastline of more than 11,000 miles, exceeding that of the United States proper. One of the first burdens that must be assumed by the Philippines is the building of a navy, not only for the preservation of authority and order in the numerous and scattered islands, but for the purpose of resisting foreign attack. And what a feeble fleet in any event, to meet a militaristic neighbor with one of the strongest battle fleets of the world!

The military defense of the islands will present a similar problem. What possibility of defense have the 7,083 islands against a hostile first-class military power? At present the islands have a constabulary of from 6,000 to 7,000 men which must be materially increased with the withdrawal of the American flag. Thus the requirement of the army necessary to preserve order and maintain sovereignty over a considerable population, represented to be bitterly opposed to Philippine administration, will involve a second burden not now borne by the Filipinos under American protection.

Instead of confining our consideration to sugar and butter and cottonseed oil, should we not give some consideration to the question of education and the ability of the islands to govern themselves? The area of the islands is over 114,000 square miles, which is about the size of Arizona, comparatively speaking, or about the combined area of the six New England States plus New York, Delaware, and about one half of New Jersey. The population is approximately 12,000,000, which is about the same as that of the State of New York, or more than twice that of California or Texas but less than one fifth of the population of Japan, her militant neighbor.

Spain in her rule of 300 years over the Philippine Islands gave the majority of the people the Christian religion and established a culture and a love of music that is rare among orientals. The visitor to these Far East islands is at once impressed at the more hopeful and happier attitude of mind of the Filipino people as compared with other orientals. Someone has said that the Spaniard came to the islands with a sword in one hand and the Bible in the other, but that the American came with a rifle in one hand and a school book in the other. The Americans have made three outstanding contributions to the islands in the brief period of American protection and direction—sanitation, modern highways, and education. I have heard it said that in no other country of the world are children so eager for education and that they actually cry to go to school.

Notwithstanding the planting of the American school on the islands and the enthusiastic reception accorded to it, but 36 percent of the children have the advantage of the American school. Nearly two thirds are denied this great privilege because of the lack of facilities. During the first 25 years of American occupation, between six and seven million children were of school age, but only 530,000 completed the primary course, 160,000 finished the intermediate course, and but 15,500 graduated from high school. The average period of attendance is 3 years or less. The total number speaking English in the islands is about 1,000,000, or about 1 person in 12. Such is the status of education, according to Nicholas Roosevelt, a well-known authority on the Far East. Later authorities, however, increase the number of English-speaking Filipinos.

National unity is an important and essential factor in self-government of any people. Authorities state that the Filipino people speak seven or eight languages as distinctive as the languages of Europe. It is estimated that more than 80 dialects are used. The people of one community are unable to converse or understand those of another community but a few miles away. The islands of the south are peopled with the Moros, who are Mohammedans. A religious hatred has existed between them and the Filipinos proper for centuries. The mountain people are another distinct people, with little sympathy with the majority, and the prejudices of these are shared by both classes.

What a soil in which to plant a nation! Would it not seem to be just and proper to consider this situation as well as sugar and butter and cottonseed oil? The hauling-down of the American flag will fan the embers of tribal and religious hatred that have been smoldering these years and may burst forth into internecine warfare and domestic dissension and bloodshed that will be destructive of the institutions that are yet in their infancy and, if protected and cultivated, promise to bring about a common language and the dissemination of democratic ideals and a national unity that will in time enable these people to develop a peaceful, progressive, and prosperous destiny.

The American advocates of Filipino independence speak much of sugar and butter and cottonseed oil—too much commercialism and too little statesmanship. Permit me to call your attention to the Filipino presentation of this subject. The two eloquent Delegates from the islands have many times plead to the Members of this House for independence. They make frequent use of those cherished words of "freedom" and "liberty." They have submitted a platform and seven-point program. In reading it I do not find a single objective that cannot be more easily achieved under the protective arm of Uncle Sam, his Army and his Navy, and his philanthropic and sympathetic interest than can be achieved by a helpless people set adrift with a warlike and imperialistic nation less than 100 miles away.

Under the American flag these people have an opportunity to develop a universal school system and teach their citizenship a common language and common ideals of democracy, the very foundation of a sound destiny. Under the direction of the American Government, these people have an unmolested opportunity to develop sanitation, highways, railways, and develop a system of communication and transportation that will cement their commerce, their understandings, and develop a regard for each other. In their present status they are protected by a flag that frees them of the burdens of any army, navy, and the entanglements of diplomacy and enables them to concentrate on their domestic development. What other peoples of the Orient are so advantageously situated, enjoying all the freedom and liberties of domestic pursuits and unhampered with the burdens of militarism and autocratic government and undisturbed by internal dissension and factional strife? What other people in all Asia occupy 7,083 gems of the Pacific, enjoying the liberty and freedom of preparing for a safe and sound destiny, protected at home and from dangers beyond their borders?

Mr. Speaker, the first paragraph of the platform and seven-point program of our esteemed delegates and their friends contains an appeal for support and for votes. Here I quote:

In the present titanic struggle for a cause which involves the life, the liberty, and the happiness not only of the present generation but of generations yet unborn.

Such a statement is not justified by fact in my estimation but is only a rhetorical appeal of patriotic and eloquent fiction. Instead of lashing their supporters into a rhetorical foam they should be urging Uncle Sam to remain in these islands and to protect their people until they have developed through a free school system, a common language, and a national unity and an understanding of the fundamentals of democracy that will assure themselves of stability at home and respect abroad that will permit their untrammelled progress on the road to a greater destiny.

There are other factors from the American viewpoint that should be considered, other than sugar and butter and cottonseed oil. Setting the Philippines adrift and forcing them to find another market for their products in order that they may survive economically, what are we doing to ourselves? There is more justification for California to favor Filipino independence than any other State in the Union. The Filipino laborer who works in the city or the country displaces an American employee. It is much more serious than the competition of sugar and butter and cottonseed oil. Cheap labor from Mexico, the Hindu from India, the Japanese, and the Chinese, and the Filipino bring down standards of living so as to deprive the American laborer of employment. I am decidedly in favor of an embargo on all cheap foreign labor including the Filipino. But I believe this menace can be eliminated without hauling down our flag in the Philippines.

This can be said in defense of the cheap foreign labor in California. Most of these laborers were imported into this country by Americans who desired to exploit them and to profit by their labor. Many of the Filipinos in California were brought by the Navy, which utilized them in a menial capacity. Some of them came from the Hawaiian Islands, where they were brought to work on the plantations, just as were the Portuguese, the Puerto Ricans, the Chinese, the Koreans, the Japanese that preceded them. It is to the credit of many Filipinos that they arose above their environment and sought a more abundant life. Not they but their exploiters should be blamed and curbed.

Pardon this digression, but the Philippine bill means the driving of the ships of America from the shores of the Orient. Sugar, copra, vegetable oils, tobacco, and rope are important items of cargo. Rubber would in time become a valuable export from the islands if American capital had any assurance of the permanency of American protection. The neglect of the development of rubber in the islands is forceful evidence of the lack of confidence in the protection of investments and property under the uncertainties of Filipino government. When the American flag is hauled down, the ships of Japan will drive the American flag from every port of the Orient. Have you ever enjoyed the thrill of seeing the American flag flying from the ships of America in foreign seas? But in voting for the Philippine bill you are voting to drive the flag from every oriental sea where you have expended so many millions of money to maintain it. You are inviting the ships of foreign and competing nations to carry these cargoes from the islands that have contributed materially to our ships that circle the globe and are familiar in its most important ports.

China is the greatest potential market of the world. If the industry and the frugality of China were fostered by a stable and progressive government and the Chinese worker could provide himself with the necessities and few comforts of food, clothing, and shelter, China could absorb the surpluses of America. China is one of the world's largest consumers of cotton and that market can be tremendously expanded by the stability and prosperity of that unfortunate people. If the hunger of China were appeased, our surplus wheat would be consumed in a few months.

If this country had expended a dime in stabilizing the Government of China where it has expended a dollar in the muddles of Europe, we would be enjoying an enormous commerce with China now. Manila is the front door to south China. It is but 400 miles away. An easy step for commercial purposes but far enough for naval defense. French Indo-China is the same distance, and Siam, the Malay States, Singapore, and the Dutch East Indies beyond. Under the protection of the United States, Manila occupies a strategic location in regard to the trade of the Orient.

In addition to the tremendous possibilities of future trade with China, Japan and Russia afford inviting opportunities. Siberia is the New West of the Orient and possesses great natural resources just beginning to yield its riches to the oncoming tide of immigration. It is significant that southern California has already sent the first colony of Americans to this new Eldorado. These may prove the pioneers to an important migration and lay the foundation for a valuable commerce with the Russian ports on the Pacific.

But, you may ask, what has this to do with our relationship to the Philippines? Commerce depends to a large extent upon the friendliness of nations. Russia, England, France, China, and Holland are all deeply interested in maintaining the balance of power and the maintenance of the peace of the Orient. War in the Pacific may involve several of the great nations of the world, including the United States. Our remaining in the Philippines and assisting in maintaining the balance of power is assurance of peace. Hauling down our flag and departing from the islands is an invitation to the nations intoxicated with imperialism to invade and possess the defenseless Islands.

The American flag is a warning for others to keep out and also an influence to retard the imperialistic designs of unscrupulous governments.

Every fourth person in the world is a Chinese. His has been a friendly people. With America in the Orient, he has a friendly neighbor at his door. Think of the disappointment of the Chinese people when they learn that America has hauled down her flag and is no longer a near and friendly neighbor. What will his respect be for our flag if it is hauled down because of sugar and butter and cottonseed oil? What will be his opinion of this Nation which has heralded its ideals of democracy to every cranny of the globe? What will be his feelings when the unfriendly flag of the "rising sun" supercedes the Stars and Stripes and his ancient enemy with its islands and its ships stretches a screen of guns and hostile implements of war before the doors of every port of the great Chinese Republic?

Mr. Speaker, to haul down the American flag in the Orient is to invite the disgust of every nation hoping to preserve the balance of power and the peace of the world in the Orient. Mr. Speaker, the lowering of our flag in the Philippines and the sound of the bugle of our retreat will not only pain the hearts of our friends in the Orient but it will inflame to a greater disregard the greedy ambitions of a peaceful people who at the present hour are intoxicated by the illusions of military ambition.

You may raise the question of self-determination. But self-determination presupposes national unity, popular education, ability to provide national defense, an understanding of the fundamentals of democracy. But what about self-determination in Florida, Louisiana, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Alaska? Let us not be led into a false path by the chanting of a subtle shibboleth.

When the people of the islands have begun to reap the rewards of that great institution, the American school, when their people read a common language and speak a common tongue, when they have reached a point in their development that they feel the inspiration of the spirit as well as the forms of democracy, when they are equipped to govern for the common good, then and when their neighbors to the north have yielded to a government of peace and progress and that has a proper regard for its solemn covenants, then we can in honor take down our flag and march away without bringing an apology to those who fought and to those who died to put the flag over the citadels and the castles of an oriental realm.

Let us not forget that if you grant this bill before these people have reached national unity and an understanding of democracy you are wiping out the destiny that Admiral Dewey and his naval heroes won for you by his historic and brilliant victory; you are saying to every American veteran who fought in the Philippine campaign and who suffered the ravages of tropic jungles and a torrid climate, "You fought and died in vain. You won an empire that has been surrendered to sugar and butter and cottonseed oil."

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in 2 minutes one cannot make much of an argument for a bill; but I want to say that I introduced a bill for the immediate independence of the Philippine Islands the first term I was in Congress.

I have never voted for a high protective tariff on oil or on anything else; that is not what I am interested in. I am interested in carrying out our solemn pledge to these people to give them, if I had my way, immediate and complete independence.

These people have an ancient civilization. The average man who discusses this question, and the propaganda that is spread by the sugar interests which, by the way, are opposed to this measure, would lead one to believe that these people are in the same savage state the American tribes were in at the time the new world was discovered; but let me call your attention to the fact that the Filipinos had long since emerged from the Stone Age and were using steel instruments in 1519. They killed Magellan in a battle that year with steel instruments. They have a civilization that goes back as far as that of the Japanese or that of the Chinese; and to say that we are giving them something they cannot handle is beside the question, it seems to me. In my opinion, they can take as good care of themselves as many of the other nations of the world are doing at this time.

I am extremely anxious to see the American people carry out their solemn pledge and give these people immediate independence, if possible, and if this is not possible, to give it to them as quickly as we can.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. Is it not a fact that if our distinguished predecessor had spoken to the Tories in the days of the American Revolution they would have been opposed to the independence of our Colonies?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. The average man is looking out for his own selfish interest. The Chamber of Commerce of the United States in the Philippines do not seem to think that any people are capable of governing themselves.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I also yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, as a result of the war with Spain the United States of America came into accidental possession of the paradise of the Far East. President McKinley and every President of the United States since that time stated and reiterated the position of America regarding the Philippine people and their domain. It was a solemn, sacred, and a voluntary promise of freedom and independence at the very first opportunity. I have no patience with anyone who will advance the sweet argument here against the independence of the Filipino people. The argument against Filipino independence is plainly a question of sugar, and sugar is not the all-important thing in the lives of the Filipino people. They want the right of self-government, of which they are thoroughly competent. They are entitled to immediate independence. As a matter of fact they are prepared for independence and are in a far better position at this moment and have been for years than the colonies were at the time they fought for their independence against England.

I am not fully satisfied with the terms or the provisions of this bill as it stands. May I compliment the Filipino people, their legislature, their leaders, and the brilliant statesman, the president of the Philippine Senate, Senor Quezon, that they are satisfied with so little, that they have made such modest demands, and in this they have shown their faith in the Government of the United States.

First of all, I should like to see the immediate withdrawal on the part of the United States, and negotiation afterwards, or, as a compromise, I should like to see the probationary period of American domination reduced to not over 5 years. It would be my greatest ambition to see Frank Murphy, the greatest of the Governors General of the Philippine Islands, as the last Governor General there and the first High Commissioner of the new Philippine republic.

I have visited the islands and have heard the objections against Philippine independence, and these objections always emanate from interloper Americans who are living off the fat of the land. If you want the correct sentiment as to whether the Filipino people want independence or not, do not ask a former South Carolinian or someone from Michigan who lives a life of ease out there. Ask somebody who was born and raised there. Ask a Filipino how he feels about freedom and liberty as we Americans know it in this country. There is no question about this attitude and answer. If you place the matter before the people of the Philippine Islands, they will declare in unmistakable language, so that even the opposition will understand, for full and complete independence. America should grant no less than that which she fought for and won for herself.

I feel very keenly on this question of Philippine independence. There should be no condition or argument advanced against it, because there is no tenable argument that can be made against granting liberty and freedom. These people want it, and they should have that which every President of the United States has declared himself as being in favor of in a language that was unmistakable.

It is high time that America discharge her obligations to these people, else they will lose confidence in our veracity. The question of sugar, copra, and whether our trade balance is for or against us makes very little difference. The prime question is the question of the happiness and the ambition of these people to govern themselves. They await immediate relief, and America is honor bound to discharge her obligation by granting it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is it not true that many that resist independence for these people have investments in the islands amounting to something like $247,000,000?

Mr. DINGELL. That is in my estimation one of the fundamental reasons why the Philippine people are not independent today.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. And are there not others opposed to the independence of the Philippine Islands who own soap factories in San Pedro and some parts of New York?

Mr. DINGELL. That is also true. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER].

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, I favor the pending bill, H.R. 8573, which is in essence and substance the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill, which the Seventy-second Congress passed over the veto of President Hoover.

I have been a consistent and militant advocate of Philippine independence. I voted for and advocated the enactment of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill, which had the unqualified approval of PEDRO GUEVARA and CAMILO OSIAS, Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands, and also of the Special Philippine Independence Mission, headed by Sergio Osmeña and Manuel Roxas. Their place in history is secure. I also understand Hon. Manuel Quezon endorsed and favored the enactment of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill.

When party passions in the Philippines have subsided and when the political feuds in these islands have ended, the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act will stand out in history as one of the monumental charters of human liberty. It marks the manumission of a race of 14,000,000 people, and the birth of a republic in the Far East that will exert a potential influence in the Pacific, awaken the slumbering Asiatic millions, and imbue them with a passion for freedom and representative government.

I will enumerate the difference between the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill and the McDuffie bill:

The title to the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill is as follows:

An act to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands and to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes.

The title to the McDuffie bill is as follows:

A bill to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

The words "complete independence" mean no more than the word "independence." Independence is defined as "the state or quality of being independent; freedom from dependence; exemption from reliance on or controlled by others; self-subsistence or maintenance; direction of one's own affairs without interference."

The Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act provided that the Philippine Legislature should call a convention to meet not later than January 17, 1934, to frame and submit to the Philippine people for adoption, a constitution for the Philippine Commonwealth. The McDuffie Act extends that time to not later than October 1, 1934.

Only in one provision does the McDuffie Act materially differ from the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act. In sections 5 and 10 of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act the United States Government retains both military and naval reservations, while in sections 5 and 10 of the McDuffie Act the United States does not retain any military reservations, but does retain naval reservations and fueling stations. In other words, at the end of the 10-year transition period, under the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act the United States could have retained both naval and military bases, while under the McDuffie bill the United States can retain only naval bases and fueling stations in the Philippines, and within 2 years after the withdrawal of our sovereignty the United States and the Philippine Commonwealth may enter into negotiations to adjust and settle all questions relating to naval reservations and fueling stations of the United States in the Philippine Islands, and pending such adjustment and settlement the matter of naval reservations and fueling stations shall remain in its present status. It is to be hoped that all political parties, blocs, and groups in the Philippines will accept this measure and harmoniously cooperate in building their new Commonwealth and preparing their people for their duties and responsibilities as a member of the sisterhood of nations.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, may I read for the RECORD a telegram from the majority floor leader of the Senate and of the House of Representatives of the Philippine Islands on behalf of the senate and the house of representatives. This telegram reads as follows:

On behalf of the majority of the senate and of the house of representatives we endorse the McDuffie-Tydings bill and request that it be passed by Congress. If said bill is enacted into law during the life of the present legislature, it will be accepted by the said legislature.

PAREDES,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
RECTO,
Majority Floor Leader of the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who desire to do so may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the remaining time, 30 seconds, to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON].

(Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to vote for this bill that the Committee on Insular Affairs is bringing up today under suspension of the rule, because I am in favor of the independence of the Philippine Islands, but I think under this bill it will require too long a time. Ever since the United States signed the treaty with Spain and took over the Philippine Islands it has pledged these people their freedom, and President after President has repeatedly made the statement that, when the Philippine Islands were ready, they would be granted their independence. The Filipinos have been ready for this for many years, and yet the past administrations have failed to grant them their freedom that they are so deserving of.

As a liberty-loving people ourselves, we cannot escape the responsibilities that fall upon our shoulders in meeting this problem, and we should pass legislation that will grant the people of these islands their own democratic form of government that they have been fighting for for so many years. This is not only a problem of vital concern for the citizens of the Philippine Islands but it is a vital problem of our own Nation. The farmers of this country, as well as the laborers, must be protected from the flood of imports that have been produced by these islands. The things that we are producing and the prices which our producers are getting have been forced down to new all-time minimums. We can do much to correct the evils of this vicious flood of imports by voting for a bill that will provide for immediate independence.

At the outset of this session I introduced the companion measure of Senator KING, which will give the Philippines their complete independence within the shortest possible time. The passage of my measure would immediately set the dairy farmers, the cotton farmers, and the sugar growers free from the yoke of a strangulation hold that the Philippine producers now hold over them.

It is needless for me to say that hundreds of thousands of tons of sugar and millions of pounds of fats and oils coming free into this country should be stopped, or it will at once set free the unfair competition that our producers have had to face in beating down this low-price flood of cheap substitutes. With millions of coconut trees producing already, it takes but a moment's reflection to visualize what will happen to our dairy industry in the future.

Through the passage of my butter resolution, when I was a Member of the Senate, which has brought millions of dollars to the dairy farmers of this country we had hoped at that time to place a barrier on imported butter products. We hope that this committee bill will be amended in the Senate so as to give the Philippines their independence within the shortest possible time, as their independence will bolster and protect American agriculture for the American farmer.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I esteem it a privilege to have been present in the House of Representatives today and to have participated in the applause when the name of the Honorable Manuel L. Quezon, the President of the Philippine Senate, and former Commissioner to Congress from the Philippine Islands, was mentioned by Mr. McDUFFIE, the Chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, during his presentation of H.R. 8573, to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands.

The applause was a deserved tribute to the man who was a pioneer in Congress in the cause of the independence of his country, and perhaps there is no Member of Congress who has any better title than I, on this historic occasion, to pay an added tribute to him. As the Members applauded his name, I looked across at him seated in the Hall and my memory bridged the gap of 25 long years since I first saw him in the House of Representatives in 1909 and listened to his maiden speech in Congress, a brilliant and masterly effort which won him instant recognition as a statesman, although at that time he was perhaps under 30 years of age.

Four years later I dropped out of Congress, but I have kept track of his career during all this long interval, a career devoted to the service of his country and the cause of its independence. It is my sincere wish that not only may he live to see his life's work crowned with success, but that his distinguished abilities and unswerving record of loyalty and service to his country may be finally crowned and rewarded by his election as the first president of the Philippine republic.

The basis of my sentiment and regard for Senator Quezon is deep rooted. It originated in a struggle during the Sixty-first Congress for the rights of the Filipino people, to which

I feel peculiarly entitled to write the final chapter at this time, a struggle we waged practically alone and which seemingly ended in defeat, but which I have only just learned was crowned with success, to the lasting benefit of the people of the islands. I never knew the last chapter until after the lapse of 21 years, when I again met Senator Quezon as his guest at a dinner recently given by him at Washington in honor of the Honorable George W. Dern, Secretary of War.

Let me review the story in brief. There are few Members in the present Congress who have any knowledge of it, because when I returned to the House of Representatives after a lapse of 20 years, I found among its Membership of 435 men only 6 familiar faces. Such are the ravages of time and politics.

Shortly after coming to Congress in 1909, my attention was turned to insular affairs, owing to my membership on the Insular Affairs Committee. The story begins. When the United States acquired the Philippine Islands from Spain there was taken over from the religious order of Friars, certain large tracts of rich farming lands, much of it located in the vicinity of Manila. The avowed purpose of the dis-possession of its owners was to break these large tracts up into small farm holdings among the tenant farmers. Contrary to this avowed and beneficent purpose, I discovered that these lands were being leased in large tracts to certain sugar interests in the United States. As many of the persons who were involved in the controversy which ensued my discovery of this perversion and violation of the solemn contract of this Government and the rights of the Filipinos have now passed from the scene, I shall mention no names.

I introduced a resolution to investigate this situation, and subsequently many other resolutions, bit by bit dragging out the required information. The committee was against me, the House was against me, the administration was against me. I forced recognition to move the passage of the resolution under dramatic conditions, taking advantage of a parliamentary situation on the last night of a session of Congress, which need not be rehearsed here.

I was made to pay dearly for my victory. When the ensuing session of Congress convened several of the executive heads of the Philippine government had been brought to Washington, together with what was said to have been tons of documents, and from the Bureau of Insular Affairs, also in the hands of the opposition, a session-long fight was conducted. Except for the assistance rendered me by the then Commissioner Quezon, it was a single-handed fight against great odds. As is only too frequently the case, the acquisition of these lands by the exploiting interests was handled by powerful persons who were much closer to the administration than being merely persona grata. They were of the reigning blood. One of these persons was in a position to interpret officially the organic law of the Philippine Islands passed by Congress.

The organic act limited the alienation of Philippine public lands to 65 acres to an individual and 2,500 acres to a corporation. This official rendered an opinion that the limitation in the organic act did not apply to the so-called "Friar lands." The sugar camel not only got his nose into the tent, he shoved all the occupants out, or, rather, he trampled them under foot.

Against such insurmountable odds, the result of the investigation was inevitable. The committee finally brought in a report exonerating the insular government and the administration at Washington and severely criticizing the author of the investigation. It required all the good offices of the Democratic minority on the committee to prevent more drastic action.

From the day I left Congress on March 4, 1913, until I met Senator Quezon in Washington in February 1934, I never cared to inquire or learn what had become of the Friar lands. It was an episode in my life I would fain forget. The lapse of time has not been able to erase the ordeal of that inquisition, in which one man was crucified for months by overwhelming odds and knowing all the time that condemnation would be his reward.

Naturally, however, on meeting Senator Quezon, I asked him what had become of the Friar lands, and to my utter amazement he replied, "your fight was successful. * * * It was a whitewash at Washington, but not in the Philippines, and those lands are now all in private possession of the people." The Philippine Assembly, it appears, had passed acts to bring this about and finally effectuate the original object of the acquisition of those lands. Further, I learned that the effects of this fight have shaped and dominated the land policy of the Filipinos. They determined that their people should not be peonized to great landowners. Surely this is a great reward, not only after many days but many years.

I rejoice that this country is to adhere to its foundation principles, its traditions, and its oft-declared policy against the acquisition of foreign territory through military conquest and the government of foreign people against their will. This bill forever sets at rest any question as to the intent of the United States of America regarding the Philippine Islands. It is one more act distinguishing the policy of the United States from that of all other governments with respect to the acquisition of foreign territory. It is in line with the return to China of the Boxer indemnity, a thing done by no other nation. It is in line with the freedom of Cuba. It is in line with our refusal of colonial acquisitions after the World War. It is in line with the withdrawal of our armed forces from Central American territories. It is an affirmation of the declarations of Grover Cleveland and Woodrow Wilson. It should forever establish in the mind of the world the position and policy of this great Republic touching the rights and liberties of the smaller and weaker peoples of the world. America vindicates and justifies itself in its own eyes and in the eyes of mankind.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I favor the immediate passage of legislation granting independence to the Philippine Islands. The enactment of this bill (H.R. 8573) will fulfill the obligation of the United States incurred when Admiral Dewey fought the Battle of Manila Bay on May 1, 1898. We pledged the people of the Philippines then, and repeatedly since that time, that the United States Government had no intention of permanent annexation of the islands, but on the contrary that we were moved entirely by the desire to assist them in establishing a stable government which would assure them permanent freedom.

The record of the past 35 years indicates we have rendered this assistance. The Filipinos have demonstrated their ability for self-government. This is conceded on every hand. They have now asked the fulfillment of our pledge. Their request is in complete harmony with our policy. We should grant them full sovereignty in accordance with the safeguards included in this bill.

As a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives, I have taken a sympathetic interest in the study of their progress and future problems. The presentation of their case before the committee by their representatives, proved conclusively that the Filipino people are prepared to take their place among the nations. They have been steadily developing their own natural resources; broadening their educational facilities, and securing their economic prosperity. Our work is completed. To continue American dominion over this people, who because of their racial characteristics necessarily differ from us, will bring harm to the institutions they have built and involve us in greater problems.

In the preparation of the present legislation, the members of the Committee on Insular Affairs have given deserving consideration to the economic security and international relationships of the Filipino people by providing for complete Philippine independence after a transition period during which their domestic economy can be adjusted to meet the necessarily changed conditions. I favor this because it places a safeguard insuring the economic safety of the Philippines.

From every conceivable standpoint we have considered their problems and accordingly have presented a bill fully assuring them of every possible assistance in the attainment of their national ideals. On the other hand, we have taken into consideration our own problems as they relate to the people of the Philippines.

Section 6 of the bill deals with the trade relations between the Philippines and the United States. These relations have been beneficial to both the islands and the United States in the past. The passage of this section of the bill will encourage the Filipino people to continue that friendly relationship by adding to their own revenues in shipping their products to the United States. As the great majority of the tonnage is handled by American owned and operated vessels, this will continue a valuable traffic for our American merchant marine.

But of far greater importance than these economic advantages are the human and social rights involved. I do not discredit the people of the Philippines when I say that, with all my friendship and admiration for them, I must also recognize that they are a people of another race. Their outlook upon life differs from the American outlook; their philosophy is not ours; their mode of life differs; their very ideals must necessarily differ from our own. Because of these, our own human and social interests demand that we make proper recognition of these facts.

The Congress recognized these problems when the islands were acquired and therefore did not grant citizenship to the inhabitants of the Philippines. But the mistake was made of permitting their migration to this country in unlimited numbers to compete with the American workingman in a manner that has placed our own people at a great disadvantage.

I introduced the first bill in Congress ever presented to stop this migration. The original measures providing for independence of the Philippines did not include such a provision. The Hare bill and the Hawes-Cutting bill, upon my advocacy, and the present bill, in section 8, contains provisions which, when enacted, will satisfactorily settle this problem.

The migration of Filipino laborers in unlimited numbers to the United States must be stopped by the present Congress and simultaneously with the passage of this bill. I believe that if Congress could have foreseen the present serious difficulties which have arisen from their unrestricted migration to America, it would have withheld the privilege of complete freedom of entry into the country from the very beginning.

Filipino laborers, many of whom were first lured to the Hawaiian Islands by American proprietors of the extensive sugarcane fields and sugar mills, have for a number of years been coming to the Pacific coast in large numbers. A study of this migration will reveal that more than one half the number shown present in the United States by the census of 1930 arrived during the 3 years 1929, 1930, and 1931. This is conclusive proof that while the census of 1930 shows a Filipino population of only 45,203, the actual number present in the United States far exceeds this figure.

I have no racial prejudices. Every man and woman in this country is descended from foreigners, no matter whether our ancestors landed on Plymouth Rock or in Castle Garden. However, we have long since reached the saturation point. With over 10,000,000 unemployed and other millions on temporary relief work, our problem of employment cannot be further increased by the migration of other races who cannot be merged with our own people. It is unjust to American workingmen to add more to this deplorable list of unemployed. To every race God gave a place in the sun, and the place of the Filipino is in the Orient. The enactment of this bill and its acceptance by the Filipino legislature will immediately stop this migration of the Filipinos to our shores.

SALES OF AMERICAN AGRICULTURAL SURPLUS PRODUCTS

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 7581) to authorize a board composed of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture to negotiate with foreign buyers with a view of selling American agricultural surplus products at the world market price and to accept in payment therefor silver coin or bullion at such value as may be agreed upon, which shall not exceed 25 percent above the world market price of silver, and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue silver certificates based upon the agreed value of such silver bullion or coin in payment for the products sold, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of exchanging American agricultural surpluses for foreign silver bullion and coin, a board named the "Agricultural Surplus Exchange Board" is hereby established. Such board shall consist of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture. Hereafter in this act the Agricultural Surplus Exchange Board shall be designated as the "board."

SEC. 2. The board is hereby authorized and directed, through commercial attachés, consuls, and other agents residing in foreign countries, to negotiate with foreign buyers with the view of selling American agricultural surpluses produced in the United States at the world market price to be paid for by said foreign buyers in silver coin or bullion at such value per ounce as may be agreed upon by the board and said foreign buyers: Provided, however, That the board shall in no event agree to accept silver bullion or coin at a price in excess of 25 percent above the world market price of silver. The board is authorized, through the foreign agents above mentioned, to enter into option contracts with foreign buyers to deliver to them agricultural surplus products at the world market price and accept in payment for same silver bullion or coin at such value per fine ounce as may be agreed upon and which shall not exceed 25 percent above the world market price of silver.

SEC. 3. The board is further authorized to purchase such agricultural surplus products as may be deemed necessary to fulfill option contracts with foreign buyers or to make deliveries to foreign buyers for the purpose of carrying out this act. The board is authorized to employ any governmental agency of the Agricultural Department in securing the amount of agricultural surplus products necessary to make such deliveries, and to enter into contracts with the producers of such products as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 4. The board is authorized and directed to deposit the silver bullion or coin received in exchange for the said products sold to foreign buyers with the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall immediately cause to be issued, against such silver bullion or coin, silver certificates based upon the value per fine ounce which was agreed upon by the board and said foreign buyers: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall in no event issue silver certificates based upon any agreed value in excess of 25 percent above the world market price of silver. The silver certificates so issued shall be used by the board to pay for the agricultural products sold to foreign buyers under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. The board is hereby directed to authorize the Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Associations to enter into contracts for the sale of American agricultural surplus products in exchange for silver bullion or coin at such value per ounce as the board shall determine and the same provisions in reference to the issuance of silver certificates and the limitation as to the amount at which the silver coin or bullion shall be valued as above set forth in preceding section hereof shall apply to this section.

SEC. 6. The amount of premium or excess above the world market price which the board is authorized to agree to as payment for the products sold to foreign buyers shall not exceed $400,000,000 a year.

SEC. 7. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to accept any deposits of silver in the Treasury of the United States which such Secretary, subject to regulations prescribed by the board, is satisfied have been imported into the United States in payment for agricultural surplus products sold and delivered, or to be delivered, to foreign buyers for exportation at a price which shall from time to time be determined by the said board; Provided, however, That the price per ounce for such silver shall not be less than 10 percent above the world market price of silver and not in excess of 25 percent above the world market price of silver. The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized and directed to issue for the account of the Treasury, against the silver so deposited, silver certificates based upon the price per ounce fixed by the board, and deliver same to the owner of such silver who tenders same to the Secretary of the Treasury under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. Upon receipt of the silver bullion or coin from foreign buyers the board shall deliver same to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall immediately cause to be issued, against such silver bullion or coin, silver certificates based upon the agreed value at which the silver is accepted, and issued in denominations of $1, $5, $10, $20, and $100.

SEC. 9. The silver bullion received under the provisions of this act shall be stored in the Treasury of the United States in blocks or bricks of standardized or uniform fineness and in convenient units by weight and stamped by authorized official stamp, as may be determined within the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 10. The silver certificates issued under this act or any silver certificates reissued shall be legal tender in payment of all debts and dues, public and private, of every nature and description, and shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when accepted by the Government shall be reissued and in all respects shall become a part of the lawful money of the United States. Said certificates, when held by international banking associations or Federal Reserve banks, may be counted as a part of their lawful reserve.

SEC. 11. That there shall be engraved on one side of each certificate so issued "This certifies that there is on deposit in the Treasury of the United States silver bullion equivalent, when valued in gold, to the face value of this certificate" and, on the reverse side, "This certificate is legal tender for all debts, both public and private."

SEC. 12. At such times and in such amounts as, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, is necessary to maintain the equal purchasing power of every kind of currency of the United States, there shall be delivered to the holder of the certificate, upon presentation for redemption of silver certificates provided for in this act, a quantity of silver as will equal in value at the date of presentation the number of dollars expressed on the face of the certificate at the market price of silver, or in gold, at the option of the Board.

SEC. 13. The board is hereby authorized and directed to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for immediately carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 14. The board provided for in this act shall terminate on January 1, 1936, unless by law hereinafter enacted the life of such Board shall be extended.

SEC. 15. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 16. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with any of the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. McGUGIN (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with and the bill be printed in the RECORD in its entirety.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, in view of the importance of this legislation that we may have a more extended discussion. I have requests for little over 1 hour and I would therefore suggest, if agreeable to the gentlemen on the other side, it might be a good plan to have 2 hours of discussion of this measure.

Mr. SNELL. One hour on the side?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. One hour on the side.

Mr. SNELL. I think this is such an important piece of legislation we ought not to pass it in 20 minutes on the side.

Mr. McGUGIN. If the gentleman will permit, I think we should have more time than that and will not the gentleman make it one hour and a half on the side?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. That is acceptable to me, if no one objects.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not see any use of extending debate upon a bill that you are going to be required to vote on as is. If you were going to consider this bill under the 5-minute rule it would be a different matter, but why should you want extended debate when you are calling up a bill under suspension of the rules and are not going to give us an opportunity to offer amendments to the bill? We, members of the committee to which the bill was referred, did not have an opportunity to offer amendments in committee. It comes to you from the committee without an amendment and you will be asked to vote on the measure as introduced in the House on February 2, 1934. A measure of such vast importance should not come here without some definite report from the Treasury Department. As written, the bill creates another Government agency to engage in business, for it authorizes a board to sell surplus agricultural products. Why not leave that to our citizens, engaged for years in that business. If there is such a demand for this bill as would appear by the action of the committee in reporting the measure without considering it for amendment, then I see no reason for discussing it longer than the rule provides. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object to 3 hours additional debate on the bill as it can serve no useful purpose.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection a moment?

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to renew my unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Nebraska withhold his point of no quorum?

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. I withhold it temporarily, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for unanimous consent to extend the time for debate to 2 hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that debate on this bill be extended to 2 hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. ELTSEL] and one half by himself.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I object and demand the regular order.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOMERS]?

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the minority leader I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House. Before I begin the discussion of this bill I want to deny some of the rumors that are going about the House. It has been whispered in some quarters that the administration is opposed to this bill. I want to say in the most emphatic manner that, insofar as I have been able to learn, the President has not authorized anyone to say that he is opposed to this bill. I challenge any man to show that the President of the United States is opposed to this bill.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Has not the President the same power now to do what is in this bill?

Mr. DIES. No.

Mr. SNELL. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. It has been reported that the Secretary of the Treasury appeared before your committee and opposed the bill. Is that true?

Mr. DIES. That is not true. I will say to the gentleman that the Secretary of the Treasury has never opposed this bill before our committee. I will also add that the Secretary has never stated to me that he was opposed to it.

Mr. CELLER. Is the administration in favor of it?

Mr. DIES. I am not authorized to say that the President favors the bill because the President has never told me that he favors the bill.

In that connection permit me to say that on January 30, 1934, I wrote to Hon. Marvin McIntyre, the secretary of the President, in reference to this bill. In the letter I stated as follows:

I think that it is highly important that the President should examine the bill and advise me whether or not he has any objection to it. As you know, I am tremendously interested in the success of the administration, and do not want to urge anything that might be contrary to the President's policy at this time.

I also stated in that letter that—

It is very important that I have his views on this bill before Monday, and I am asking you as a personal favor to me to bring the matter to his attention as soon as possible.

On February 5, I again wrote Mr. McIntyre as follows:

If the administration has no objection to H.R. 7581, it is my opinion that it will be reported favorably in a few days and that we can secure immediate hearings before the House. As a Democrat, with an unbroken record of supporting the President, I feel that I am entitled to know whether or not the President has any objection to these bills. May I, therefore, request you to advise me as soon as possible whether or not the President is opposed to these two bills so that I can communicate this fact to our committee, the Speaker of the House, the majority leader, and the Rules Committee?

On February 12, Mr. McIntyre replied to my letter, as follows:

This is to acknowledge receipt of, and thank you for, your letter of February 5, re H.R. 7581. It is my understanding that Secretary Morgenthau is communicating with you further on this subject.

On February 3, 1934, I wrote Secretary Morgenthau a letter which contained the following paragraph:

If you will advise Mr. FIESINGER what day next week will be most convenient for you to appear before the committee we will make our arrangements accordingly. In the meantime I will be very grateful if you can find it possible to advise me definitely whether you approve or disapprove these bills. If the administration is going to object to these bills, as a loyal Democrat with an unbroken record of supporting the President I should like to know as soon as possible.

On February 9 the Secretary of the Treasury wrote me a letter which he later authorized me to make public. The letter is as follows:

I promised I would let you know today what the Treasury's position is with reference to the two bills relating to silver, which you were good enough to send to me.

As appears from the latter part of the President's recent message to the Congress on monetary matters it is the firm policy of the administration to move forward on a program for the rehabilitation of silver. Any such program should be in line with, and in aid of the London agreement, in the consummation of which the United States Government took the initiative. A program for the rehabilitation of silver has also to take into account the many and complex factors involved in the action with reference to gold which it has been necessary to take, and involved in the complex field of foreign exchange and world trade. In other words, steps for the rehabilitation of silver must be taken in the light of the entire domestic and international monetary and trade policy of the Government.

Under existing legislation the President has full and ample power to deal with any and all phases of the silver question. What further steps in relation to silver I may recommend to the President, it would not be in the public interest at this time to say more than that they are the subject of vigorous and constant study.

On January 30, 1934, I wrote a letter to Secretary Wallace and enclosed a copy of this bill. In that letter I stated "The committee would like to have you appear before it and state whether or not you approve this bill. The Chairman has authorized me to extend an invitation to you. Will you please let me know your views on this bill and whether or not you will be able to appear before our committee next Monday?" On February 3, 1934, the Secretary of Agriculture acknowledged receipt of my letter as follows:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 30 in which you extend an invitation to appear before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, on next Monday to express my views relative to H.R. 7320.

I regret that engagements already arranged will make it impossible for me to accept your kind invitation. We shall be pleased to submit to you, however, at a later date our views relative to H.R. 7320 when we have had an opportunity to examine the proposed measure in greater detail.

Neither the President, nor the Secretary of Agriculture, nor the Secretary of the Treasury has ever submitted to me any objections to this bill. I think that everyone will agree that I have been perfectly fair with the administration and given it a full opportunity to express any objections it might have to this bill.

Let me describe this bill as rapidly as the time will permit. The bill provides for the appointment of a board to be composed of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture. This Board is to be known as the "Agricultural Surplus Exchange Board. The board is authorized and directed, through commercial attachés and other agents residing in foreign countries, to negotiate with foreign buyers with the view of selling American agricultural surplus products in the United States at the world market price to be paid for by the foreign buyers in silver coin or bullion at such value per ounce as may be agreed upon by the Board and the foreign buyers. The board shall in no event agree to accept silver bullion or coin at a price in excess of 25 percent above the world market price of silver. The Board is further authorized to purchase such agricultural surplus products as may be deemed necessary to fulfill option contracts with foreign buyers or to make deliveries to foreign buyers for the purpose of carrying out this act. In this connection, the board is authorized to employ any governmental agency of the Agricultural Department in securing the necessary amount of agricultural surplus products. The Board is authorized and directed to deposit the silver bullion or coin received in exchange for the products sold to foreign buyers with the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall immediately cause to be issued against such silver bullion or coin, silver certificates based upon the value per fine ounce which was agreed upon, with the limitation that the agreed value shall not exceed 25 percent above the world market price. The silver certificates so issued shall be used by the Board to pay for the agricultural products sold to foreign buyers under the provisions of the act.

In order that the Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Association may receive the same treatment, the Board is directed to authorize them to enter into contracts for the sale of American agricultural surplus products in exchange for silver bullion or coin at such value per ounce as the Board shall determine, with the same provisions in reference to the issuance of certificates and the limitations as to the amount at which the silver coin or bullion shall be valued as set forth in the preceding sections of the bill.

In order that it may not be charged that this bill discriminates against the private exporters of agricultural surpluses and puts the Government into competition with them, section 3 provides that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to accept any deposits of silver in the Treasury of the United States which such Secretary, subject to regulations prescribed by the Board, is satisfied have been imported into the United States in payment for agricultural surplus products sold and delivered, or to be delivered, to foreign buyers for exportation at a price which shall from time to time be determined by the Board; provided, however, that the price per ounce for such silver shall not be less than 10 percent above the world market price of the silver and not in excess of 25 percent above the world market price of silver.

The same provisions in reference to the issuance of certificates is set forth in section 7 of the bill. The bill also provides that the silver certificates shall be legal tender in payment of all debts and dues. Section 12 is the redemption clause of the act, and in this connection may I emphasize that this bill contains the same redemption provisions as the gold revaluation bill recently passed by Congress. It provides, in other words, that at such times and in such amounts as, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, it is necessary to maintain the equal purchasing power of every kind of currency of the United States, there shall be delivered to the holder of the certificate, upon presentation for redemption of silver certificates provided for in this act, a quantity of silver as will equal in value at the date of presentation the number of dollars expressed on the face of the certificate at the market price of silver or in gold at the option of the Board.

Another important provision of this bill is section 13, which authorizes and directs the Board to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for immediately carrying out the provisions of the act.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Let me go a little further, then I shall yield. As everyone knows, the Treasury at the present moment is accepting deposits of newly mined silver and paying 64½ cents an ounce for the silver. The Treasury is also taking one half of all newly mined silver as seigniorage. Against the deposits of newly mined silver legal tender certificates are issued. The plan proposed in this bill is more or less an extension of the domestic plan already in force by administrative proclamation to include the acquisition of foreign silver in payment for agricultural surplus products.

I think it is generally recognized that one of the most serious problems that confronts us today is our inability to dispose of our agricultural surpluses. In 1928 we sold approximately $1,800,000,000 of agricultural surpluses to foreign Nations. This has dropped year by year until last year we sold only about $400,000,000 of agricultural surplus products. The reasons for this are apparent. Nations who would like to purchase our agricultural surpluses are unable to do so because, in the first place they have no gold to pay for it. The gold of the world is cornered by three Nations—the United States, France, and England—and under the monetary policies now in force in those three countries there is little or no probability that in the near future there will be any redistribution of gold. As a matter of fact, these Nations are beginning to lock their gold bullion in vaults and keep it there.

The following facts illustrate how unequally the gold stock of the world is distributed. The United States and France now hold more than $6,000,000,000 of gold, something approximating $40 per capita of population based on the value of gold prior to revaluation. It would be difficult to convince either country that it has an unnecessary amount of gold. But if two of the leading nations believe that they require this much gold per capita, is it not reasonable to assume that weaker nations require fully as much? If we were to give the other nations the same amount of gold per capita we would have to have more than five and one half times the present supply of gold in the world. If we subtract the amount of gold locked up in the vaults of France and the United States from the total world supply of gold, we would have less than $4 per capita for the rest of the world. This is, of course, based upon the old valuation of gold.

Even the advocates of the orthodox gold-standard theory admit that due to the maldistribution of this precious metal, a large percentage of the commercial population of the earth do not possess sufficient gold with which to do business, or maintain a currency and credit system based upon this metal. Many thoughtful students of the question believe that the annual increase of the world's monetary stock of gold has been insufficient during the past decade or so to maintain the price level to which society has become adjusted. This school of thought contends that "for a stable and equitable price level, the world monetary stock of gold must first be large enough to sustain the price level to which society is adjusted and must thereafter increase at the same rate as the production of other commodities, or about 3.15 percent per year", and that "in order to have the monetary stocks increase 3.15 percent per year when only 56 percent of the production is added to monetary stocks, the world production must be 5.6 percent of the world monetary stock of gold." This school of thought cites authentic figures to prove that we have had no such increase to the world stock of gold during the past decade or so and that this is partly responsible for the disastrous fall in prices. This same school of thought contends that due to the insufficient increase to the world's monetary stock of gold, the purchasing power of gold, as measured in commodities, has increased to such an extent that we are approaching bankruptcy.

Whether or not this contention is correct, I shall not seek to prove at this time. Suffice it to say that according to the views of all schools of thought, the monetary stock of gold is so unevenly distributed, and so completely monopolized by a few nations, that the majority of the people of the earth do not possess sufficient quantities of it to purchase the agricultural surplus products of America.

There is only one other way by which foreign nations can purchase our agricultural surplus products and that is by the exchange of their surplus products for ours. This they cannot do because on account of our prohibitive tariff laws we will not permit the products of other nations to enter the United States. Since the War between the States we have committed ourselves to the policy of protective tariffs. These tariff barriers have been raised through the course of years until the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill was passed. Under this bill we effectually stopped the importation of foreign products to America. The example furnished by this measure was rapidly followed by other countries until today the exchange of commodities, products, and goods between nations is practically prohibited.

It seems to me apparent that we must reach one of two conclusions in the United States. We can adopt a purely nationalistic policy in reference to agriculture; this means that we must by legislation restrict and limit our production to domestic needs and consumption. If we do this, we must sacrifice the agricultural sections of the West and South in favor of the industrialism in the United States. If we do that, we drive from agricultural pursuits millions of people now dependent upon farming for a livelihood, and they will be compelled to find other means of subsistence. Is the industrialism of the Nation prepared to absorb this addition to its population? When we consider the millions of unemployed in the industrial sections of the Nation, the answer must be "no." If industrialism is unable to employ these people, what will become of them? The alternative seems to be the dole.

So much for the policy of adjusting agricultural production to the domestic needs of our people. The other alternative is the lowering of our tariff barriers in order that foreign nations may import to the United States sufficient quantities of their own products to enable them to purchase ours.

Although we from the agricultural South and West are firmly convinced and determined that the tariff barriers must be lowered, the task is not as simple as it appears. After we initiated the vicious policy of prohibitive tariff rates, other nations retaliated by doing the same thing. The problem is, therefore, how to undo what has been done. The lowering of our own tariff barriers without reciprocal action on the part of other nations would only result in a tremendous increase in our imports, with no appreciable addition to our exports. In other words, other nations would flood us with their products, while their tariff barriers would prevent us from doing likewise. For this reason, the administration is attempting to formulate a policy of reciprocal tariff treaties, concessions, and agreements. The success of this policy is dependent upon the degree of intelligent co-operation which we may receive from other nations. There are so many complicated factors that enter into the success of this program that it is difficult to predict how long it will take to carry it out. Our experience in world-wide disarmament does not afford much occasion for optimism. Not only will we have to secure the cooperation of other nations but we will have to overcome the determined opposition of many industries and sections of this country that will oppose every attempt to reduce the tariff rates. Industries, labor, and many interests have become adjusted to the present policy of prohibitive tariffs. They will, therefore, resist to the bitter end any attempt to reduce tariffs so as to permit the importation of foreign products and commodities.

I am not saying that the lowering of our tariff barriers is not advisable and necessary. I am heartily in favor of it. What I am saying is that at best it will be slow and difficult. In the meantime we are producing agricultural surpluses; we are depressing the domestic prices of all farm products. This not only impoverishes the agricultural sections of the Nation but it also makes it impossible for the farmers and those dependent upon farming to purchase the products of industry.

Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that this bill will provide a method whereby we can dispose of our agricultural surplus without waiting until the gold stock of the world is redistributed or until tariff barriers are lowered. What does this bill propose to do? Nothing radical. We are not taking any money from the Treasury of the United States and buying silver. We are not straining the credit of this Government to purchase silver. We are merely recognizing the money now used by more than one half of the population of the earth. There are 11 billion ounces of monetary silver in the world according to the best estimates. That silver is reasonably well distributed. Of course, the greater part of it is in the Orient, but most of the nations of the earth have, or can secure, a reasonable supply of silver. The world price of silver has been abnormally depressed on account of the unwise actions of certain governments.

Our committee conducted exhaustive hearings over a period of 3 years on this subject, and it is admitted by nearly everyone that the low price of silver is largely due to foolish governmental action. I shall not discuss the demonetization of silver because this is a subject that has been discussed from every possible angle over a long period of time. Suffice it to say in this connection that in 1696 England fixed a ratio between gold and silver of 16 to 1. France and most of the other countries had a ratio of 15½ to 1, and therefore silver drifted to France and gold to England. This contributed to the demonetization of silver in England, and in 1873 we followed the example. In 1871 Germany, taking advantage of the receipt of a considerable sum in gold from the payment by France of the indemnity of 200,000,000 pounds imposed on her after the Franco-Prussian War, adopted the gold standard. The demonetization of silver by the actions of governments brought about the decline in the purchasing power of silver. But even though it had been demonetized by a number of leading nations, silver was recovering on account of the persistence with which many millions of people clung to it as a storehouse of value and medium of exchange. This recovery might have been completed had it not been for the action of the British Government in forcing India off the silver standard and compelling her to melt up her silver coins and place them as bullion in the treasury.

The Secretary of the Treasury of India was given the authority to sell any quantities of such silver at any price and at any time that he deemed it advisable. Four hundred million ounces of silver were withdrawn from circulation under that process. India began to sell this melted silver as bullion on the markets of the world, with the consequence that she destroyed the purchasing power of silver. When India started to sell silver in 1928, she had about 400,000,000 ounces in the treasury. After selling about 140,000,000 ounces, she still has about 400,000,000 million available for sale. In other words, she is acquiring this silver by withdrawing it from circulation. Although India is not selling such a great amount of silver, nevertheless the very fact that she has a large supply on hand and that her secretary is authorized to dump any part of it at any time and for any price upon the markets of the world, exerts a depressing influence upon the world price of silver.

According to the Director of the Mint, whose report I have here, the action of certain governments in clipping their silver coins and selling the clippings as bullion, the action of certain governments in decreasing the amount of their subsidiary coin, and the equally destructive acts on the part of other governments, produced a tremendous depression in the price of silver, with the result that silver-using countries are no longer able to buy the products of American industry and American agriculture.

Let it be emphasized at this point that the "oversupply" of silver was not caused by "overproduction" as is stated by those who have not taken time to examine the facts. In the past 100 years, the world silver production was 10,658,588,000 ounces. In the same period the production of gold amounted to 931,645,000. The production of silver was 11.4 times that of gold. Eighty percent of the silver production of the world is a byproduct in the production of other metals, such as gold, copper, lead, and zinc. Therefore, even should silver rise in value until it reached a parity of 16 to 1, there is no probability of any overproduction of silver. The increased price of silver without a corresponding increase in the price of the other metals with which it is associated would not justify increased production. To those who charge that this bill will bring about an overproduction of silver and that we will be flooded with silver, may I point out that the maximum production of silver in the world at all times was only 260,000,000 ounces in a year.

As I have previously said, the abnormal low price of silver caused by the ill-advised actions of certain governments has made it impossible for silver-using countries to purchase our surplus products. The great fall in the gold value of silver has led to the impoverishment of the silver-using countries of the East, particularly India, where the ancient habit of the people has been to keep their small savings in silver, and, above all, China, which has remained on the silver standard. Since silver is used by more than one half of the population of the earth, we must restore it to its normal purchasing power in order to bring the world onto a single international monetary standard and to so increase the metallic bases of currency as to give the world a monetary standard far less liable than gold by its too severe and violent fluctuations in purchasing power.

As I have said, the silver-using countries cannot purchase our products with their silver money because, through the process of exchange of their money for gold, they are compelled to pay too much for our products. An automobile which costs $600 in this country will cost the Chinaman about $3,000 in his own money on account of the low price of silver.

What we propose to do under this bill is to permit silver-using countries to pay for our products with silver. This is not a 16 to 1 bill. This is not the act of taking the money of the people of the United States and buying silver. We have on hand more than 11,000,000 bales of surplus cotton. We have on hand millions of bushels of surplus wheat. Our tobacco, corn, hogs, rye, barley, and much of our agricultural products must be sold on the markets of the world in order for western and southern agriculture to survive. If we will say to foreign nations that have silver and who need our products, "We will accept in payment for this surplus your silver", then they will agree to trade with us.

It is said by the opponents of this bill that this will constitute dumping. Why? They say because you will allow this board that is to be created to accept the silver of any nation at 25 percent above the world market price. Therefore they say this is a process of dumping. That is not true, because all we propose to do is to allow a reasonable price for silver and restore its normal purchasing power.

The price of silver is now depressed by abnormal conditions. It has been lower in the past few years than ever known in the history of the world. All we propose to do is to give to these people a reasonable price for their silver. It is admitted by everyone who has studied the subject that if we could remove from the markets of the world a sufficient quantity of silver and thereby reduce the "oversupply" coming from unnatural sources, silver would be stabilized at a normal price. This bill not only promises us to remove this oversupply from the markets of the world, but in doing so it enables us to dispose of our surplus products, retain our dominant position as an export nation, and make agriculture profitable in the Nation. As I have said, the supply of silver is definitely limited by nature. Since only a small portion of silver comes from purely silver mines and most of it is a byproduct, there is no danger of any great overproduction. Therefore, stabilizing silver, the production of which is limited by nature by removing a sufficient quantity from the markets of the world, is an entirely different proposition from our futile attempt to stabilize the price of cotton and wheat by undertaking to store in warehouses the surplus.

But assuming that we pay the maximum 25 percent above the world market price of silver, and assuming that the quantity of silver which we acquire through this process is either not sufficient to maintain its increased price or that overproduction neutralizes the effect of the action, have we lost anything? Even if we get a billion ounces of silver and accept it at 60 or 75 cents an ounce and issue certificates against it, and even if the price of silver eventually declines below the price at which we accepted it, and even if some day we return to redemption and have to make good the difference between the world market price and the price we agreed to accept it: certainly it would be worth the difference to dispose of our agricultural surplus products and retain the markets of the world for the benefit of our producers. Even if the worst should happen and this bill should amount to no more than a subsidy, can anyone say it would not be worth $400,000,000 to export $1,600,000,000 worth of agricultural surplus? If the time should ever come that we would have to make good that $400,000,000, it would cost us considerably less than our present expensive program of paying the farmers for plowing up their crops or limiting production. For less money we will be keeping people employed and retaining the markets of the world, and we will not have to resort to the harsh and undemocratic principle of dictatorship and discipline that is contrary to the genius and spirit of our Constitution. [Applause.]

You gentlemen who are opposed to the reduction of our tariff rates and schedules should certainly agree to some plan that will give to agriculture the advantages that industry now enjoys as the result of high tariffs. Under this plan the Government will lose nothing, because, as I said, when we remove a billion ounces of silver from the markets of the world, the price of silver will be stabilized at a normal price. Many people talk about silver as a commodity. You understand that I am not interested in silver simply to help the silver States. I have no silver mines or interests in my district, and I do not own one dollar of silver stock in the world. My interest in silver is confined to the benefits that will flow to agriculture and industry by recognizing it as money. You gentlemen who speak of silver as a commodity, let me remind you that silver was money in the world long before gold was ever heard of. Let me further remind you that silver was the money of this Republic for many decades until 1873; and let me further remind you of the fact that today in the United States one twelfth of your currency is silver. Let me further remind you of the fact that the silver dollar which is readily exchanged for a gold dollar and which is on a parity with every other sort of dollar in this country has only about 25 cents' worth of silver in it.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. Why does the gentleman limit the application of his bill to agricultural surpluses? Why not apply it against industrial, commercial, and mineral resources?

Mr. DIES. The reason is because industry is protected by the tariff. Industry enjoys the advantages of the tariff, but the tariff is not effective in the matter of agricultural surpluses. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Does not the gentleman propose to make the provisions of his bill precisely the same as those of the McNary-Haugen bill, or at least is not his bill intended to carry out the purpose expressed in the McNary-Haugen bill and the debenture plan of the National Grange?

Mr. DIES. No; I do not think so.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The idea behind those propositions was to move the agricultural surpluses.

Mr. DIES. That is true; but this does not proceed by the same method.

Mr. WOODRUFF. No; I said through a different method.

Mr. DIES. There are 11,000,000,000 ounces of silver in the world. Eighty percent of silver is produced as a byproduct of copper, lead, zinc, and other minerals. The gentleman from the silver States know that even if silver were selling at $1.29, this price would not be sufficient to justify an increase in the production of silver. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That was proved in 1920 and 1921.

Mr. DIES. The silver production is limited. Therefore, there can be no wild and uncontrolled inflation if silver were remonetized under the terms of this bill, because we are prepared with agricultural surpluses to purchase all the silver in the world, if you want to go that far, and still do no injury to American finance and American credit.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman made the statement that industry is protected by the tariff.

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman name five commodities the farmer produces which are not protected by the tariff?

Mr. DIES. The gentleman knows as well as I do that in the case of agricultural surpluses, cotton, wheat, and all other crops, a tariff rate of even 500 percent would not be worth the paper it was written on but would be merely a subterfuge.

That man is indeed an optimist who imagines that we will soon resume our former trade with Europe.

Europe today is what she was in the days of yore—quarrelsome, militaristic, grasping, ever ready to seize every advantage from the weakness or innocence of other countries. It is high time that we should profit from the sad experiences of the past. Let us not deceive ourselves with the false illusions of hope. Europe has no intention to disarm, either economically or otherwise, her professions to the contrary notwithstanding. Not in our generation will we regain our trade with Europe. Defaulting debtors never trade with their injured creditors, unless necessity or self-interest compel them to do so. Neither would the cancellation of the war debts restore normal trade relationships. She would only despise us for acceding to her unjust demands, and the consciousness of her breach of faith would only strengthen her dislike for America. Our commercial future lies in the Western Hemisphere and the Orient. It is our right to enjoy the majority of the trade of North, Central, and South America, because it is to us that all these countries would be forced to turn for help in case of European aggression. There is enough potential purchasing power in the countries of these continents to absorb our surplus products. An idiotic and fatal fascination for Europe has caused us to neglect our own hemisphere, but now we must develop our natural trade territories. [Applause.]

If we accept silver at a reasonable price in exchange for our agricultural surpluses, we can also develop a tremendous trade with the Orient. We must develop these natural trade territories unless the Congress is prepared to commit itself to the doctrine of economic isolation, which means the forcible destruction of the South and West, which means driving from the farms of the South and West millions of people who today make their living tilling the soil. Can you people of the East take care of this surplus population? Are you prepared to put this surplus population to work in your factories and industries?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Suppose in the exchange of these products the Government of the United States acquires 5,000,000,000 ounces of the 11,000,000,000 ounces of silver in the rest of the world and that silver should then depreciate 25 percent, how would we escape the loss?

Mr. DIES. In the first place, if we acquire 5,000,000,000 ounces of silver and deposit it in the Treasury of the United States, instead of silver depreciating 25 percent it will, in my judgment, increase more than 25 percent. At the present time we do not redeem even gold certificates. [Applause.]

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. We do not even redeem gold certificates today. But assuming we do go back to redemption, and assuming that we do acquire 5,000,000,000 ounces of silver from the markets of the world, and that it is put into the Treasury of the United States, silver will go to $2.58 an ounce. This statement can be proven by mathematical calculation.

Mr. MAY. Then would be a good time to market the silver. Is there anything in the bill which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to market it advantageously; or has he that authorization already?

Mr. DIES. He can market it if he wants to, provided he keeps on hand sufficient silver for redemption purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Under the terms of this bill he can market it.

Mr. DIES. As I stated before, under existing law he would have the right to market the silver, but it is my opinion that he would have to keep on hand sufficient silver to make good the currency issued against it.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the gentleman will yield further, I shall support the gentleman's bill, but I want to call attention to section 6, which is involved in the question just asked by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]. Section 6 provides that the amount of premium or excess above the world market price which the board is authorized to pay for products sold to foreign buyers shall not exceed $400,000,000 a year. I have recently conducted a considerable investigation into the quantity of silver available in the world in the event the United States should launch a world silver-buying program, and I have been wholly unable to find where the United States can get a billion ounces of silver even though she paid $1 an ounce for it. In this connection let me point out that even though we paid 50 cents an ounce in excess, it would take 800,000,000 ounces to take up the $400,000,000; and even if we paid 25 cents an ounce, which amount we would not pay until silver was $1 an ounce, it would take 1,600,000,000 ounces; and I have not been able to find where we can get even 800,000,000 ounces.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, let me say this is not a bill by which we propose to take money out of the Treasury and buy silver. Whenever we acquire an ounce of silver under the terms of this bill, we export agricultural surpluses which depresses the domestic price of our products. This bill provides an intelligent method by which we can deal with this surplus instead of the present crude method of reduction and destruction. [Applause.]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that this bill was not conceived by an academic mind. It was not formulated by college professors who learn their philosophy in a third-story attic and not from actual contact with flesh-and-blood men. It is not written in the obscure language and meaningless phrases of the technical draftsman. There is nothing experimental or revolutionary in the plan suggested. It does not involve the violation of the Constitution or the abridgment of any political, personal, or economic right. It does not constitute any sacrifice of fundamental American principle. Nor does it mark any departure from the ancient landmarks of the fathers. No visionary economist has placed his seal of approval upon it. It is not sponsored by any organized bloc or selfish group. It merely seeks to provide a sane, sensible, and common-sense method of disposing of our agricultural surplus products in a normal and constructive manner. It is merely the recognition of the money of more than one half of the world as payment for the surplus of our soil and labor. The principal purpose of the bill is the disposition of surplus products, but as an important result of this exchange we increase and stabilize the purchasing power of silver and put into the hands of millions of producers a new supply of honest money backed up by an adequate metallic reserve. [Applause.]

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, it has been properly said that this bill is one of the most important bits of legislation coming before this body. It is very far-reaching. It is dangerous. I submit that it is a monumental folly. I am not going to stand here and take the position that a certain gentleman on this floor took the other day when he stated that there are only 12 Members in this House who know anything about money. To make that statement he must himself have been convinced that he knew much about it, otherwise he would not have been able to appraise the intelligence of the Members whom he classified as being among the chosen 12. This bill, H.R. 7581, will not bear the cold logic of analysis or the searchlight of examination. I have gone to the trouble of making up a table, which will show the operation of this bill. Much of what I say will be tied into the table.

Permissible premium (25 percent)..... $400,000,000
100 percent, or market price of silver delivered..... 1,600,000,000

(1) World market value of products purchased in United States.

Under section 6 of the bill you will see that the maximum premium which is permissible for the purchase of exportable agricultural surpluses is $400,000,000. If this $400,000,000 is the permissible premium, then the 100-percent market price of silver taken in exchange for our surplus would be $1,600,000,000. Strangely enough, this $2,000,000,000 represents the market value of the products purchased. In other words, the foreign nations that are supposed to come into our markets and buy our exportable surplus will get $2,000,000,000 worth of our exportable surplus for an actual payment in silver bullion of $1,600,000,000. They get this at a discount of 25 percent.

The bill provides that silver certificates shall be issued on what base? On a base of the $1,600,000,000 of bullion purchased, plus the 25-percent premium, which means that silver certificates will be issued to the extent of $2,000,000,000 on $1,600,000,000 value of bullion. We have heard a lot about watered stock. There is a lot of it right here. There are $2,000,000,000 of silver certificates issued against $1,600,000,000 of silver bullion, or, in other words, there is $400,000,000 worth of watered stock.

There is a provision in the bill for redemption. That will be found in section 12. In order to demonstrate to you the operation of the redemption feature, I have set this up in the form of a double-entry book account. Under it the United States will be in account with holders of these silver certificates on the debit side to the extent of $2,000,000,000, and on the credit side bullion will be credited to the extent of $1,600,000,000. Debit the bullion at the world-market price, as provided by the terms of the bill, which is $1,600,000,000. That is the price at which it was purchased in the first instance. In order to balance the two sides, we have to put on the credit side of the ledger $400,000,000. In other words, the United States upon redemption of these silver certificates will have to go down into their Treasury to the extent of $400,000,000.

Mr. SIROVICH. As a subsidy to agriculture.

Mr. ELTSE of California. As a subsidy to agriculture on top of your processing tax.

Under section 10 of the bill it is provided that the silver certificates issued under this act or any silver certificates reissued shall be legal tender, and so forth; and—

When accepted by the Government shall be issued and in all respects shall become a part of the lawful money of the United States.

Under the redemption clause of the bill there is no provision for cancelation and retirement of these silver certificates.

What situation do we have on reissuance? We have silver certificates reissued in the amount of $2,000,000,000, and again I have set this up in the form of a book account. There is a reissuance of $2,000,000,000 against a credit of what? Nothing, because the silver bullion that went in behind the certificates in the first place has been withdrawn and paid out to redeem the silver certificates, and the United States Treasury is in the red to the extent of the $2,000,000,000. This operation may be repeated ad infinitum. I see some Members smiling. I take that as an indication that they are not able to follow the argument. As I say, the operation can be repeated ad infinitum. What will be the result? There will be a draft on the United States Treasury until we pass into bankruptcy, and all we will have in the end, Mr. Speaker, will be the inscription on the silver dollar, "In God we trust." That will be the remnant of our monetary structure.

This is nothing but a raid on the Treasury.

May I point out the additional feature that the exportable surpluses are supposed to be exchanged for silver from foreign countries. What will be the real operation under this bill? The silver-mining industry, the silver speculators, and the silver operators of this country will ship their silver to the Orient—China, India, and Japan—buy our exportable agricultural surpluses, take them over to Japan, India, and China, sell the products, and reap a magnificent profit in the premium of 25 percent. With provision for a minimum premium of 10 percent and a maximum premium of 25 percent, I say that the premium on the purchases will be 25 percent if the mining interests, the silver operators, and the silver speculators have anything to say about the matter. They will get it just as high as they can. What is the object in paying to the purchasers of our exportable agricultural products, which are taken in the normal course of trade, as they have been in the past, a premium of 25 percent on the exportable surpluses that go to other nations at the present time?

It is a pretty racket. It is a subsidy, as my good friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SROVICH] suggests. It is a racket for the silver operators, for the silver speculators, and it will be a racket for banks to be developed in Japan and in China and in India, and elsewhere.

There is another thing about this bill I want to point out to you. If you will refer to line 18, page 2, section 2—and I want you to get this—

The board is authorized, through the foreign agents above mentioned, to enter into option contracts.

Please get that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Option contracts. Now, keeping this in mind, please refer to section 3:

The board is further authorized to purchase such agricultural surplus products as may be deemed necessary to fulfill option contracts with foreign buyers or to make deliveries.

And a little further on the board is authorized to employ any governmental agency of the Agricultural Department in securing the amount of agricultural surplus products necessary to make such deliveries and to enter into contracts with the producers of such products as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out this act.

In the first instance, under section 2, you have option contracts and the foreign buyers may buy under option contracts which are not binding. They may take the surpluses if they want to and if they do not want to, they can tell you to go to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Not just now. A little later I will yield.

Under section 3 the contracts that are there authorized to be entered into with the producers are binding contracts and are not option contracts.

I have heard on the floor of this House, as well as before I came here, the Federal Farm Board cursed and damned and discussed and repudiated. I say to you that under the provisions of this bill you are setting up another Farm Board that will buy these exportable surpluses and accumulate them in order to provide another subsidy for the agriculturists of the United States.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes; I will.

Mr. SIROVICH. We have been granting subsidies this morning to the cotton growers and we have given subsidies to the railroads and to the merchant marine. Why can we not grant a subsidy to the mineral resources or interests of the country in the same way?

Mr. ELTSE of California. They are trying to do that now.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes; I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman understands that in the silver dollar at the present time, upon which is printed "In God we Trust", there is only about 30 cents worth of silver at the world price.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. But the gentleman would like to own and possess 1,000,000 of them. Would not the gentleman like to have 1,000,000 of these 2,000,000,000 silver dollars he is talking about? [Laughter.]

Mr. ELTSE of California. I would rather have a silver dollar that is worth 30 or 40 cents, or whatever you say it is worth at the present time, than to have the same number of dollars 6 months or 1 year from now, after billions of dollars worth of silver is poured into this country and the value of silver depressed.

That is the history of silver production throughout the entire world. Every time the price of silver increases production increases, which, in turn, is followed by a depression in the world market price of silver. If you want to glut the market of America with silver, you will vote for this bill. If you want inflation of the most radical and rabid kind, you will vote for this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. ELTSE of California. No; I do not yield for a suggestion; I yield for a question.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I wish the gentleman would put the figures in his speech to sustain the statement he has just made.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Is this a question?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; this is a question. I want to ask the gentleman to put in his speech the figures that will sustain the statement he has just made regarding the production of silver.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I will leave that for the gentleman's cohorts.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman ought to have the figures before making a statement of that sort.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. In the earlier part of the gentleman's argument he pointed out that what we were doing was actually selling our farm products at a 25-percent discount in order to get rid of them. Does not the gentleman think it is good business that we sell them for 25 percent in order to prevent destruction of them?

Mr. ELTSE of California. This is providing a 25-percent subsidy in addition to what they have already.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I understand the gentleman is a member of the committee that considered this bill.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I am.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. And I also understand the gentleman did not vote against the bill when it was considered in committee.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes; I did.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Then I have been misinformed. Mr. ELTSE of California. I voted against both of these bills—bill No. 7581 and bill No. 1577.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SWANK].

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Speaker, January 18, 1934, the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures reported to this House the President's money-control bill, which became a law on the 30th day of January 1934. I stated on this floor at the time that bill was under consideration by our membership that it went further and was more far-reaching than any bill considered in Congress for many years. In the President's message recommending that bill to Congress, January 15, 1934, concerning silver, he said:

Governments can well, as they have in the past, employ silver as a basis for currency, and I look for a greatly increased use. I am, however, withholding any recommendation to the Congress looking to the further extension of the monetary use of silver, because I believe we should gain more knowledge of the results of the London agreement and of our other monetary measures.

On the 16th day of March 1934 the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures reported to this House for its consideration H.R. 7581, known as the "Dies silver bill." Our able and distinguished Speaker, Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY, has been advocating the remonetization of silver for many years and has been one of its most consistent and forceful advocates. The Speaker has most appropriately permitted the Members of this House to bring that bill up for consideration at this time. The committee has held extensive hearings on this bill and other silver bills.

This bill is written in plain language and is easily understood. Section 1 of the bill provides for the establishment of an agricultural surplus exchange board, consisting of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture. Section 2, directs the board, through our commercial attachés and Government agents in foreign countries, to sell the agricultural surpluses of this country to foreign countries and accept in payment therefor silver coin or bullion at such price per ounce, not in excess of 25 percent of the world market price of silver, as may be agreed to by the board and the foreign buyers. Section 3 directs the board to purchase agricultural products as may be necessary to fulfill option contracts with foreign buyers, and to employ any governmental agency of the Department of Agriculture to carry out the purpose of the act.

Section 4 authorizes and directs the board to deposit the silver bullion or coin received in exchange for products sold to foreign buyers with the Secretary of the Treasury, and he shall immediately cause to be issued against such silver bullion or coin, silver certificates based upon the value per fine ounce which was agreed upon by the board and the foreign buyers subject to the 25-percent limitation above the world market price for silver.

Section 5 directs the board to authorize farmers' cooperative marketing associations to sell American agricultural surplus products abroad and accept silver bullion or coin in payment thereof in the same manner as the board can make such sales. Section 6 fixes the maximum premium above the world market price which the board is authorized to agree to as payment for such products as $400,000,000 per year. Sections 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16 provide for the issuance of the silver certificates, the denominations in which they shall be issued, the storage of the silver bullion, redemption of the certificates, making them legal tender for all debts, public and private, and rules and regulations to be provided by the board.

Mr. Speaker, in 1920 the total exports of the United States amounted to $8,100,000,000, and in 1933 the amount was $1,500,000,000. In 1920 we exported agricultural products to the amount of $3,466,619,819, and in 1933 the amount has been reduced to $600,000,000. Most of our exports went to Europe and in order to increase them to much extent we must increase our trade with the countries of the Orient, as China, India, and Japan, which are on a silver basis. These countries need our agricultural products, but they cannot buy them with gold, for they have no gold; they cannot exchange them with us by reason of our high tariff, and they cannot buy our products with their silver money by reason of the exchange of their silver for gold to pay us, which makes the prices too high in payment with their silver.

The enactment of this bill to be followed with further silver legislation, will open the foreign markets of the Far East for our surplus products, and lessen the likelihood of further farm-control production. These countries need our goods for their people and we need their markets for our people.

The world production of silver from 1493 to 1931, inclusive, amounted to 14,960,313,580 ounces. From 1792 to 1930 there has been produced in the United States 3,167,273,554 ounces of silver. In 1932 the United States produced 23,980,773 ounces of silver and the first 11 months of 1933 produced 19,393,000 ounces. From the best figures the committee could get it is believed that there are about 11,000,000,000 ounces of silver in the world for monetary purposes, and about 7,000,000,000 ounces of that amount are in China and India.

The money kings and the captains of industry, of course, do not want this bill, for like the gold control bill enacted a few weeks ago, their clutches are further removed from the Treasury and the control of the money of our country. The silver certificates issued under the provisions of this bill cannot be called "flat" or "printing press" money in order to scare the people, for back of each silver certificate there will be a sufficient amount of silver to redeem the certificate. There is now in circulation in the United States silver certificates to the amount of $406,918,544, and we have not heard these silver certificates described as "flat" or "printing press." There is in circulation now standard silver dollars to the amount of $29,337,523.

Mr. Speaker, silver was our unit of money long before gold was made our standard. The Continental Congress of 1786 adopted the silver dollar as our unit of value, and it contained 375.64 grains of silver. The silver dollar now contains 371.25 grains of pure silver. This metal continued to be our standard unit of value until it was demonetized by the act of February 12, 1873. We know how industry and business declined right after that law was passed. The price of farm products and other commodities began to advance as soon as this bill was reported favorably by your committee. The remonetization of silver will help bring a new era of prosperity in this country. This is the first time we have had an opportunity to vote on silver, and we anxiously await the result, and hope the bill will be enacted into law this session of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BAKEWELL].

Mr. BAKEWELL. Mr. Speaker, I can well understand why the silver-producing States, observing the lavish way in which the Federal Government has been pouring out money by the hundred million to the agricultural States as a bounty or as a subsidy, with the purpose of raising prices of farm products, might be tempted to seek a Government subsidy also in order to raise the price of silver, and might find justification in the fact that there seems to be a prevailing obsession in certain quarters in favor of high prices for everything. However, if this is the objective, if this is what you seek, I insist that you should seek it by honest and straightforward methods and not by the method of indirection, which is involved in this absurd bill. This is a thoroughly deceptive measure. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], who introduced the bill, proved to be an excellent showman, if I may use that term in no invidious sense, because, after all, what is proposed in this measure is a certain feat of legerdemain, carried on on a world-wide basis, whereby you pull rabbits from hats, and goldfish from tail pockets; and the gentleman succeeded very well, it seems to me, in confusing the issue and in making it appear that things were coming out of this bill that cannot possibly come out. It was clever sleight-of-hand.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAKEWELL. Not now. This bill reminds me of an old-fashioned conundrum, which is several thousand years old. A man that was not a man threw a stone that was not a stone at a bird that was not a bird that was clinging to a tree that was not a tree. I do not know the answer. I believe, however, that the man who was not a man was a eunuch, and the bird that was not a bird was a bat, and you will have to use your imagination for the other features.

What this bill proposes is inflation that is not inflation, dumping that is not dumping; it proposes to increase the foreign purchase of our farm products by taking in payment silver that is not silver and by giving a subsidy that is not a subsidy in order to help the ever-distressed farmer and to aid the impoverished mining States. Of course, this is, without any question, dumping. What are we proposing to do? To sell farm products and take in exchange silver; and we are saying to anyone who will pay for them in silver, "We will mark your silver up 25 percent. If it is worth $100 according to actual valuation in the world market, we will call it $125, if you spend it for our farm products", which, obviously, means selling goods by just so much at a discount. Then we are going to bring this money that we have received back to this country in silver coin or bullion and deposit it and issue silver certificates against it, supposed to be redeemable in silver, although only $100 of the $125 is represented by silver actually on deposit; the rest is pure inflation. To that extent we are undoubtedly inflating. And this transaction is supposed to be completed without costing the Government a cent, just because we juggle with our bookkeeping in that fashion. It is strictly fiat money to the extent of that added 25 percent which is to be handed out as a subsidy, partly to help the farmer and partly to increase the price of silver so as to help the mining States.

I insist that we ought to be honest in these measures. You ought to have a straightforward remonetization of silver, if that is what you want, and not seek to reach your goal by this indirect and deceptive method. But you are not going to help agriculture, as you suppose, by this measure, because underlying the whole proposal is a false premise. There simply is not silver enough to accomplish this result.

What are you proposing to do? You are proposing to take your surplus product and sell it abroad and bring back to this country the silver received for it. But if you will turn to the testimony of the experts you will find they all agree that the amount of silver which can be turned over to us is very limited, and when that supply is exhausted what are you going to do? There is no method whatever of meeting this situation that we have confronting us now, so far as the farmer is concerned, except, first, by a better balance between supply and demand in this country, and, second, by such extension of foreign trade as is possible. There is no other way of helping the farmer. This bill is a delusion and a snare. It ought not to pass.

I observe with interest that the administration has not sent down its orders as yet, so that gentlemen on the Democratic side are still free to use their own judgment on this matter. They signed on the dotted line this morning after the warning came out in the morning newspapers and the Democratic black list was published.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAKEWELL. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, has indicated that he is actually in opposition to this measure?

Mr. BAKEWELL. It was so stated in the newspapers, but was denied by the gentleman who introduced this bill. I have no direct knowledge about it.

Mr. ELTSE of California. It was announced in the committee—I do not know whether the gentleman was present or not—that Mr. Morgenthau, the Secretary of the Treasury, said he did not know anything about it, that they were making a study of it, and did not know when they would be ready to report on it.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAKEWELL. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman's observation that there is not sufficient silver available to accomplish the objects of this bill, and in connection with that admission I ask the gentleman what his real objection is to undertaking remonetization of silver?

Mr. BAKEWELL. That is another story. It would require much more time than I now have at my disposal to answer that question.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will not the result of this bill bring us back to the experience that we had in the silver purchase act that Grover Cleveland had so much trouble with trying to redeem paper in silver? The people will not redeem in silver; they want gold, because we are only temporarily off the gold standard.

Mr. BAKEWELL. Of course, you must remember that this administration has by royal decree canceled all the laws of economics, including Gresham's law. That also has been thrown out of the window.

I would say in conclusion that it seems to me that this bill is a roundabout way of trying to accomplish two results, and that it will accomplish neither, and that the bill ought to be defeated in the interest of honesty and sound legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LUNLOW). The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that we cannot have a longer time, although I appreciate the time we are having here today, to discuss thoroughly the question which I think is most important to this country and the world today.

I notice in the New York Times of yesterday an article which reads:

Bankers disagree on economic cure.

This comes from the League of Nations who assume to know all about gold, and they say that they are dumbfounded and baffled because of the economic conditions of the world as they have been for the last 5 or 6 years. In other words, they are not able to suggest a remedy for these deplorable conditions. I have proposed a bill, with the aid of the hearings of my committee, and under the counsel of my economic adviser, which I believe provides a remedy. I indulge the hope that this bill will soon be brought before this House for criticism and debate. So far I have heard no serious criticism as to it. I am confident it solves this depression; that it cures the gold disease.

I have been asked several times today whether the bill we are now considering, the Dies bill, is in conflict with this measure I have introduced in the House and which was reported out by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures a week ago. I say to the House there is no conflict between these two measures. I want to explain, as I understand, what is to be accomplished by the Dies bill.

The Dies bill provides that our surplus farm products may be sold in the markets of the world and silver be taken therefor. The board that is set up in the bill may allow a premium so that those farm products may have a better price. The bill that I sponsor is founded upon an entirely different principle. I say to the House, lest there be some misgiving about this, that I am supporting the Dies bill. I say there is no conflict between the two bills.

Bearing in mind, now, what I said about what the Dies bill will accomplish, I am going to read the introduction of my bill, and I think you will note the difference between the two measures if I read three or four lines.

The bill I sponsored, H.R. 1577, is:

A bill to preserve and protect the gold standard, through the establishment of an auxiliary monetary reserve of silver and the issuance of silver certificates, payable in their gold-value equivalent, and under such regulations as will provide protection to gold from being cornered, and protection from inflation in gold values during periods of excessive demands.

We are in a critical period, and, as I say, the disease which the world is suffering from today is a gold disease—extreme inflation in gold values. We are approaching this problem from the standpoint of gold. We would take the inflation out of gold and bring the purchasing power of a given weight of gold back to where it would equal its purchasing power under the commodity price index of 1926. That, as a policy, the President has sponsored. He has said we need the 1926 price level, and this House has voted in favor of that price level.

How would we tend to accomplish that under this bill? We would get silver and add it to our money supply in a way that places silver in competition with gold. That is a monetary step in the right direction. Somebody has said this afternoon that if we pass the Dies bill we will get a flood of silver. On the other hand, the gentleman who preceded me, I believe, said, if I quote him correctly, that there is not enough silver in the world to accomplish this object. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. BAKEWELL. Not enough silver which the nations can ship. The figures given showed clearly that, for example, China, with, perhaps, 800,000,000 ounces, could export four or five million and send them out of the country. They could not ship silver out of the country.

Mr. FIESINGER. The bill that I sponsor provides for the purchase of an amount of silver limited to not exceed 1,500,000,000 ounces. This would cover a long period of years. The Secretary of the Treasury would control the purchase of silver under the law as to the amount to purchase, so long as he got to the object provided in the bill, namely, the 1926 price level.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIESINGER. I yield.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Is the Dies bill a temporary measure?

Mr. FIESINGER. I understand it is. I understand it is not a permanent piece of legislation. The bill that I offered is intended to be a permanent piece of legislation to restore and control the stability of gold values and, therefore, of all gold moneys.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I would like to be corrected if my understanding is wrong, but, as I read the Dies bill, it is a permanent piece of legislation until a subsequent Congress may repeal or amend it?

Mr. FIESINGER. I do not so understand that it is. I will let the gentleman from Texas answer the question.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FIESINGER. I yield.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. What is the gentleman's belief as to what people will do? When they hold these silver certificates, when we go back on a gold basis, as we will, will people ask for gold or silver?

Mr. FIESINGER. Under the terms of the bill, they are redeemable in either gold or silver. I do not know whether they will call for gold or silver.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Does the gentleman remember the silver-purchasing act over which Grover Cleveland had so much trouble?

Mr. FIESINGER. I know the history of that very well.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Does the gentleman remember how few people walked up and asked for silver as against gold, and it was optional then?

Mr. FIESINGER. If my recollection serves me right, I understand they had the right to get gold by first asking for silver.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. No; they did not ask for silver at all.

Mr. FIESINGER. And then they had to issue bonds in order to restore the gold.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. The Secretary of the Treasury was to do exactly what the gentleman's bill proposes. I do not remember the amount, but he was to purchase so many million dollars' worth of silver and issue silver certificates.

Mr. FIESINGER. It seems to me it was not less than 2,000,000 ounces a month and not over 4,000,000 ounces a month.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I do not remember the amount, but he was to do exactly what the gentleman's bill provides.

Mr. FIESINGER. There is a difference between the two measures. In the bill I have presented, while the certificates are to be redeemed in the full gold value, that value is paid over in the form of silver, and it meets your objection.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIESINGER. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Section 4 of the Dies bill provides that these powers shall terminate on January 1, 1936; so there is a limitation in the bill.

Mr. FIESINGER. As I say, it is of a temporary nature.

Mr. DIES. And it is optional with the Secretary of the Treasury as to whether he redeems in gold or silver.

Mr. FIESINGER. He can redeem either in gold or in silver.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Does the gentleman believe the United States will ever purchase 1,500,000,000 ounces of foreign silver before the price of silver reaches parity with gold?

Mr. FIESINGER. From my studies of the question I doubt whether we would have to buy or take into the Treasury 500,000,000 ounces of silver in order to reach the 1926 price level.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIESINGER. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman tell the House what, in his opinion, will be the effect on the speeding up of production of silver in this country and other countries of the world upon the passage of this bill?

Mr. FIESINGER. A little while ago I heard the statement made that it would immediately start the silver mines to work. Some of the greatest experts on silver in the world appeared before our committee and their testimony was that silver is a byproduct; that it comes out of gold mines, copper mines, and zinc mines; and that it would be impossible to increase the quantity of silver except that large expenditures were made to increase mining facilities; and then it could not be substantially increased over present production except in a period of about 5 years. It would take 5 years before any increased production could be had over normal production. It must be understood that I am talking about normal production.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Did those experts when they were talking to the committee have in mind the rich silver lodes in Canada?

Mr. FIESINGER. Oh, yes. I regard Mr. Francis Brownell, chairman of the board of the American Smelting & Refining Co., as one of the greatest experts in the world upon this subject. His testimony before the committee was that it would require great commercial activity to substantially increase silver production.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Long before that time the program would expire by the terms of the Dies bill.

Mr. FIESINGER. I should like to point out that those who fear a flood of silver are viewing this matter from a fixed ratio viewpoint. Under silver laws, which fix the price of silver in terms of gold, you must hold up the price you fix. That has been obviated in the use of silver here proposed.

Under the Dies bill, and also under the Fiesinger bill, there is no application of a flood of silver, nor does Gresham's law apply. That is the contribution to modern monetary improvement in method which is found in both of these bills.

The silver certificates are payable in silver at the market price, and to the amount of their gold value in silver. If you wish to assume that there might be a flood of silver, it would alter the amount of silver the certificates will call for, but it could not affect their value. The certificates will always be worth the full gold value called for on the face of the certificates.

Under this plan you make gold out of the silver you place in your reserves. You control the gold values in reserves. You control the value of gold plus gold equivalents in the world. You have a key to control gold values. You cure the gold disease. You solve your money problem.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, it is a strange fate that makes it seem incumbent upon me from time to time to take the floor in defense of the administration and the President. Once more I feel called upon to do that because, although it would be greatly to the interest of my party to have this measure become law, I prefer the welfare of my country to that of my party.

The program here presented runs counter to one the administration has been following for the last 5 months. In the course of this period it has expended an unknown amount of money in buying gold abroad in order to cheapen the value of gold. It is here proposed to spend the equivalent of a huge amount of money to buy silver abroad in order to increase its value, and I would not put the administration in the paradoxical situation of trying to lower the value of gold and in the next breath trying to raise the value of silver.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. If I have time at the end of my remarks it will give me the greatest of pleasure to yield to the gentleman.

I hope that gentlemen will not attempt to follow the mathematical abstractions of this question, but will try to reach the pith of it, the marrow of it, the core of it, the very heart of it, which may be set forth in one sentence: It is the purpose of this bill to sell to foreign countries surplus agricultural products below cost. That is the primary purpose. We have faced that sort of thing now at almost every session in the 15 years I have had the honor to be a Member of this body; and again, and again, and again Congress has set its face against what it briefly calls "dumping". The gentleman who presents the bill says this is not dumping. If you will carefully read his statement of reasons in the report as I have—and I have read it over three times—you may get a glimmer of what he means by his rejoinder in this particular. To my mind the best explanation I can find is that from the home point of view, regarding only the money result here, he holds this is not dumping. That, however, does not concern the foreigner. If the foreigner can get his food and his cotton at a quarter less than he would otherwise have to pay, that is dumping.

Pray, of what gain is it to give our foreign competitors one half their cost of living—that being the average for food and clothing combined—one half their cost of living at one quarter less than the expense to the wage earners of this country?

Why give the employer of labor in Berlin, in Lyons, in Manchester, or Leeds the advantage of a reduction of one quarter of one half of what he must pay for wages? Why thus put at a disadvantage the wage earner of the United States by compelling him to pay more for his food and for his clothing than is paid by his competitor abroad?

At the present moment the administration is doing all that is within its power to conciliate the countries of the world, to bring economic peace, to attempt by methods with which you are all familiar in the matter of proposals, to accomplish the very opposite of what is contemplated here. By dumping you invite the animosity of every country into which you dump; you invite retaliatory action; you invite the raising of tariffs, even embargoes. In many directions you encourage animosity and resentment, when the administration is doing its best to secure some measure of economic peace and harmony.

Furthermore, you have here an interesting contradiction presented by the method of redeeming the silver certificates. I congratulate the author of the bill for the adroitness with which he has drawn his provision, but he seems to have forgotten the fact that within a few weeks we have made it illegal for any citizen of this country to have in his possession a single ounce of gold or a single gold certificate; and yet he has the courage, in the face of the program of his administration, to come here and advise that these certificates may be redeemable in gold. He contradicts his vote. He contradicts the program of the President. You will find some difficulty in understanding the gentleman's report, but in his speech on the floor he has definitely said that these certificates might be redeemed in gold. If time permitted, I would have the statement read over to you.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield? He has made an incorrect statement.

Mr. LUCE. Under the circumstances I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DIES. I said that this bill has the same redemption clause as contained in the gold bill. The Treasury does not have to redeem unless it wants to, then when it redeems it can redeem in gold or silver.

Mr. LUCE. I thought the gentleman must have used language he did not mean. When he reads the transcript tonight he will find language there with implication he did not mean, I am sure. If, however, the wording of the devaluation bill was the same as it is here, attention may be called to section 5 of that bill, which began:

No gold shall hereafter be coined, and no gold shall hereafter be paid out or delivered by the United States.

Exception is made as to coinage for foreign countries. All gold coin is to be withdrawn from circulation and melted into bullion. The gold is to be maintained in the Treasury as alleged security equal to the dollar amounts required by law, a requirement that, unless the Government acquired other gold, would be impaired by use to redeem silver certificates.

I call it "alleged" because nothing is in reality "security" unless it can be had at the demand of the holder of an obligation. For the purposes of domestic use as money, gold certificates are in effect irredeemable. However, my observations would have been more accurately directed to the implication the uninformed citizen would see in the use of the phrase "in gold." Without technical explanation that phrase gives the public to understand it means what it says. And by the way, I seriously object to the words in a note to the monthly Circulation Statement of United States Money, saying:

Gold certificates are secured dollar for dollar by gold held in the Treasury for redemption for uses authorized by law.

That is deception. There is now no assurance whatever that the holder of a certificate can get an ounce of gold, nor will there be if this bill is enacted. Redemption in gold is a fantasy, a delusion, and a lure to the people of the United States, because it continues the attempt to make them think their money may be redeemed. We ought not to deceive them in this regard. The people ought to know that, except for the purposes of foreign trade and the arts, not a dollar of our pretended gold currency is redeemable in gold. We have irredeemable paper currency.

Silver today is redeemable. Under this bill it will be redeemable, but to what extent? I call the gentleman's attention to the words of his own report:

There is only approximately 20 cents' worth of silver in our silver dollar.

The only difference between a silver dollar and a paper dollar in this regard is that the paper dollar may have about one tenth of a cent of intrinsic value while a silver dollar has 20 cents of intrinsic value. It is nothing but fiat money. It never will be anything else but fiat money until it is restored to a parity with gold.

In the meantime, what is the proposal of the gentleman who says that there is only 20 cents' worth of silver in a silver dollar? He is asking us to enact a measure that will put 25 cents into the silver dollar. In other words, increase its intrinsic value by one fourth. It has 20 cents' worth of silver now and he would add 5 cents more of value to what we called a "cart-wheel dollar" when we used it hereabouts. He will then go forth to the country and make the people feel that he has made some great contribution to their welfare because he has changed the content of a flat dollar from 20 cents to 25 cents. Here again is an interference with the monetary program of the administration that will throw it out of gear.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. LUCE. May I take this additional time to insert in the Record the words of a great President, a great Democrat, a great American, one of the bravest Presidents, if not the bravest President, this country ever had, Grover Cleveland, of New York. [Applause.] They were spoken in a message to Congress August 6, 1893, 40 years and a little more ago. Then the plight of the country was as bad as it is today. Panic had wrought havoc on every hand. Misery stalked the streets. The monetary situation was worse than the one we now confront. A law requiring increased purchase of silver bullion, enacted 3 years before, had helped to bring on the disaster. The Congress was called together in special session to repeal that law. Let me read as solemnly as I can and with as much emphasis as I can command the opening paragraph of the strongest part of President Grover Cleveland's message, the rest to be inserted in the Record:

The people of the United States are entitled to a sound and stable currency and to money recognized as such on every exchange and in every market of the world. The Government has no right to injure them by financial experiments opposed to the policy and practice of other civilized states, nor is it justified in permitting an exaggerated and unreasonable reliance on our national strength and ability to jeopardize the soundness of the people's money.

The President went on to say:

This matter rises above the plane of party politics. It vitally concerns every business and calling and enters every household in the land. There is one important aspect of the subject which especially should never be overlooked. At times like the present, when the evils of unsound finance threaten us, the speculator may anticipate a harvest gathered from the misfortune of others, the capitalist may protect himself by hoarding or may even find profit in the fluctuations of values, but the wage earner—the first to be injured by a depreciated currency and the last to receive the benefit of its correction—is practically defenseless. He relies for work upon the ventures of confident and contented capital. This failing him, his condition is without alleviation, for he can neither prey on the misfortunes of others nor hoard his labor. One of the greatest statesmen our country has known, speaking more than 50 years ago, when a derangement of the currency had caused commercial distress, said:

"The very man of all others who has the deepest interest in a sound currency and who suffers most by mischievous legislation in money matters is the man who earns his daily bread by his daily toil."

These words are as pertinent now as on the day they were uttered, and ought to impressively remind us that a failure in the discharge of our duty at this time must especially injure those of our countrymen who labor, and who, because of their number and condition, are entitled to the most watchful care of their Government.

Let every man here devoutly pray that another Democratic President, coming, likewise, to the White House through the capital at Albany, may also have the courage, the honesty, and the patriotism to keep the pledge of his party and his own pledge to preserve for the people of the United States a sound currency. [Applause.]

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS] 5 minutes.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, it is very appropriate that the first silver bill that has been brought into this Chamber with any possible chance of favorable consideration or passage since the year 1890, is brought in on the anniversary of the birth of that great silver leader, the late William Jennings Bryan. [Applause.] Today is the seventy-fourth anniversary of his birth.

I have been very much amused at two of the gentlemen who have preceded me. I am very much indebted to the gentleman from California, because I think he gave to the House two of the real fundamental reasons that this bill should be passed. [Applause.] Namely, that it would be possible to sell $2,000,000,000 worth of farm commodities and increase our issue of currency by the same amount.

The gentleman's first statement was that under this bill we could buy $2,000,000,000 worth of silver and thereby export $2,000,000,000 worth of agricultural products. The Lord knows this is what we want to do. [Applause.]

But there seems to be a difference of opinion. The gentleman from Connecticut said we would not get any appreciable amount of silver—not enough to do any good.

So before the opponents of this measure present to this House valid reasons for their opposition, they should at least consult each other and unitedly present the same reasons for opposing the bill.

I would say to the gentleman from California, I understand that Thurston, the great magician, will be here at the theater on March 30, and I am sure he can sell these new tricks to him. The gentleman says we will have $2,000,000,000 of monetary silver placed in the Treasury and then have it slipped out by some unknown method like Mr. Thurston slips cats out of hats or out of the tail of his coat, and so on, and leave $2,000,000,000 in silver certificates outstanding, against which the Treasury has nothing for redemption. Certainly, the gentleman knows that no silver certificates are issued or reissued unless the silver dollars or bullion is in the Treasury for coverage.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman can answer that a little later, because I have only 5 minutes.

Now, let us see what this bill does. In the first place it sets up a board which shall consist of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture, which shall be known as the "agricultural surplus exchange board." The board is directed to deal with individuals and farmers' cooperative marketing associations in exporting agricultural commodities to those nations that may pay for these goods in silver at a price somewhere between 10-percent and 25-percent premium, at the option of the board.

The price of silver in the United States on Saturday's market, was about 45.65 cents per ounce. The London price, if I remember correctly, in gold, the same as our price is expressed, was 41.10 cents per ounce. Therefore if we gave 10 percent under the terms of this bill to our exporters through the services of this board we would only equalize the world price of silver with our domestic price.

However, we are now purchasing at the rate of approximately 2,000,000 ounces a month, newly mined silver and paying therefor at the rate of 64½ cents an ounce. This is one half of the old coinage price of $1.29. If we are paying at the present time 64½ cents an ounce for newly mined silver, why could we not very safely issue silver certificates against silver that is brought here from the foreign nations in payment of our exportable surplus agricultural products. The gentleman from Texas has very well explained this part of the subject.

I was amused at the gentleman from California when he said we would have great inflation and wind up by losing not only the $400,000,000 which represents the balance in premiums paid, but, probably, the entire $2,000,000,000; but in the question that I directed to him as to whether he would like to have a million of these dollars, by some of the same magic he tried to use with his bookkeeping, he tried to wave that aside and say that in 6 or 8 months it would be of no value.

This bill does not go as far in the rehabilitation of silver as I desire. But it is a step in the right direction. Great Britain controls 80 percent of the annual gold production of the world. Three nations own and control practically 85 percent of the present gold stock, namely, Great Britain, France, and the United States. The gold revaluation policy cannot seriously affect the commodity price level, because gold is not well enough divided among the population. Therefore we cannot hope to attain the results of a 1926 commodity price level with this policy alone.

The United States owns and controls about 56 percent of the annual silver production and about 80 percent of silver refining. More than three fourths of the people of the world utilize silver either as their standard of exchange or in a minor capacity. We cannot hope to develop our former export trade with Europe. In my judgment that trade is gone forever. We must look to the Orient. India and China, with a population of more than 800,000,000 people, possesses three fifths of the silver monetary stock of the world. At present ruinous world price for silver they cannot buy our goods. With silver rehabilitated, they will be able to purchase our commodities. Our export trade in the future must be developed in the Orient.

There is no subsidy in this bill to agriculture. The premium which may be offered for foreign silver will be entirely compensated for in the rise of the price of silver, and the value will be contained in the bullion placed in the Treasury. In addition thereto, the Government will enjoy seigniorage profits to the extent of anywhere from 80 cents to 29 cents an ounce, depending, of course, upon how fast the price of silver rises.

I venture the prediction that if this bill is passed today by a two-thirds vote, as I fully believe it will, there will be a favorable reaction not only in the price of silver but in the price of agricultural commodities throughout the United States. Let us give it a trial. The crime which destroyed silver, the money of the Constitution, first perpetrated in 1873 and finally consummated in 1900, will be partly undone in the passage of this measure today. Pass this bill, enact it into law, and let us get rid of our surplus wheat, cotton, and meat products, and the price of agricultural commodities will greatly advance before another harvest is gathered.

I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and insert in the Record the following table, which shows the location of the gold and silver stocks of the world.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The table is as follows:

World's monetary stocks of gold and silver at the close of the year 1932

[The amounts are expressed in American dollars at the gold price of $20.67 per ounce and the then prevailing price of silver per ounce]

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGugin].

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, in considering this bill today we are largely bogged down with all of the prejudices growing out of the money question. It seems to me that if we can cut away all of the underbrush and get down exactly to what is in this bill there is not a great deal of controversy.

This bill is not a far-reaching money bill. Primarily it is paying a 25-cent subsidy for exporting to foreign countries our farm surpluses.

The subsidy is paid in silver, the hope being that it will benefit the agricultural industry in this country and may also benefit the silver industry, both of which are in the dumps.

I believe I can say without exaggeration that until agriculture, silver, and other mineral commodities are upon a paying basis there is no hope of recovery in the industrial sections of this country. [Applause.]

This bill is limited to $400,000,000. That is the amount of the subsidy, and by the expenditure of this 25 percent subsidy a dollar's worth of farm products will be purchased.

Now, if we spend that $400,000,000 we shall have exported at least a $1,600,000,000 worth of surplus farm products. If that is done, the depression is over. [Applause.]

Let me tell you that the thing the last one of us should worry about is that we may not be able to sell that many dollars' worth of farm products. The thing we should be worrying about is that we are not going to be able to spend $400,000,000 in subsidies in exporting farm products.

This country produces a surplus of cotton, wheat, and other farm commodities. There is no hope of getting out of the present dilemma unless we can reduce production or export the surplus. We cannot reduce the production of farm commodities without giving up our rights under the Constitution as free born American citizens.

I would not vote for the cotton bill that we passed today, because I would not vote to send any man to the penitentiary for producing cotton and selling it without paying a confiscatory tax. But this much is certain, we either must follow that course or figure out some plan whereby we can export the surplus farm commodities.

Now, I listened with interest to some of the remarks by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

He worries for the American laboring man and says that if we pass this bill we are making it possible for his labor competitor in foreign countries to buy these commodities at 25 percent less than the American laboring man can buy them. My answer to that is that through the protective tariff system the American laboring man has a dollar with which to buy these commodities, while the British laboring man has 50 cents and the French and the German laboring man have but 25 cents with which to buy them.

My friend from Massachusetts states that it is heresy to talk about subsidizing an exported farm commodity and that it is heresy to talk about selling it abroad below the cost of production. If it is a crime by legislation to sell below the cost of production, then it is a crime by legislation to sell above the cost of production, and by virtue of tariff legislation American manufactured products have been sold above the cost of production to the cotton and wheat producers of this country for 60 years. [Applause.] It is not to be concluded from my remarks that I am a free trader or that I would tear down our tariff walls. I shall state my position on that matter when we reach the bill in a few days wherein Congress is called upon to give away its constitutional right to levy tariffs. I believe in protecting the American market for American producers, and following that one step further, I say that we have reached that time when it is not within the power of Congress or the power of the people of this country to protect American markets for American producers unless we provide that the agricultural sections in America are able to buy. I do not believe that you will reach a time when agriculture is able to buy by driving 50 percent of the farmers of this country out of business, and that is the policy that we are following if we follow the policy of reducing farm production to American consumption. If we continue to follow the policy of reducing farm production to American consumption, it is going to mean that 25 to 50 percent of the farmers must be driven from the soil to join the ranks of the unemployed in the industrial sections.

Talk about a subsidy! If here is a $400,000,000 subsidy which at the same time makes it possible to export $1,600,000,000 of farm surpluses, then it is a good investment. That subsidy of $400,000,000 is nil as compared with the subsidy of billions which we are now spending trying to uphold industry and support the unemployed, primarily because the agricultural sections are unable to buy the products of the American laboring man.

I do not know that this bill will succeed. I lay no claim here today that if you pass this bill we shall be able to export these farm commodities, but I do say that if by the enactment of this bill we are able to export these farm commodities, the agricultural sections may gain in the first instance, but the greatest gain will be for this country as a whole. Unless agriculture can produce in a normal way at a profit, then we have reached that day when we need hold out no hope for a return of industrial employment, when we need hold out no hope for a solvent Government, when we need hold out no hope for the preservation of the value of any accumulated property in this country. This country has reached the place where it is going down further and further unless agriculture can come back up. But I will not subscribe to remedies to help agriculture, which remedies mean trying to bring agriculture back to prosperity through the process of going out of business. I believe agriculture must prosper through the process of production and not through lack of production.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCGUGIN. No. My time is too limited. So, getting this bill down to its last analysis, it is not an unbridled silver bill. My Republican friends, if this bill is a wild silver bill, then John Sherman was a money fanatic and a silver crank, because he advocated a silver-purchase bill. If this bill were a bill providing for a double standard of money I could not at this time be for it. I do not believe that we can have a double standard of money. The future must teach me that which I have not yet learned before I can understand how a double standard of money at a fixed ratio will succeed.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCGUGIN. No. I do believe that within reason we can uphold the value of silver certificates issued under this bill.

Something has been said about inflation under this bill. Well, if we export the maximum amount of farm products possible under this bill, we shall add $2,000,000,000 to our currency. There will be back of that $2,000,000,000, $1,600,000,000 of silver at the current market price. As of the moment, it will be a $400,000,000 inflation. In the end it may not be inflation at all. If some day and sometime silver regains its normal value of $1.29 an ounce, we shall have $4,000,000,000 worth of silver backing up $2,000,000,000 of currency.

I am not afraid of inflation which is confined to 75 cents worth of silver at the present low market price backing up a dollar of currency. As a part of our Federal Reserve Act and the accepted principle of sound money, we have for years provided that 40 cents worth of gold would justify a dollar of currency.

I am not afraid of such inflation as is found in this bill. I am afraid of pure paper inflation when there is nothing back of the currency except faith and credit. If we do not balance our Budget and if we continue to spend more than we take in, it is only a question of time until we shall be meeting Government obligations with printed money. If we can export our surplus farm commodities and get agriculture back on a paying basis in this country, we shall be able to balance our Budget. If this bill will succeed in exporting these farm surpluses, we shall be able to escape a pure printing-press inflation, which we shall probably not be able to escape unless agriculture does quickly return to a profit-producing basis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the more the silver question is discussed, the more the mind becomes confused. It is hard to find any two men who have the same view on the subject.

My outstanding objection to this bill is that it does not have the endorsement of the Treasury Department. A question of such importance should be considered jointly by the executive and legislative branches.

Then, again, it creates a board; puts another Government board into the business of selling surplus agricultural products abroad. Will it be another farm board? This board can deal with foreign buyers. It will be known as the "Agricultural Surplus Exchange Board."

The board, under section 5, is directed to authorize the farmers' cooperative marketing associations to enter into contracts for the sale of American agricultural products in exchange for silver bullion, and so forth.

Now, what does it do with reference to the old, established firms that have been exporting our agricultural products for years? Some gentlemen will say that section 7 will take care of that. I say section 7 will not take care of it.

I could say a great deal about how this bill was handled in committee, but I am not going to do so. I will abide by the rules and not discuss what occurred in executive session.

If this bill goes to the Senate, in my opinion, everything after the enacting clause is going to be stricken out. If it should go to the Senate, you probably will have some kind of a silver bill that in the end might be very valuable, but I do not think the Senate will agree to this measure as written. However, that is not a proper way to legislate.

I cannot understand why there is such a big rush to put through a silver bill that affects agricultural products when the Treasury Department has stated it is giving the general silver question consideration and intimates that it will not be long before it will be ready with some suggestions that will take care of silver. We waited for the Treasury and the President's recommendations as to gold. Why not wait a few days and see what they have to say about silver?

I am interested in increasing the purchasing power of silver. Many countries on a silver basis buy American products but when silver was down to 30 cents our workmen in our factories were only required to manufacture one half the number of shoes, and so forth, to fill orders in comparison with the number they manufactured when silver was around 65 cents. If we can find a way to get silver back to its old value it will help our industries.

If the principle in this bill is sound, then why did you not let us so word the bill so as to let those who have been engaged for over a hundred years exporting our surplus agricultural products handle the job and not put the Government in the business, thus destroying our exporters, as did the Farm Board. Our exporters have elevators, all kinds of storage facilities, and can take over this work. The new board will be required to secure facilities just as the Farm Board did. There can be no doubt as to that.

Again I say, I think we should have some kind of a silver bill, and I do think when that bill is written the Treasury Department should have its views before the committee so that we can work in harmony with the administration. Team work is essential at this time.

I do not like to disagree with the members of a committee of which I am a member, but I cannot support a bill that is going to create another governmental agency to go into business and compete with those who are engaged in the exporting of grains in this country, and who have handled the exports for over 100 years, or until the Farm Board came into existence.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes; I yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. I want the gentleman to understand there is a difference between this board and the Farm Board.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Absolutely none whatever when it comes to competing with private business men.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. This does not propose to expend the taxpayers' money. You are to get the money from foreign countries.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman from Texas, whose opinion I respect, should certainly know this will be a board just exactly like the Farm Board, insofar as the handling of our exports is concerned and its effect on those engaged in the exporting business.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In yielding to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], the author of this bill, I want to say the House is indebted to him for the study he has given this question, and I regret exceedingly I cannot agree with him today. He is sincere and feels that he is doing something to help a situation that needs assistance. I do think if he had just waited for the Treasury's recommendations he would have a better bill.

Mr. DIES. Does the gentleman not know that according to the plain wording of section 7 the exporter has the same rights as anybody else?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I do not. If the exporter has the same right, then why did you not put him in section 5? I ask to have the exporter put in section 5 in committee. The exporters in my city do not agree with the gentleman's interpretation of the language of section 7. They do not understand why you specifically named the farmers' cooperative marketing associations in section 5 and left them out. If you would have added "regular established firms or corporations engaged in the handling of agricultural products" it would have been better.

Mr. DIES. What difference does it make just so long as it is in the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I do not agree the exporter is in the bill. Why did you not put them in along with the cooperative marketing associations? What objection could you have if you claim they are in the bill? I repeat I requested the committee to do so when one of the representatives of the farm organization was before the committee, and I understood the gentleman from Texas to say that would be taken care of. The hearings will bear me out. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] has expired.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, yesterday was the anniversary of the birth of Grover Cleveland. This bill, I assume, is a Democratic present to commemorate the birthday of that former courageous Democratic President who, in and out of season, opposed silver heresies, as was stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]. Grover Cleveland, when warned not to speak publicly against silver, answered:

I am supposed to be a leader of my party and if any word of mine can check these dangerous fallacies, it is my duty to give that word, whatever the costs may be to me.

I hold in my hand the hearings before the Committee on Foreign Affairs of June 10, 1933, which contains a number of statements by Grover Cleveland against both the purchase of silver and the experimenting with free silver.

I was interested in reading in the newspapers this morning that a blacklist, a Democratic blacklist, had been established by the Speaker. I have forgotten all the votes that were involved, but I suppose it included the economy bill, soldiers' bonus, veterans' legislation, and so on; but now the Speaker has brought into the House this silver bill so that he can be put on the list, too. Like Abou ben Adhem, his name will be at the head of the list. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOEPPPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Oh, no; not in 5 minutes.

One of my main objections to the consideration of this bill is the fact that this is no way to consider legislation of such importance, involving a silver experiment under suspension of the rules which limits debate and does not permit amendments. Very few Members of the House, other than those from the silver States, have studied the silver question carefully in recent years. It has not been a paramount issue before the country. From 1873 to 1896 it was perhaps the main issue before the country, and the Members of Congress knew the facts, and repeatedly voted down legislation of this kind, particularly involving the purchase of silver. The Democratic Congress in 1893, overwhelmingly Democratic by a majority of 2 to 1, voted to repeal the 1890 resolution to buy silver bullion by a vote of 239 to 109. Now, you come in here under suspension of the rules, when it is impossible to offer any amendments, and you say to the farmers out in the Middle West, "We are going to solve all your problems; all you have to do now to become rich is to sell all the surplus foodstuffs that you can produce to foreign nations at a 25-percent discount provided you are paid in silver."

Now, what is the answer? This is nothing but a hoax. This is nothing but a racket. The answer is that last July the Government, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, offered to loan China money to buy our products. China has been particularly mentioned here in connection with this bill, and you say you are going to open up the Asiatic markets for the surplus products of the American farmers. Almost a year ago we offered the exporters doing business with China $40,000,000 to export cotton and $10,000,000 to export wheat. What happened? China took exactly $4,000,000 of cotton and until now has only paid back $400,000, and she took practically no wheat at all—I believe less than half a million dollars worth of wheat.

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield in 5 minutes.

We have got practically nothing in return for our loans and China even refuses to buy wheat and cotton with our money.

Now, it is proposed to give a bonus of 25 percent to the buyers of cotton and wheat and other farm products in foreign countries if they will pay in silver. Will wonders never cease? You say you are going to sell a billion dollars worth of farm products. You want to be very careful the farmers do not lose $100,000,000. You want to be very careful by the passage of this legislation that the present foreign markets for our surplus farm products are not interfered with so that foreign importers will actually be paying less than they are paying today. Nobody can guarantee by this bill that foreign nations will buy one dollar's worth more of your farm products. We found that to be so in Russia and China and other countries when we tried to lend them money to buy our surplus crops with. Now you propose to undermine your own markets abroad by permitting foreign importers to pay 25 percent less by use of silver payments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has expired.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BERLIN].

Mr. BERLIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not come from a silver-producing State. None of my constituents, large or small, so far as I know, is engaged in the production of silver. I have no direct interest in this industry. The prosperity of the silver industry will not stir me to a pitch of wild enthusiasm. Neither will its depression thrust me into the depths of despair.

The activities, the frequently wild antics and startling fluctuations in the price of this metal on the trading exchanges will neither add to nor detract from my personal material possessions. I am not a speculator in silver.

I set all this forth, Mr. Speaker, because I resent the implication which we recently heard made in high places that a vote for silver is not a disinterested, is not an honest vote. Before I would voice such sentiments as those to which I refer I would be prepared—indeed, I would insist—that my statement be more than mere innuendo. I resent such type of statesmanship, if you can dignify that attitude by such description.

Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the Dies bill. My interest in this bill is due to my conviction that it may have sufficient merit to accomplish the worthy purpose which my colleague from Texas, who is author of it, presumes.

I see in this bill, Mr. Speaker, an attempt to perform a constructive service for agriculture and, at the same time, a constructive service for the whole country; for what benefits agriculture generally must in the end benefit the rest of our population.

This bill, as I see it, is more practically conceived, if I may put it that way, than most of the monetary legislation which comes before this body. It is not merely an effort to set at work machinery to expend money solely to buy money. It does not propose to buy silver with gold, or silver with silver, or directly subsidize miners and mining.

There is much more to it than that. The basis of this proposal of my colleague from Texas appears to me to be to move out of our cluttered markets a large portion of the agricultural surplus with which we are burdened and exchange that perishable asset for something more permanent, more substantial and fluid, namely, silver.

Mr. Speaker, if I were a producer of peaches, or apples, wheat, corn, or cotton, and I had warehoused a large quantity of these things which I could not move, it seems to me that I would be in most desperate circumstances. The peaches and apples I could not keep. The corn, wheat, and cotton I could, for a time at least. On the other hand, how am I going to finance this storage and at the same time continue financing the cultivation of my acres? Obviously I am not. I say "obviously" because even a hasty glance at statistics bearing upon the financial position of our farmers would indicate that the word "finance" must ring in their ears like a doomsday bell.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, appears to me to be an instrument which we may grasp as a means of distributing this vast surplus which we are amassing from year to year. Do not misunderstand me. I am not certain—as who can be?—that we have in this bill a panacea of some rare quality. No, indeed. Whether it will perform in the manner desired remains to be seen.

I have studied this bill, however, and I feel certain that it can do no harm and has within it the potentialities of doing much that is good.

I feel that there is too much scorn, too much hasty and unconsidered judgment, in regard to legislation which is connected with silver. That modest metal seems an inspiration either to extravagant enthusiasm or bitter denunciation. Either course, I am sure, is scarcely worthy of this House in so important a matter. When the word "silver" is mentioned, men are too likely, in such a body as this, to jump to their feet and cheer or slump on their spines awaiting only a chance to arise in vigorous wrath and assail all and sundry connected with that word.

As for myself, the proposal that agriculture be assisted through the stimulation and circulation of silver and silver certificates does not alarm me. In fact, should such stimulation result in a legitimate increase in circulation through the disposal of agricultural surpluses, I see great advantage accruing to our farms and farmers.

It is not necessary, Mr. Speaker, for me to argue this bill clause by clause before this House. I should, however, like to point out what I consider a most important aspect of it.

In section 2, referring to the agricultural surplus exchange board, we read:

The board is hereby authorized and directed . . . to negotiate with foreign buyers with the view of selling American agricultural surpluses produced in the United States—

And so forth.

It appears to me that this language is clear enough to convince anyone that the action of the board is not mandatory, it is not forced to enter any agreements with prospective foreign buyers if the terms are not advantageous, so that we are not here adopting legislation making compulsory the disposal of surplus, the acceptance of silver, and the issuance of silver certificates. These things are left to the judgment of this board, which, I dare say, will be as capable as any such board can be made. We, therefore, may rest assured that our vote for this measure will not be a vote for some wild unworkable scheme that will put a silver spoon in the mouth of agriculture at the expense of the rest of the population.

In conclusion, I should like to ask a question: Suppose you had done a day's work for someone. Suppose that you had raised 10 bushels of potatoes. Suppose you sold your furniture, a picture, your books, or whatever else you wanted to put on the market. The buyer tenders payment in good old-fashioned "cart wheels"—silver dollars. Would you take them? Or would you withdraw your offer and sit pouting because the buyer did not offer gold pieces instead? I think you would take the "cart wheels." Then, Mr. Speaker, why should not our farmers have the opportunity of disposing of their surplus products by accepting silver dollars or silver certificates for them? I see no reason; and because I believe that if these commodities can be disposed of to the foreign buyers, then here is a practical opportunity to effect such sale.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, we have had times in this country when labor was employed and when the job sought the man rather than the man having to seek the job, and I wish to give you the reason which brought about the former situation. I hold in my hand a report of the conference between officers of the Federal Reserve Board and of the Federal Advisory Council of class A directors of Federal Reserve banks. Governor Harding, in explaining the situation in 1920, had this to say:

We have had an analysis made of the general banking and credit expansion in this country. Without going into details I am going to save time by stating the result. We find that since the 20th of June 1914, the expansion of bank credit in this country has amounted $11,000,000,000. At the same time there has been about $1,900,000,000 new money put into circulation. During the same time there has been an advance in commodity prices of about 25 percent, and this has been accompanied by a decrease in production of essential articles.

If there is one activity of the Government which should be paramount, it should be the effort to bring about an increase in prices and a decrease in consumption. We have the answer in the statement of the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board contained in this document—Senate Document No. 310—when he explained that as a result of putting $1,900,000,000 into circulation and expanding the credit by $11,000,000,000 we had a decrease in production and an increase in prices.

Twenty percent of the wheat produced in the United States is raised west of the Rocky Mountains. Of this amount 60 percent has always found an outlet in foreign export.

Today we have lost our foreign outlet and have the wheat left on our hands with the result that every man, woman, and child in the United States is paying a tax on all the wheat products which reach his table to make up the deficiency caused by neglect of silver and neglect to build up our foreign markets through stabilizing the price of silver. The penalty we are today paying for this neglect is 20 cents a bushel on every one of the 120,000,000 bushels of wheat raised west of the Rocky Mountains that formerly went to the Orient, and this tax is necessary to balance the price on the Chicago market plus the freight rate from the Pacific coast.

When this bill is put into operation the people will be saved this amount of money. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said this afternoon concerning the attitude of the administration toward this bill. I dislike very much to quote a Cabinet officer from memory, and must apologize for not having the transcript of his testimony before the House Committee on Banking and Currency, where he appeared some 2 weeks ago. For the last hour I have been trying to get the transcript of his testimony, but within the last 10 minutes I have learned that, contrary to the rules of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the transcript is in the office of a distinguished Senator and is not obtainable because he and his secretary say it is lost. So I must quote from memory.

When the Secretary of the Treasury was before the subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency which had under consideration the bill to establish a Federal monetary authority, my distinct recollection is that he said that the administration, without any hindrance or interference of any other legislation concerning monetary matters, should have another 9 months in which to work out its program.

Personally I have tried to go along with the Secretary of the Treasury and the President in every way I honestly could; and without any comment upon the merits of this particular bill—and I admit it has merit—I think all of us, Republicans and Democrats alike, should give the President and the Secretary of the Treasury an opportunity to establish and perfect their monetary program without interference. For that reason, and that reason only, I shall vote against this bill. [Applause.]

Under the authority granted to me to revise and extend the above remarks, I should like to call the attention of the Members of the House to certain excerpts from a statement made by Hon. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Secretary of the Treasury, before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, on Thursday, March 1, 1934. The transcript of this testimony has been obtained by me since making the above statement on the floor of the House.

H.R. 7581, the bill under consideration, authorizes the issuance of silver certificates in a manner contrary to the present policy of the administration, and the mandatory features of the bill might cause embarrassment to the administration in the establishment and maintenance of its monetary policy. This is borne out by the fact that Secretary Morgenthau, when he appeared before the subcommittee on March 1, testified as follows:

The country has just come through one of the most difficult financial crises we have ever had, and through various Executive orders of the President and through acts of Congress we are just beginning to see a little daylight. What the future monetary policy of this country will be I do not think anybody is wise enough to tell at this time, because we have not had sufficient experience.

I quote further from his testimony, as follows:

I hope Congress will give us at least the balance of this year to work out the present program as it has been laid out before it is changed. I think possibly if we have another 9 months or a year, then we will know a little bit more about it.

Mr. Morgenthau went on further to state that the monetary policy of the Government today is more or less of an experiment, and he would not recommend that the Congress take any action that would change the present system.

It is because of this attitude on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury that I feel that we should refrain from passing any legislation at the present time having as its purpose the further use of silver as a monetary base, and we should be willing to await the announcement of the Treasury Department on these questions after they have had an opportunity to gather together all the information which is now being obtained, and should not commit the Treasury Department prematurely to a policy to which, after months of study on its part, might not be desirable.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC].

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, today, this afternoon, marks the last chapter with respect to the sad passing of one of the prominent citizens of Oklahoma and the Nation, namely, the Honorable John Simpson, president of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Association of America, whose funeral service is now being held in Oklahoma City. He was stricken while testifying before a Senate committee for the purpose of giving his views with respect to pending legislation, and it can truthfully be said that he died in the harness, while expressing views of the organization which he so well represented. I think it is fitting for me to say that this is one bill that he has sponsored on many occasions and I am sure that he knew the economic condition that relates to world markets and that, if Congress would pass a suitable silver bill similar to the one that is now being considered, it would enable our citizens to dispose of their surplus crop to countries like China, India, and others that produce silver. I am sure that had he not been stricken, his familiar face could have been seen as an onlooker in the gallery at this very moment.

There may be those who have differed with him, with respect to his pronouncements, yet, when it came to ability, perseverance, and integrity every person is bound to say that he was conscientious in the performance of a duty for the organization that he headed as its president. As the chairman of the Oklahoma House delegation, I want to take this opportunity of expressing to the members of the family and his cooperators my appreciation for the assistance he has given to the delegation in working on matters of vital interest to the citizens of Oklahoma and the Nation as well. I also want to express to his loved ones my sincere sympathy, and I know that I am joined in this expression by many of my colleagues, who held him in the highest esteem. [Applause.]

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] such time as he may desire.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, more than 2 years ago a little handful of Members of Congress, largely from the South and West, who were interested in remedial legislation to relieve the acute money shortage throughout the country, formed what has been known here as the "Open Forum." I was a charter member of that group. We have seen it grow from a small but earnest committee to one of the most powerful groups ever organized by Members of this body. At first some of the old guard jestingly, if not sarcastically, referred to our committee as the "Little House of Commons." But under the able leadership of the distinguished gentleman from Texas, Judge SUMNERS, we continued to dig into the all-important money question, presenting evidence and arguments in favor of a more sensible and scientific money policy, until the influence and importance of that unofficial organization has become a mighty power in Congress.

The position of the President with reference to this legislation has been raised several times here today, apparently in an effort to raise the false and deceiving bugaboo of White House opposition. It is somewhat amusing that some of our Republican leaders, who have not followed the President on other legislation, should raise that question now. Let me say that the record of the President speaks for itself. He has done more for silver than any one man since the World War. [Applause.]

Last year, as a member of the committee from the special money committee mentioned, I called at the White House for the purpose of discussing the money question and especially silver. After an extended conference with the President, it is only fair to say that we had no indication that he opposed silver legislation. He asked many questions and showed a deep interest in the subject. Again, shortly before the opening of the present session, I was a member of another group, representing the same money committee, which called at the White House. We discussed the possibilities of silver legislation further and in more detail, and again the President assured us of his interest in the subject but gave no sign of opposition.

Therefore, I have no reason to believe the President opposes silver legislation but have every reason to believe that he is for it. This legislation may not be part of his outlined program, but I can see no reason why it will not fit in with his program and materially aid in hastening economic recovery.

We all recall very well the bold step the President took within a few hours after his inauguration, when he took the country off the gold standard. Some of those who are here today opposing the present bill predicted then that the country could not long survive off the gold standard. The big bankers of Wall Street, who have held up gold and predicted dire calamities should the United States ever seriously consider going off the gold standard, were shocked that their views and advice had been thrown to the winds. But that action set in motion a gradual and steady climb of commodity prices. Even many who predicted such terrible calamities then must shudder today when they think what probably would have happened to our country had the President lacked the courage to throw the gold standard overboard.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], who represent views of the old guard, were bitter in their denunciation of the pending bill; but if I remember correctly, the same two gentlemen were among those who predicted that the country would go to the bowwows when the President announced that the country had been taken off the gold standard. Time has proved that they were mistaken then, and they might possibly be mistaken again today. The gentleman from California [Mr. ELTSEL], with his ouija board, or chart of figures, which he held up in front of Members to frighten them away from this measure, has evidently convinced himself that the bill we are about to vote on today will immediately produce what friends of the Wall Street crowd call "wild inflation." Admitting that all gentlemen opposing this measure are sincere, it is also apparent that they are unduly excited. The silver certificates proposed to be issued under the terms of this bill will be backed by silver bullion; and whatever you may say about the money, the fact remains that it will be just as good as gold certificates or gold dollars and will pay taxes, interest, debts, and mortgages. [Applause.]

If this bill is passed by both Houses and signed by the President, I confidently believe that we will see a substantial rise in the prices of farm commodities, the one thing that is needed most to save the farmer and thereby save the business man of the country. The day this bill was reported favorably wheat advanced 2 cents a bushel and cotton, as well as other farm commodities, went up instantly to a marked degree. When the Secretary of the Treasury gave a statement the other day indicating that he was opposed to this legislation, the prices of farm commodities went down. I am confident that Members of Congress will vote their convictions on this bill this afternoon, and that the pending measure will pass by more than a two-thirds majority, notwithstanding the attitude of the Secretary of the Treasury, who has not yet distinguished himself as having too much sympathy with the forgotten man. [Applause.]

Personally, I favor the Wheeler bill and stand ready to vote for it, but this House has never had an opportunity to vote on the Wheeler money bill. The Dies silver bill is a great forward step in the right direction.

It is significant that this House is voting on an important silver bill on the seventy-fifth anniversary of the birth of the Great Commoner, William Jennings Bryan. It is fitting, also that our great beloved Speaker, who served with Bryan in this House, should have made it possible for this important silver bill to be brought up, debated, and voted on the birthday anniversary of the late lamented Nebraska statesman who so ably championed the cause of silver. [Applause.]

Many bugaboos are held up to us today, as in the days of Bryan, to frighten us away from a recognition and a remonetization of silver, which now seems destined to come about in the not far distant future.

We are told that the free and unlimited coinage of silver would cause this country to be flooded with all of the silver of every country in the world. However, the Somers congressional committee established after an exhaustive investigation in 1932-33 that approximately 600,000,000 ounces of silver would be the absolute outside figure that is available and could be brought in. It can be seen that this would have but little influence against the gold now in the United States. At least, our foreign trade would be accelerated with silver-producing countries, and that would certainly raise commodity prices, something that must happen if our debt-burdened farmers are to get relief. We cannot long continue to pay back debts contracted in an era of high commodity prices with scarce and dear money.

It has been estimated that the people of this country owe in excess of $230,000,000,000. The value of all the monetary gold in the world is but a mere fraction of that staggering sum. And practically all of that vast debt was contracted from 1917 to 1929, inclusive, when the purchasing power of the dollar was 62½ cents. So I insist that if there is to be any relief for the debtor class there must be offered some way for debts to be paid in dollars of somewhere near the value they were when the debts were contracted.

The pending bill may not be perfect. Certainly it is not all that some of us had desired in the way of silver or money legislation, but it is the result of more than 2 years of study and research, and its passage will in no way impair the consideration of other legislation to bring silver back into its own. There are no silver mines in Oklahoma, therefore, I have no selfish motives in supporting this and other silver legislation, except that I am firmly convinced that we must have a reasonably large amount of money and credits in circulation before it is going to be possible for the debt-ridden farmer to secure decent and respectable prices for the products of the farm. It is not denied by the "old guard", who are so bitterly fighting this measure, but that this bill, if and when enacted into law, will be a substantial help in disposing of surplus farm products because it will help us to do business with countries like China, India, and other nations of the East that have an overabundance of silver, but no gold.

In closing, let me say that this bill is endorsed by the Farmers Union and other farm organizations. In my last conversation with our late, lamented John A. Simpson, who passed to his reward a few days ago, he expressed the hope that not only the Frazier bill and the Wheeler bill should be passed, but that the Dies bill might be enacted during the present session of Congress. It is my regret that this bill was not passed a year ago. Had it been enacted then I am not sure that it would have been necessary for the House to pass the Bankhead bill and other production-control legislation now. I am firmly convinced that this silver bill is real farm relief; it is mortgage relief; it is tax relief. Let us pass it today by an overwhelming vote and give notice to the world that so far as Members of this House are concerned we propose to take some affirmative action in our endeavors to relieve distress and want throughout the land. [Applause.]

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I have been called a magician by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS]. Perhaps I am a magician, but not the equal of those who advocate the issuance of these silver certificates. Under section 12 redemption of these silver certificates is made by delivering the bullion received in the first instance, plus the premium of $400,000,000.

Under section 10 I call attention to the language that these silver certificates shall be used for the payment of debts and dues, public and private, of whatever kind or description, and then occurs the significant language: "And when accepted by the Government shall be reissued and in all respects shall become a part of the lawful money of the United States."

Mr. Speaker, I submit that when those silver certificates are called in under redemption or are redeemed and the bullion paid out, there will be nothing remaining behind them, there will be no reserve behind them whatsoever. The Federal Treasury will be in the red to the extent of $2,000,000,000 on the second redemption and, mark my word, the speculators and operators will be busy.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PARSONS. This is the identical language under which silver certificates are issued now. We do not issue silver certificates if the bullion is taken out of the Treasury now.

Mr. ELTSE of California. That is not what the bill states.

Mr. PARSONS. This is the same operation identically that the Treasury follows in issuing silver certificates against silver dollars at the present time. The gentleman knows that is the fact.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I submit this bill shows on its face that it is possible for silver certificates to be issued without one bit of silver reserve behind them. Greenbacks! [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, before closing this debate I desire to read a letter that the Secretary of the Treasury has written and asked me to present to the Membership of the House. This letter is dated March 19, 1934, and is as follows:

HON. ANDREW L. SOMERS,

*Chairman Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures,
House of Representatives.*

MY DEAR MR. SOMERS: It appears from newspaper accounts that some Members of Congress have not been correctly informed or have misunderstood statements I made at the press conference on Thursday of last week, as to an inquiry into holdings of silver stocks and their connection with the advocacy of silver legislation. The record of the regular press conference held in my office on Thursday morning reveals the following questions and answers:

"Q. What will happen to that investigation about stocks of silver in this country?—A. We haven't a final report.

"Q. What was the real purpose of that?—A. To find out if all these silver advocates were entirely disinterested.

"Q. That's just what I thought. Have you found anybody interested?—A. We have found some that were not disinterested. If and when we complete the report we will give out the whole thing at one time—if we ever give it out."

Since I had met with the members of your committee immediately before the press conference, some who read the newspaper accounts of the conference gained the impression that I might have been referring to Members of Congress as among the "silver advocates" who were "not disinterested." The fact is that there was no connection between the discussion in the press conference about the presence of the members of the Coinage Committee and that relating to the silver inquiry, and my reference to silver advocates had no reference to Members of Congress. However, as soon as I learned of the wrong impression gained from my statements I immediately took steps to correct it. Newspapersmen were at once notified that the statement that some "silver advocates" were not disinterested had no reference to any Members of Congress and later in the day I again called the newspapersmen in the Treasury Department into conference and made the following statement to them:

"What I asked you to come up for is this: My remarks about interested parties in silver seem to have been misunderstood in certain quarters, and I want to say this: That, as far as the investigation goes, we have found that there is no Member of Congress who is a buyer of silver."

I am referring this to you because it seems to me quite important that consideration of this subject should not be obscured by any erroneous statements or misunderstandings.

Sincerely yours,

H. MORGENTHAU, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman tell the Members of the House whether the Secretary of the Treasury is for or against this bill? The Secretary is quoted in the morning papers as being opposed to the bill.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I am sorry I cannot explain the quotation in the morning paper, but I think Mr. DIES has made it very clear to the House that the Secretary of the Treasury has no definite objection to this bill. However, he did say that inasmuch as he is studying the silver legislation or the possibility of silver legislation he would not at this time make any recommendation for or against silver legislation.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the gentleman think from the statement made by the Speaker of the House this morning that the Speaker believes the Secretary of the Treasury is opposed to this bill?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I do not know what the Speaker said. Unfortunately, I am not in his confidence, and I did not hear him make any statement.

Mr. SNELL. I wish the gentleman would tell us whether the administration is for or against the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Does not the gentleman think the Secretary of the Treasury should come before his committee and give the committee any information in his possession relative to silver speculators?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I do not know what the problems of the Secretary of the Treasury are. I venture to say that in the few months he has served it is impossible for him to study all these great questions, and I shall not criticize him.

May I address myself for the moment that remains to this particular bill? I am sorry I cannot yield further.

Like the gentleman from Massachusetts, I, too, want to get down to fundamentals. The two great problems that we are facing in this country, Mr. Speaker, are an inadequacy in our monetary reserve and a surplus of agricultural products.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOMERS] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask a division.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 258, nays 112, not voting 61, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

H.R. 7581—EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the bill of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] is of vast importance and benefit to the country and should be passed by the required two-thirds vote here today and sent to the Senate, where it will undoubtedly be passed and go to the President for his approval, and I feel sanguine that President Roosevelt, who is friendly to the silver cause, will affix his signature so that it will become the law of the land.

I shall not attempt any extended discussion of the silver question today, for I delivered a speech of considerable length on the subject when the gold devaluation bill was before the House for consideration in January. I shall, therefore, on this occasion merely recapitulate the remarks I made on that occasion and present a summation of what I deem to be the unanswerable facts in favor of the measure proposed by the able gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] who has made a special study of the silver question.

This bill will create a board, consisting of the President and the Secretaries of the Treasury, Commerce, and Agriculture, and vest said board with authority to negotiate the exchange of surplus American farm products for silver and to pay a maximum 25 percent above the world market price for silver shipped into the United States in payment for the exported agricultural products and issue new silver certificates based on that metal to pay for the silver thus obtained in payment.

What would be the effects attained by this legislation?

First. We would dispose of our surplus farm products to the silver-using nations of the Far East and thereby enhance the value and price of the remainder to the American farmer who would thus be immediately and directly benefited in two respects. The new silver money (certificates) received by the farmer would circulate freely in all the farming communities of the United States and thereby we would increase the volume and velocity of our circulating medium, which everybody realizes needs to be done. This new silver money placed in the hands of the farmer would continue to be turned over and create an augmented spending power and purchasing power affecting every branch of business and industry.

Second. The resultant increase in the value and price of silver in the world market would increase the domestic price of silver in the United States and thereby benefit every silver-producing State and cause more employment, pay rolls, and industrial and business activity, and a greater demand for necessary supplies and goods from other States and aid business recovery.

Third. The increase in the price and value of silver in the world market would also add immeasurably to the purchasing and spending power of the Orient, Mexico, and South America, who would be placed in a better position to buy our lumber, salmon, and manufactured articles of all kinds and resume their trade and commerce with the United States, which has been curtailed to a minimum on account of the low price of silver, and also gain for our Nation their amity, good will, and friendship.

Fourth. This enlarged foreign demand for American products would increase the income of our laborers, farmers, merchants, and manufacturers.

Fifth. This legislation would prove a forward stride toward the remonetization of silver, and therefore I favor it.

After many years of investigation and study of the monetary problem, I have come to the conclusion that silver as a primary money metal should never have been demonetized and the congressional action which brought it about in 1873 was a crime against the American people, for which we have paid dearly, and the sooner this wrong is righted the better.

The single gold standard has failed and is responsible for the rule and control of money—which is economic control—by the international bankers of Europe and America, and is closely identified and linked with the vicious system of issuing Government bonds drawing interest to bankers in order that the money of the Federal Government may be issued to the bankers and utilized by them for their private profit and aggrandizement and the exploitation of the people and the Government itself.

Mr. Speaker, restore silver as a primary redemption money on a parity with gold at a regulated ratio, and we would strike a real blow for human liberty and happiness in the United States and throughout the world, for our action would be followed by similar action by every nation in the civilized world with which the United States carries on commercial relations.

Mr. Speaker, let us then cease printing tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds and issuing money to the banker, and instead issue the money direct to the people, based upon silver and gold as a metallic base, which would be sound, honest money, issued for service instead of profit, and we would "drive the money changers out of the temple."

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, the bill under consideration today is right in principle and will help, in my opinion, to give us a market for our surplus agricultural crops, such as cotton, wheat, rice, and other crops. This bill provides for the exchange of our surplus crops and take silver bullion for them at the market price for silver.

The Constitution provides for both gold and silver money, and nobody would dare say that money issued on this bullion was fiat money. It would raise immediately the price that farmers would get for their crops when sold on a foreign market. The reason that we are burdened now with a surplus of cotton is the fact that nations that are now growing the short-staple cotton were forced to raise it by reason of the fact that we were on a gold standard of money and they on a silver standard, and their dollar in silver was only worth about 25 cents under the gold standard, and when they came here to buy cotton with their silver they paid 20 cents per pound, and the farmer who raised it got 5 under the gold standard. If this bill passes—and I hope it will—it is my belief that the nations that are now growing 12,000,000 bales of short-staple cotton will quit growing it and buy our cotton as they once did. This bill has the approval of the farmers generally and it will help them materially. We should have a double standard of money and tie the two together so that one is just as good as the other and the Government backing each of them alike. I see no reason why anyone should oppose this bill. We hear newspapers howling about printing-press money. That is the only kind that you have now except a little silver to make change with. Silver has always been the money that was kept in circulation. Gold would hide away, but silver has kept in circulation. There is but little money now actually in circulation. It is in the banks, but it is not in circulation as it should be. The banks, of course, have to be careful, for they are handling the other fellow's money. I am glad that I have the chance to vote for this bill. I introduced a bill 3 years ago to put $2,000,000,000 in silver in circulation, and if it had been done then it would have averted this panic in my opinion.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, the opponents of silver legislation in an effort to discredit the metal are raising the cry of "speculation" against its advocates. This seems to have caught the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, who expresses concern of the speculators' interest in silver.

It is suggested that the Secretary might investigate the profits made by the speculators in gold in recent months as a result of Government legislation recommended by his Department. The importers have turned into the Treasury 15,714,286 ounces reported since the proclamation setting an increase value of $14.33 per ounce on gold which yielded to the speculators of gold $225,185,713.38 or $25,000,000 more money than the total amount used by the Government to buy silver under the Pittman Act when we had the highest commodity prices and the best times ever known in this country. Secretary Morgenthau might give a thought to the advantage the gold devaluation bill gives to our trade rivals of the British Nation, producing approximately 70 percent of the world gold. Great Britain and its possessions produced 16,428,000 ounces of gold in 1933 with an increased purchasing power in this country of $235,413,240. When we realize we have given this advantage to our competitors in purchasing the commodities produced in this country we might pause to consider that if temporary profits attendant on monetary changes due to the proposed increase in the price of silver is to be taken into consideration in passing legislation, we should realize our domestic mining industry supporting some of our finest communities, and in times of prosperity providing some of our best markets, is surely entitled to more consideration than the gold-mining industry of South Africa with its Negro compounding and semislave labor which produces 50 percent of all the world's gold. It is to be wondered if our people are fully cognizant of the vast advantage we have placed in the hands of our competitors for trade and business, an advantage that could be discounted and reduced by the remonetization of silver.

Mr. STUDLEY. Mr. Speaker, the heresy of trying to advance the price of silver by act of Congress has again arisen. This heresy was slain by our people in 1896.

But it has again been brought to life.

Let us turn back the pages of our recent history.

Within the memory of many of us now in the Congress the Silver Purchase Act of July 14, 1890, was enacted. This act provided in substance that the Government must purchase monthly 4,500,000 ounces of silver bullion and that the Secretary of the Treasury should issue in payment therefor Treasury notes redeemable on demand in gold or silver coin at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and that said notes may be reissued. It was declared in the act to be—

The established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other upon the then legal ratio, or such other ratio as may be provided by law.

The action of the Secretary of the Treasury was so controlled by the above declaration as to prevent his exercising the discretion nominally vested in him. It is at once apparent that if the Secretary refused to pay these Treasury notes in gold, if demanded, they would stand discredited and would suffer a depreciation as obligations payable only in silver; this would destroy the parity between the two metals by establishing a discrimination in favor of gold.

More than $147,000,000 of these Treasury notes had been issued in payment of purchases of silver bullion by July 15, 1893. A large proportion of these notes given in the purchase of silver bullion had been paid in gold out of the Treasury. Between May 1, 1892, and July 15, 1893, these Treasury notes issued in payment of silver bullion amounted to a little more than $54,000,000, and during the same period about $49,000,000 was paid out by the Treasury in gold for the redemption of such notes.

This policy made the depletion of our Treasury gold reserves easy, and the European nations immediately took advantage of such a soft opportunity. Our gold reserves in our Treasury were promptly depleted. Between July 1, 1890, and July 15, 1893, the gold in our Treasury was decreased by more than $132,000,000, while during that same period the silver coin and bullion in our Treasury increased by more than $147,000,000.

The implacable law of economics could not be stayed even by an act of the Congress. Grimm's law went grimly and irresistibly forward, and the cheaper metal drove the dearer metal out of circulation.

When the Silver Purchase Act of July 14, 1890, was enacted it was hailed as sure to advance the price of the white metal. But the price of silver, obedient to economic laws, went down, and down, and then further down as the purchases increased until its price reached the lowest point ever known up to that time.

The situation with the Treasury grew steadily worse notwithstanding the sales of Government bonds made to reinforce the gold reserves, and on the 1st day of December 1895, within less than 5½ years there had been withdrawn from the Treasury nearly $375,000,000. Nearly $327,000,000 of the gold thus withdrawn had been paid out on these Treasury notes, and all of the $346,000,000 was then still uncanceled and ready to be used to draw more gold from the Treasury.

In his special message to the Congress of August 8, 1893, and again in his third annual message of December 2, 1895, President Cleveland earnestly besought the Congress for remedial legislation. Meanwhile, on November 1, 1893, the silver purchase law had been repealed, but at that time the mischief had been done and the Treasury notes had been issued which had wrecked our Treasury's gold reserve and made our fiscal system the gullible objective of the nations of Europe.

In his special message above referred to, President Cleveland used the following language, which has since become one of the high lights of Democratic doctrine with reference to our financial structure:

The people of the United States are entitled to a sound and stable currency and to money recognized as such on every exchange and in every market of the world. Their Government has no right to injure them by financial experiments opposed to the policy and practice of other civilized states, nor is it justified in permitting an exaggerated and unreasonable reliance on our national strength and ability to jeopardize the soundness of the people's money.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I think the Bankhead cotton bill is the wrong way to reach a right result.

I favor the Dies silver bill as a right step, in part, to a correct conclusion, both with reference to cotton and other commodities.

First, some objections to the cotton bill. What cotton needs is an expansion of export markets. This bill reduces production in a world that is half clothed. It not only does nothing to secure the only permanent relief possible for the Cotton Belt but, in addition, it stands idle while the rest of the world steps up production to fill the export markets we formerly enjoyed. When our competitors in Egypt, India, and southeastern Russia have once supplied this market, we shall win it back, if at all, only with the greatest difficulty. What we lose while applying the wrong remedy is apt to be lost forever.

Second, the bill may, temporarily, benefit the plantations growing 500 to 5,000 bales, but it does not recognize the necessities of the share-cropper or tenant whose meager income is already down to the iron margin of existence. He, too, must reduce. If he does not, he goes to jail. Some margin of mercy should be left to him. We exempt from income tax those whose incomes do not exceed a certain minimum. This bill does not recognize this principle.

Let me quote Dr. Clarence Poe, editor of the Progressive Farmer and Southern Ruralist, a man who was born on a little farm in the South, who received 6 months free-school education, yet has built up a great journal of agriculture with a million readers. That is his credential to respect. Dr. Poe says:

As I pointed out in my article, The Right of the Little Man to Live, there ought to be a reasonable minimum below which we would not require a farmer to cut his acreage. * * * Probably no one * * * should be required to drop below * * * eight bales of cotton.

Eight bales at present prices would bring but $480 if he got all of it. But if he was a tenant or share-cropper, he would have to give his landlord half or a third of that. I do not believe the grower of eight bales should be required to make any sacrifices by taxation to the solution of the cotton problem. I, too, believe in the right of the little man to live.

Third, there is no machinery in the bill to hold an election. There is no assurance that the minority will be given an honest right to vote on a question that affects them as profoundly as any question open to suffrage. The bill reads, "When the Secretary of Agriculture finds", and so forth. Will the Negro farmer, for example, have the right to vote or will he not? If not, it is "taxation without representation."

I think these doubts are justified by reason of the history of the bill thus far.

As originally drawn the bill provided that "whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that two thirds of the persons", and so forth. As amended by the committee it calls for a finding with respect to "the persons who own, rent, share crop, or control two thirds of the land * * * on which cotton is produced." Two thirds of the persons and two thirds of the land are not the same thing.

The chairman of the committee has stated on the floor that the reason for the change was "that those who would have charge of the administration of the act felt it would be much more difficult to ascertain when they had gotten two thirds of the individuals than it would be when they had gotten representatives of two thirds of the acreage." It would be "more difficult."

It is now proposed to go back to "two thirds of the persons." Persons are to vote, not acres. That is right. But the point is worth noting to illustrate how close this bill got to the feudalism which we thought we had abandoned forever.

I do not know whether any kind of a vote—majority, two thirds, three fourths, or nine tenths—may constitutionally control, against their will, the use of their own land by the minority. I doubt if it can under many decisions of the Supreme Court, including Federal Compress & Warehouse Co. against McLean and Chassaniol against Greenwood, decided within the last 3 months. Both of these were cotton cases, and held that cotton, until it begins to move in interstate commerce, is entirely within the tax jurisdiction of the States within which the cotton is grown, and, therefore, by strong inference, outside of the power of Congress.

The number of persons who own "two thirds of the land" are probably a minority of the total cotton growers of the Nation. Indeed, if the cotton land of the South held by the few is at all in proportion to the total wealth of the Nation held by the few, it is a moral certainty that this plan under the amendment could be placed in operation by a small minority of the total cotton growers against the will of the majority.

That would not be democracy. It would be feudalism. Or fascism.

It may well be that two thirds of total acreage should be taken into consideration as well as two thirds of total growers. But the bill is not only to control cotton. It is to control men. It is not only to restrict production. It is to restrain producers; and under the amendment—which is now to be abandoned—a minority of producers could restrain a majority of producers.

There is something beside cotton involved here. There is "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." The dignity of the human soul was here at stake.

For the first time in many decades in this country it was seriously proposed by the amendment that property was to vote, not men. Let us pause upon that statement. To me it has an ominous sound—none more so in my lifetime. Two thirds of property was to have the power, the legal statutory power, to outvote two thirds of human beings. I wonder what Lincoln or Jefferson would have thought of this. I do not believe that the amendment carried out the social viewpoint of President Roosevelt.

On this point, I would make certain that the humblest citizen with one mule and an acre of land should not be outvoted by the broad acres of the "lord of the manor" himself. I would make certain by the machinery of an honest election that two thirds of the human beings whose lives and happiness are involved shall consent as well as two thirds of the acres.

Unless we preserve this principle we shall not preserve America.

I am glad the right of acres to vote has been abandoned. I have mentioned it to justify my present doubts as to how the will of the two thirds is to be "found" by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Next, as to silver. The Dies bill is to encourage the sale of cotton in exchange for silver. This should do two things—enable foreign buyers to take our cotton, and at the same time increase our silver base against which money can be issued in which our people will have confidence. The result will be to expand our currency on a sound foundation, thus raising prices at home, and finding markets abroad, not only for cotton, but wheat, tobacco, and many other products of our farms and factories, which in turn will increase employment and thus rebuild our domestic market while expanding our foreign market.

Seventeen Studebaker cars out of one hundred, for example, are now sold abroad. That percentage will increase as we encourage our foreign markets. Increasing prices and increasing wages from employment will make it again possible to carry our crushing burden of debt.

We must not forget that there are a billion people in foreign lands, users of silver, who are potential buyers of our goods. Why not sell to them?

RELIEF OF WATER USERS ON IRRIGATION PROJECTS

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 2534) to further extend the operation of the act entitled "An act for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law", approved April 1, 1932, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to extend such provisions of the act entitled "An act for the temporary relief of water users on reclamation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law", approved April 1, 1932 (47 Stat. 75), as extended by the act of March 3, 1933 (47 Stat. 1427), as relate to the deferment of payment of certain water-rights charges for the years 1931, 1932, and 1933, in like manner to all similar charges coming due for the year 1934. The Secretary of the Interior is further authorized, upon the acceptance by the Uncompahgre Valley Water Users Association of the moratorium act of April 1, 1932, and its amendments, including this act, to enter into a contract with the association deferring the initiation of its drainage construction program until January 1, 1936, and permitting the completion of said drainage program during the years 1936 to 1941, both inclusive, under the conditions set out in the act of January 31, 1931 (47 Stat. 1947), as herein modified, and to extend such provisions of such section 3 as relate to certain water-rights charges on the Grand Valley reclamation project in like manner to all similar charges coming due for the year 1934.

SEC. 2. Interest on the charges for which the time of payment is extended pursuant to this act shall be payable at the same rate and under the same conditions as those prescribed in such act of March 3, 1933, with respect to the charges for the years 1931, 1932, and 1933.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] If not, the question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Mexico to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, are we not going to have the bill explained?

The SPEAKER. No one has demanded a second.

Mr. SNELL. Then, I shall demand a second. I think, in all fairness, on a matter of this kind, the House should at least be told what is in the bill. I was under the impression the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CARTER] was going to demand a second.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered, although the Chair has not heard anyone demand a second.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, let us be liberal and give the gentleman from New York a second, even though he did not demand it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman, and, without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. Speaker, on April 1, 1932, Congress passed a bill granting a moratorium for the years 1931 and one half of 1932 to irrigation districts in the payment of construction charges. On March 3, 1933, the provisions of the original act were extended a year and a half, granting in all a 3-year moratorium, from 1931 to 1933, inclusive. This bill is simply to extend the provisions of those acts for the year 1934.

As the gentleman knows, under the reclamation act construction charges have to be paid to the Government by the irrigation districts, and this bill provides that the construction charges for the year 1934 be deferred to the future.

Mr. SNELL. How many times have we deferred these charges?

Mr. CHAVEZ. This is only the third time.

Mr. SNELL. Only the third?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes; and I may say to the gentleman from New York that up to the year 1930 every one of the districts throughout the country—and there are some 27 of them—had made its full payment to the Government; but, as the gentleman will see from the report, their revenue from crops has gone down in some instances from $90 an acre to $26 an acre, owing to the price of farm products. The gentleman can readily understand they are not in position to pay these charges, and all they are asking is that you continue the debt just a little while longer. We are not giving them a thing. The bill does not carry any appropriation and does not interfere with the financial program of the administration.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. I note there is a distinction here with respect to the Uncompahgre Valley. Was that amendment put on in the Senate?

Mr. CHAVEZ. No; I will explain that particular feature of the bill to the gentleman. The Uncompahgre Valley project is in Colorado, and there were provisions for a moratorium in a special bill. This is a general bill applying to all irrigation projects.

Mr. CULKIN. May I ask the gentleman whether that particular project is now in production?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I will yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] to answer the gentleman.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. I may say to the gentleman that that is the oldest irrigation project in the United States.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. In further answer to the gentleman from New York, I may say that 2 or 3 years ago there was some land on this project that became water-soaked, and the Reclamation Service, through an act which I had the honor of passing, waived all construction charges for 5 years with the understanding that a certain amount of money would be spent on drainage work.

Mr. CULKIN. I think we had that matter up last year and discussed it at that time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; this project is one of the oldest in the United States. It has been in active operation for 25 years.

Mr. CULKIN. I should also like to inquire of the chairman with reference to the Grand Valley reclamation project. The main point I am interested in is whether or not it is in production.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Grand Valley project is also in Colorado; and I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; that project is in production.

Mr. CULKIN. So the gentleman can state to the House that there is no new reclamation project involved?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Not an acre of additional land is involved.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; nothing of that sort.

Mr. DOWELL. The extension of this matter will not bring any further land into cultivation?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Nothing of that sort is involved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Mexico to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

INVESTIGATION OF RATES FOR ELECTRICAL ENERGY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate Joint Resolution 74, authorizing necessary funds to conduct investigations regarding rates charged for electrical energy, and to prepare a report thereon.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I thought the Chair had stated that there would be no further suspensions this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought that the gentleman from Mississippi had left the room. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this ought not to be brought up at this time. I do not see the gentleman on the other side here.

Mr. RANKIN. There is a member of the committee sitting right in front of the gentleman, one of the ablest Republicans in the House.

Mr. SNELL. In all fairness, Mr. Speaker, when we informally understood that no more suspensions would be brought up this afternoon, it is hardly fair to bring this up at this late hour. I do not see the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] present.

Mr. RANKIN. There is little or no opposition, in my opinion, to this bill. I introduced the bill several weeks ago, and it was also introduced by Senator NORRIS in the Senate. The bill passed the Senate almost immediately. Owing to the fact that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was engaged with other matters, it took some time to get a hearing on the bill and get it reported out of the committee. This bill is to take the census of the light and power rates throughout the country.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] left the House because he was informed that this bill would not come up, after I had sent a man to consult with the Speaker. I do not think this ought to be brought up at this time, and I shall do what I can to delay it.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman agree that it may be taken up by unanimous consent tomorrow?

Mr. SNELL. I can tell better after I consult the minority members of the committee. I want to know what their position is.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not wish to take any undue advantage of anyone. There is no adverse report on the bill. If there is any opposition to it, it does not show in the report.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Mississippi can call it up under suspension now if he desires to do so, but he wants to grant the minority leader a chance to consult about it. Why not agree that it may be taken up tomorrow?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that he will recognize him to take it up tomorrow; and if there is objection, to take it up first on the next suspension day.

Mr. RANKIN. That is satisfactory.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HAMILTON, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. CROWE, for today, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROOKS, indefinitely, on account of serious illness in his family.

To Mr. LANHAM, for today, on account of illness.

To Mr. KLEBERG, for today, on account of illness.

THE MENACE TO AMERICAN DRAMA

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Dickstein bill, and also on the F.A.C.A.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, House bill 3674, as introduced by Representative DICKSTEIN, of New York, is now being considered in the House of Representatives. It seeks to keep out alien actors unless they be of distinguished merit and ability. Utterly selfish interests have agitated for this bill. I believe that it is without merit. Its passage will greatly impede not only the motion-picture industry but the little that remains of the spoken drama. There is involved therein real menace to American drama. We have already hedged the drama around with many restrictions. Unlike other countries who give it kindly encouragement, we place an admission tax upon it. Other nations subsidize the drama, build state theaters, pension dramatists, and appoint poet laureates. We offer no such encouragements. Instead, we would embargo all alien actors unless they be of distinguished and recognized ability.

H.R. 3674 would put the spoken drama into a strait-jacket. The producer, casting around for actors to play certain parts, should not be fettered. He should not be hamstrung. If he wants an actor or actress to play a particular part, and needs an alien to do so, none should gainsay him. If he wishes a man who speaks British English to play the part of an English butler, he should not be forced to take an American. The American may not be able to play the part of a frozen-faced, tall English butler. So with a French lady playing a French maid.

Recently I saw the play The Shining Hour. It has a cast almost exclusively made up of British actors. Some are and some are not celebrated. The cast is perfect. The removal of any one of these alien actors in this play, which would be one of the results of this bill, would mar its perfection. The play requires the setting-up of a thoroughly British atmosphere and milieu, that would be woefully lacking in the mannerisms and speech of thoroughly American actors. The latter could not give the delicate and sensitive shadings of British character required by this play.

There is a play on the boards called "Wind and Rain." It deals with medical students at Edinburgh University. The effect of the play depends altogether on the preservation of the atmosphere of a Scotch boarding house. If some of the alien actors producing that atmosphere were to be barred by this bill, the effectiveness of this play would be destroyed. Wind and Rain is essentially a play of atmosphere, not of plot. In the former, particular persons are needed for particular parts. This bill disregards these essentials of drama. Journey's End was a play of atmosphere rather than one of plot or story. It concerned the British Tommies in the trenches. It was a drama essentially of British character and setting. As presented here it was a replica of the London production. It was necessary to import some of these British thespians.

The passage of this resolution would have made proper presentation of Journey's End impossible. In the play, Pursuit of Happiness, a drama about colonial "bundling", the part of the Hessian trooper is played by Tonio Selwart, a Teuton. He is the very keystone of the play. This resolution would bar him. This barring would ruin the play. Frances Lederer, a native of Czechoslovakia, was the very spirit of the play called "Autumn Crocus." This bill would have kept out Frances Lederer and destroyed that play as a box-office success. What Price Glory was a play indigenous of France. It was essential to have some alien actors in that production, creating the appropriate French atmosphere and character. An all-American cast could not have produced this French background.

The success of Autumn Crocus, Pursuit of Happiness, The Shining Hour, What Price Glory, Journey's End, and many similar plays, far from reducing American employment, increased it. The success of these plays made possible the employment of scene makers, scene shifters, painters, dress-makers, costumers, designers, stage hands, musicians, bill-posters, printers, advertisers, ushers, charwomen, and so forth.

There is just as much artistry in casting for a play as in painting a picture, composing a symphony, modeling a statue. We would not take away the artist's tints, the sculptor's mallet. By the same token, we should not take away from the producer and the dramatist his right of choice and discretion in play-casting.

Cavalcade, one of the outstanding pictures of the past year, could never have been made if this bill had been enacted into law. Most of its success was due to its entirely English cast. It might have been just another American mob scene.

If we had had a law of this character previously, some of our now-famous stars and actors would have been denied entrance into this country. Many of them achieved fame only after their entrance. George Arliss, Leslie Howard, Charley Chaplin, Marie Dressler, H. B. Warner, Greta Garbo, Norma Shearer, Mary Pickford, Elissa Landi, Clive Brook, Herbert Marshall, Ronald Colman, Dennis King, Claude Rains, and Victor McLaughlin would have been denied entry because when they first came they were far from being recognized for their ability. They were then persons. They have since become personalities. They might have been lost to the spoken drama and motion pictures had this law been in effect.

George S. Kaufman, testifying before the Senate Immigration Committee last year, spoke of the obscurity of Lynn Fontanne when she first came to this country. I quote him:

No one had ever heard of her. Laurette Taylor had seen her in London. She was a timid, frightened girl who played a 2-minute scene in Miss Taylor's production.

Today she is one of the greatest "draws" on the American stage, affording employment to hundreds of American workmen such as ushers, stage hands, electricians, scene shifters, cleaners, and so forth.

Directors of motion pictures would also be excluded if this bill were enacted. Directors who came here as obscure persons and who later developed are Edmund Goulding and Frank Lloyd, of England; Ernst Lubitsch, Germany; Frank Capra, Italy; and many others. Alexander Korda came to the United States about 8 or 9 years ago. He successfully directed a number of American pictures, but, as he was only here on a temporary visa, the Department of Labor refused to extend his stay and he returned abroad. In the last year he has directed two of the outstanding pictures of the world for an English producing firm, namely "Henry the Eighth" and "Catherine the Great", thereby creating for the American motion picture industry very serious competition both in the American and foreign markets.

I agree that there may be argument in an immigration-exclusion act excluding alien carpenters and shoemakers. They may displace American skilled workmen. But when it comes to the art of the drama, one actor cannot be replaced necessarily by another actor, an alien by an American. You cannot replace one personality by another. An actor or an artist is not a shoemaker or a blacksmith.

The contention is that we should not permit alien actors to take bread out of the mouths of American actors, and we therefore must put a tariff on the drama. It is not a case of impoverishing American actors. Whether an alien actor comes in or not, the American actor might still be out of a job. It is not a matter of competition of alien actors as against American actors. It is simply a case of bringing over an alien actor to fill certain necessary parts that cannot be played by American actors.

If we embargo alien actors, the next move would be to embargo alien dramatists. The next argument would be "Why should English authors come here and take bread out of the mouths of native authors?" Let us therefore keep out Barry, Shaw, Galsworthy, Pinero, Jones, and Masefield.

This bill will cause international irritation at a time when there is real need for amity and accord. Our President desires to effectuate reciprocal trade agreements with England, France, Spain, and South American countries. This type of chauvinism causes friction and irritation and will tend to make difficult the efforts of President Roosevelt. The Department of Labor figures show comparatively few alien actors in this country, despite assertions to the contrary. The number is inconsequential. This bill therefore is an endeavor to kill a fly with huge cannon. Its sponsors blink at the havoc and menace it involves.

This bill gives the right of censorship to the American consul abroad. He must determine whether an actor is a nonentity or a celebrity—whether he is ordinary or extraordinary. No consul has either the wisdom or the perspicacity to determine that. There is ample evidence submitted in the hearings on this bill by the Chief of the Visa Division of the Department of State indicating the extreme difficulties that would arise under this bill and the embarrassments that would be created for the consuls in passing upon the qualifications of actors applying for entrance.

The effect of this bill on the motion-picture industry would be most disastrous. American movies must essentially be international. A large percentage of the revenue coming to the motion-picture industry is from sales in foreign countries. It is essential for the motion-picture producer to import upon occasion foreign actors. With this bill, their foreign business would be jeopardized. This, in the face of the National Recovery Act, which requires and advocates the building-up of export trade. Greta Garbo, for example, has increased manifold American pictures in Sweden and Norway. Maurice Chevalier has helped our sales in France. Diana Wynyard has helped American pictures in England. American motion-picture industry has grown great and world-wide not only because of its technical superiority, but also because of the use and exploitation of international creative talent. There must be, for the success of the movies as well as the drama, free flow of talent from one country to another.

It must be remembered also that American talkies in Europe are subtle but effective ads for American goods. They stimulate trade and commerce. They are our greatest salesmen in foreign parts. They actuate and encourage the purchase by foreigners of our typewriters, refrigerators, tractors, motor boats, autos, sewing machines, and other comforts and conveniences of American life.

This bill would indeed be a menace to the spoken drama and the motion-picture industry. It would seriously impede the plans of the administration relative to friendly pacts and reciprocal treaties with other nations.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by printing an analysis made by the Solicitor of the Veterans' Bureau on the amendments in the act passed last week.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Has the gentleman from Illinois made any effort to lay that material before the conferees?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; I have, and at their suggestion I am putting it in the Record, and will return the original copy to them tomorrow.

Mr. BYRNS. What is it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is an analysis by the Acting Solicitor of the Veterans' Bureau, Mr. Brady, of the House legislation that went to the conference committee last week.

Mr. BYRNS. Why does the gentleman put it into the Record?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Because it is at variance with some of the statements that appeared in the parallel columns that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] had inserted in the Record, and also at variance with some of the newspaper reports.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the gentleman ask Mr. Brady for this, or did Mr. Brady tender it voluntarily?

Mr. DIRKSEN. He sent it to my office. I asked him over the telephone last Saturday whether he had prepared such an opinion, and he sent me a duplicate.

Mr. BLANTON. Was the gentleman here on Saturday morning when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] corrected an erroneous statement that appeared in these parallel columns?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; but that does not go far enough. I have talked with the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I think in all fairness, if this information is of any value it should be submitted to the conferees.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I submitted it to one this afternoon, and at his suggestion I am asking that it go into the Record, and this copy will be turned over to him.

Mr. BOYLAN. Did the gentleman submit it to the chairman of the conferees?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Brady is trying to do what?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not know that he is trying to do anything except to make a rather dispassionate analysis of the so-called "Taber amendment" in its practical effect upon the veterans.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the chairman of the conferees, and inasmuch as it has not been submitted to us, I shall be constrained to object.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I submitted it to one of the minority members of the conference.

Mr. BOYLAN. I must insist, in the absence of the chairman, on my objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Is there any reason why the gentleman should object to my extending my own remarks in putting in this communication sent to me?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes. Inasmuch as it has not been submitted to the conferees, I regret that I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

COTTON

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by including a statement that I made before the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the Record, I include the following:

Mr. FULMER presiding.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to introduce to you Mr. ALLGOOD. I will say before he begins that he was formerly commissioner of agriculture in the State of Alabama, and I know no man in the State who is in any better position to give you the attitude of the farmer and his opinion than Mr. ALLGOOD.

Mr. ALLGOOD. I thank Mr. BANKHEAD for his statement. We of the South know that the conditions that confront the cotton farmer at this time are not normal conditions. They are conditions that have grown out of the panic. We are asking Congress at this time to support this measure so that every farmer will do his part. Mr. Chairman, what this bill means is that every cotton farmer will do his part and if he is not willing to do his part voluntarily, then under the bill he will be compelled to come in and do his part.

We in the South have our cotton program, you in the North and West have your dairy program, your corn and hog program, your wheat and other programs that interest you, and we are willing to support your programs, if you will support the program which the producers of cotton think best for them. We all realize that agriculture must prosper in this country because it is the industry that must prosper or all other industries will suffer.

AMERICAN PRINTING HOUSE FOR THE BLIND

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by including a three-page history of the American Printing House for the Blind, which has come up before the Committee on Appropriations. This statement has been prepared by the trustees of the institution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the Record, I include the following history of the American Printing House for the Blind, prepared by the trustees of the institution:

At the first convention of American Instructors of the Blind, held in New York City in 1853 a committee, with Dr. Samuel T. Howe, of Boston, as chairman, was appointed to appeal to Congress for national aid for printing for the blind, but nothing came of it. In the South also organized attempts were made to create an establishment for embossing for all the blind of the country. Money for printing was difficult to be had. Mr. J. Morrison Hedy, a blind man of Kentucky, canvassed central Kentucky and collected funds for printing Paradise Lost; Jonathan Burr gave to the American Bible Society some $4,000 for embossing the Bible. In 1858 a charter was obtained from the Legislature of Kentucky establishing the American Printing House for the Blind at Louisville, Ky. Among its charter members were Mr. James Cuthrie, president (Buchanan's Secretary of the Treasury); Mr. William F. Bullock, the founder of Kentucky's public-school system; Dr. T. S. Bell, the most prominent philanthropist in the State. Their successors have been among the ablest, wisest, and noblest men in the community, and they have managed its affairs with the judgment and even-handed justice that was to be expected from such men.

Auxiliary boards were formed in Arkansas, Tennessee, Mississippi, and Louisiana, but the Civil War, by confusing commercial relations, prevented the use of the funds raised by these auxiliary boards for the purpose intended. After the war, in 1865, the State of Kentucky granted an income to the American Printing House for the Blind of $5 for every blind person in the State, and renewed efforts were made to establish boards in various States. Mr. H. L. Hall, of Philadelphia, a man overtaken in early adult life with total blindness, took hold of the work, and Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, New Jersey, Delaware, and Ontario aided.

In 1871 the American Association of Instructors of the Blind was formed. For the first few years of the association's existence various hopes were excited of obtaining a large endowment for printing for the blind through the beneficence of Mr. Stephen P. Ruggles, of Boston, but when these hopes were proved an iridescent dream, a committee was appointed in 1876, at a meeting of the association in Philadelphia, consisting of the superintendents of the schools of Kentucky, New York City, Philadelphia, Maryland, and Georgia, to prepare a bill and present it to Congress. The chairman of this committee, Mr. B. B. Huntton, superintendent of the Kentucky school drew up the bill and it was presented to Congress by Congressman Albert S. Willis, Representative from the Fifth Congressional District of Kentucky. Mr. Wait, of the New York school, was spokesman and presented the case of the blind in an address marked by all of his great ability, force, and eloquence. While every superintendent in the country labored each with the Congressman in his own State, it was due to the energy and enthusiasm and parliamentary skill of Mr. Willis that the bill setting aside a 30-year 4 percent bond of $250,000, providing a subsidy of $10,000 annually, finally became a law March 3, 1879.

A fund of $40,000 had accumulated from the State of Kentucky, with which 6½ acres of land was purchased and the building erected in 1883, and for the first time in the history of the world a supply of embossed books was assured the blind.

Early in 1906 steps were taken to renew the 4-percent bonds for $250,000 at its maturity in 1907, but the Government was then paying but 2-percent interest and refunding at that rate would have reduced the income one half. The president and secretary of the executive board visited Washington and found the Secretary of the Treasury unable to renew the bonds for 30 years at 4 percent without a special act of Congress. A bill to this effect was prepared by the Honorable Swagar Sherley, Representative of the Fifth Congressional District of Kentucky, and favorably reported from the committee by the Honorable Sereno E. Payne, a life-long friend of our then president, Col. Andrew Cowan. Through Mr. Sherley's efforts the bill passed the House, but was amended in the Senate, at the instance of Senator Spooner, so that the proceeds of the $250,000 bond on maturity was credited on the books of the Treasury as a perpetual trust fund, and a permanent annual appropriation was provided.

Through the skill and mechanical genius of Mr. Huntton, secretary and superintendent, for almost half a century the processes of producing embossed books were developed and improved and the list of publications grew from a few titles to several thousand. The embossed books produced at the American Printing House for the Blind have never been equalled and are the best of the kind in the world, as attested by the medals awarded wherever the work was exhibited: Vienna, 1873; Centennial at Philadelphia, 1876; Chicago World's Fair, 1893; Paris Exposition, 1878; St. Louis World's Fair, 1904.

During all these years, while the processes of printing were being evolved and improved, the number of schools for the blind were increasing in size and number. When the original appropriation was made in 1879 there was an enrollment in the schools of 2,180, which has gradually increased in 40 years to about 6,000. It has been realized for some years that the needs of the schools and the demand for embossed literature has grown beyond the $10,000 annual appropriation. The final determining factor to secure more funds for printing was the adoption of the revised Braille, grade 1½, as the uniform type for the blind of America at the meeting of the American Association of Instructors of the Blind held at Colorado Springs, June 1918. At the subsequent annual meeting of the American Printing House, held July 1, 1918, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas as a result of the Great War many soldiers and sailors of the United States now in service will be blind, and since a part of their reeducation and rehabilitation will require textbooks and general literature in the improved system of reading matter for the blind in increased number and volume; and

"Whereas the number of pupils in schools for the blind when provision was made in 1879 by the Congress of the United States for the support of the American Printing House for the Blind, whereby the income has been $10,000 per annum has been increased from 2,180 pupils in 1879 to 5,640 pupils in the year ending June 30, 1917.

"Resolved, That the trustees of the American Printing House for the Blind request of the Congress of the United States an increase of the appropriation to such an amount as will provide in perpetuity an income of $50,000 per annum to be devoted to the publication at the American Printing House for the Blind located at Louisville, Ky., of textbooks and literature for the instruction of the blind."

At the same time a committee of seven trustees was appointed to promote the passage of legislation looking to an increase of the support and the extension of the facilities of the American Printing House for the Blind by the United States Government, but no definite action was taken until February 1919, when a bill was introduced by the Honorable Swagar Sherley, of Kentucky, authorizing an increased appropriation of $40,000 annually. This bill received a favorable report from the committee but failed of passage during the closing days of the Congress.

A bill identical in form was then introduced at the next session by Hon. Charles F. Ogden, of Kentucky, successor to Mr. Sherley. This measure passed the House on July 10 and the Senate on August 4 and was signed by the President August 16, 1919. This bill as enacted differs from the original act of 1879 inasmuch as it does not appropriate but simply authorizes an appropriation of $40,000 annually. The original appropriation of $10,000 is derived from a trust of $250,000, which is held in perpetuity to produce this income each year. The increased appropriation of $40,000 must be put into some appropriation measure and acted upon by Congress each year. This same procedure is true of the $25,000 which was received in 1927 through Hon. Congressman Thatcher, Mr. Bramlette, and Mr. Barr. The $10,000 is a permanent appropriation, but the $65,000 must be appropriated each year. The total appropriation received to date is $75,000 annually.

EDUCATION IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, the debate on this Philippine independence bill brought out many facts concerning the governmental procedure and the industries of the Philippine Islands, but very little on the educational institutions of the islands.

We must bear in mind that the 34 years of public education in the Philippine Islands brought about the conditions which made it possible for this bill to be so liberal. Those who are now handling the reins of government in the Philippine Islands were not only taught in a school system equivalent to our own system here in the United States but the teaching of the English language for this space of time has brought about an understanding on the part of the young Filipinos that they are now able to interpret the advantages and privileges of independence in a much broader way than they were at that time.

The Filipinos have an organized system of education that is functioning. This is more than can be said of the Thirteen American Colonies at the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution a few years after they had gained their independence. In fact, the Federal Constitution made no mention of education. Education was one of the implied powers left to the States and up to the year 1800 only 8 of the 14 State constitutions mentioned education. As stated by Dr. E. P. Cubberley (Public School Administration, by Ellwood P. Cubberley, Houghton Mifflin Co., New York, 1929, p. 3):

Nothing which could be regarded as even the beginnings of a State system or series of systems of education existed. Nine colleges, a few private secondary schools, and a number of private and church schools offering some elementary-school instruction of an indifferent character, constituted the educational resources of the new Nation. Even in New England, where a good beginning had been made in the seventeenth century, the educational enthusiasm of the people had largely died out and the schools had sadly degenerated. In the rural districts, where the great bulk of our people then lived, there were practically no schools of any kind, while in the towns and cities ignorance, vagrancy, and pauperism went hand in hand.

In my own State of Pennsylvania there was no public school system until 1834 or just 100 years ago. Many of the States did not organize public schools until much later. It is true that life was much simpler when the American colonists gained their independence than it is now, and that it was possible for the masses to get along with the rudiments of an education.

Since there are organized schools of elementary, secondary, and collegiate grade in the Philippines, the people of these islands when granted independence will not start as did the independent American colonies without the means of public education. The growth of schools and of the interest in education in the Philippines has been nothing less than marvelous. Let us consider the increase in enrollment since 1899-1900. At that time there were only 6,900 pupils enrolled in the public schools; in 1930-31 the enrollment had increased to 1,224,548. Not until 1911-12 were separate figures on elementary and high-school enrollment available. At that time the elementary school enrollment was 525,556; by 1930-31 it had increased to 1,143,708, or 118 percent. In 1911-12 the high schools of the islands enrolled only 4,109 pupils; in 1930-31 they enrolled 80,840 pupils, or an increase of 1,867 percent within 19 years.

The following table shows the enrollment in March for each year from 1899-1900 to 1930-31:

March annual enrollment in public schools from 1899 to 1931

¹ Enrollment data not available for elementary and secondary grades.

² July data from a report of Mr. George P. Anderson, Superintendent of Public Instruction, dated Aug. 5, 1900, to the Acting Adjutant General, Manila.

³ Report of the Philippine Commission. Report of the General Superintendent of Education for the year ended Sept. 1, 1902, p. 603.

⁴ Annual Report of the General Superintendent, September 1904, p. 12.

If the foregoing figures do not indicate that the Filipinos are intensely interested in education what do they indicate?

A notable feature of the Philippine schools is the length of the school term and the average number of days attended. In 1931-32 the average number of days that the schools were in session was 195 and the average number of days attended was 178. In continental United States the average school term is only 171 days and the average number of days attended is only 145. An interesting fact to be noted is that the Filipino children are attending school more regularly than they did. In 1919-20 only 80 percent of the pupils enrolled were in daily attendance; in 1931-32, 90 percent were in daily attendance.

The increased interest of the Filipinos in education is also indicated by the increasing amounts received for the support of schools. In 1920 the total revenue receipts were $9,128,297 and in 1932 $15,410,996, an increase of 69 percent within 12 years. The value of public-school property within the 12-year period increased from $11,364,399 to $23,744,137, or 109 percent.

To top the educational system is the University of the Philippines. That the Filipino people are interested in higher education is evident from the increase in enrollment in the university. In 1912 the enrollment was only 1,400; in 1920, 3,409; and in 1932, 7,261. Within 20 years the enrollment increased 490 percent.

In 1932 the university was maintained at an expenditure of $995,393, of which $936,525 was for current expenses. No stronger evidence of the interest of the Filipinos in higher education need be given than these figures.

The increase in the professional training of teachers should also be noted. In 1927 only 16 percent of the elementary and secondary school teachers were college or normal-school graduates; in 1932, 36.5 percent were college or normal-school graduates.

Let us now see what the schools are doing to prepare the children for citizenship. One of the essentials of a good citizen is good health and one of the aims of the school should be to look after the health of the children and to train them in health habits. Dr. Luther B. Bewley, director of education in the Philippines, says in his 1932 report:

Constant progress has been made in improving the sanitation of the school plant. * * * In the classroom efforts have been made to improve the quality of the instruction and to encourage the practical application of health knowledge not only in school but also in the home and the community.

In 1932, 420,043 pupils were examined by physicians, 423,409 were inspected by physicians, and 837,682 were inspected by nurses; 726,509 were immunized against cholera, 260,795 against typhoid, 707,231 against dysentery, and 348,591 against smallpox.

Physical education is being emphasized. The Director of Education says in his 1932 report:

Continued and encouraging progress in physical education was made in 1932. This progress was enhanced through improved play facilities, more equipment, and better organization of the various physical-education activities. Games and sports have gained steadily in popularity during recent years.

The campaign for the improvement of playgrounds and for the local construction of standard play apparatus is gradually gaining the desired ends.

Does not all this indicate that the schools of the islands are striving to attain one of the major objectives of education—healthful living?

What are some of the other things that the schools are doing to educate the children for citizenship?

In the high schools there is a general curriculum which in September 1932 enrolled 43,257 pupils, a normal curriculum enrolling 3,943 pupils, a trade curriculum enrolling 5,970 pupils, an agricultural curriculum enrolling 3,280 pupils, and a home-economics curriculum enrolling 5,040 pupils.

In the elementary schools much attention is given to hand weaving and shop work. The total number of pupils enrolled in hand weaving is 176,058, distributed as follows: Basketry 39,548, mat 8,221, hat 7,025, net 1,107, others 120,157. The total enrollment in shop work is 44,693, distributed as follows: Wood working, 8,583; rattan furniture, 3,770; bamboo furniture, 5,965; sheet metal, 4,924; others, 21,451.

There are in the islands 299 schools of agriculture, with an enrollment of 27,509 pupils. Three thousand eight hundred and ninety-two hectares are under cultivation. The total value of the school projects in 1932 was 340,425.80 pesos.

There are 1,968 agricultural clubs—vegetable, fruit, poultry, hog, goat, sheep, and others—with a membership of 26,476.

There are 5,928 schools with gardens. The number of pupils taking gardening is 189,599, and the number of pupils that have home gardens is 161,870. The estimated number of hectares cultivated in these gardens is 3,022.

There are 3,920 schools with nurseries. During 1932, 583,974 trees were started, and thousands of shade and fruit trees were planted on the school grounds and at the pupils' homes.

One of the essential services in a school system is its library. Are there libraries in the Filipino schools? Of the 7,644 schools there are 4,947 that have libraries. The total number of volumes in them is 2,215,796. In 1932 they acquired 183,554 volumes, and the total number of subscriptions to periodicals was 14,696.

Data on many other points could be presented, but those already given are sufficient to show that the Filipino children are being educated.

Adult education is also beginning to receive attention. In 1908 the Philippine Bureau of Education was required by law to have prepared a series of lectures on a variety of subjects for the benefit of adults. These lectures were to be called "civico-educational lectures." By an amendment in 1914 municipal teachers were to be in charge of lectures, although other citizens could also be asked to give them. A limited number of lectures were prepared and were delivered in many localities and on many occasions.

During 1932 this civico-educational program was revived by the Governor General in the form of community assemblies. The organization of activities was remodeled upon the suggestion, encouragement, and active support of the Governor General. The objectives set up by the central advisory committee appointed were as follows:

First. To develop a more intelligent and enlightened public opinion, especially among the adults who read no papers.

Second. To instruct the public regarding subjects of wide interest.

Third. To inform the public regarding citizenship activities, duties, health problems, proper diet, and so forth.

Fourth. To guide the public in improved methods of industry, agriculture, and economy.

Fifth. To encourage the community to gather together for social intercourse and for the purpose of discussing problems regarding their community and general welfare.

Sixth. To further interest the community in its local folklore, folk song, folk dances, and games (33d Annual Report of the Director of Education, 1932).

Such a program will mean much in keeping the people informed on public questions and citizenship duties, thus helping the people to govern themselves intelligently.

MAJ. GEN. HARRY G. BISHOP RETIRES—FORTY YEARS OF SERVICE BY ONE OF AMERICA'S OUTSTANDING GENERALS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, Maj. Gen. Harry Gore Bishop, an officer who has, for more than 40 years, rendered outstanding service to the Army and to his country, just completed his tour as Chief of Field Artillery and is retiring this month.

Only the American Army could have produced a career as colorful, and the occasion deserves more than passing attention, I feel. Graduated from West Point in 1897, young Bishop had barely 2 years of commissioned service when he was made chief of the department of licenses and municipal revenue of the city of Manila, maintaining supervision over all the civilian business of this cosmopolitan city of a quarter of a million people. During his year and a half in that position he drafted many of the municipal ordinances still in force in Manila. Young Bishop not only succeeded in breaking up much of the graft then rampant in the city but prevented the scandals connected with the business affairs of the city.

As a line officer Bishop has commanded every unit of field artillery. More than 12 years of his service has been in actual duty with troops. In August 1912 he was stationed at Fort Sill, Okla., in my district, as a major of the Fifth Field Artillery, where he gained not only the respect of his officers and enlisted men but the admiration and friendship of the people of Lawton and vicinity. Hundreds of people there will long retain a warm admiration for General Bishop.

From Fort Sill, Bishop went to the Mexican border and commanded the field artillery troops at El Paso during the troublesome times in the spring and summer of 1916. In the following year he was assigned to the War Department General Staff. On July 9, 1917, he was appointed a brigadier general and assigned to the One Hundred and Fifty-ninth Field Artillery Brigade on the Eighty-fourth Division, which organization he took to France. Shortly after his arrival there, he was transferred to the Third Field Artillery Brigade of the Third Division, which he commanded during the Meuse-Argonne operations and the march into Germany.

He was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal by General Pershing, with a citation reading: "By his skill and able leadership, rendered exceptionally valuable services during the battles of the Meuse-Argonne and the subsequent advance to Sedan." He was decorated by the French Government "An officer of the Legion of Honor, for exceptionally valuable services in action in France."

In April 1919 he was ordered to the States for duty as commandant of the Field Artillery School at Fort Sill, but later orders sent him to the Army War College as director. He served in this capacity until detailed to the War Department General Staff as head of the training section of the war-plans division. He was chief of staff, Philippine Department, from November 2, 1922, until September 1924, when he returned to the States and served at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., in command of the Fifteenth Field Artillery. He was transferred to Fort Hoyle, Md., in August 1927 in command of the Sixth Field Artillery and the post of Fort Hoyle; and later to Hawaii and commanded the Eighth Field Artillery unit until he was appointed chief of the Field Artillery.

During his 4 years as Chief of Field Artillery his intellectual and physical vigor, his splendid qualities as a leader, and his progressiveness and patriotic devotion to duty have excited general admiration. He concentrated his energies particularly upon motorization and modernization of Field Artillery transport and weapons, with the result that when funds became unexpectedly available the arm was ready for motorization. This has been extended to a large part of the National Guard with an operative saving running into millions.

This revolution in artillery equipment called for almost endless planning in small detail. When attention to minor detail was necessary, General Bishop entered into working them out with the same enthusiasm that he devoted to the major plans of studies. He personally presented many of the mechanical ideas involved in the modernization of the artillery gun carriages. This modernization includes not only high-speed training, but much greater traverse on the carriage, the ability to fire at extreme ranges without excessive digging and reducing the time required for occupation of the firing position.

When it became evident that serious reduction in ammunition allowances for peace-time training would be necessary in balancing the national Budget, General Bishop threw his efforts into the design and development of a miniature gun which could serve as a training device for junior officers.

Batteries of this miniature gun have now been issued to the Regular Field Artillery, the National Guard, and the Field Artillery Reserve Officers' Training Corps. Within a week after his severe heart attack of a year ago, he was directing this development from his sick bed. Having this project and the completion of his motorization plans before him he had no time to be sick. Through sheer determination and an unconquerable spirit he fought his way back to sufficient physical strength to enable him to resume his work in his office.

The modernization of the field artillery is proceeding not alone in equipment but in the minds of the officers and enlisted men of the branch, National Guard, and Reserve, as well as Regular. The impulse which started this activity came from the dynamic personality of General Bishop. Both the Army and the Nation owe General Bishop an everlasting debt of gratitude.

CONFERENCE REPORT—AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1935

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight tonight to file a conference report upon the Agricultural Appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for the purpose of asking the gentleman a question. Rumor has it that there is only one point of disagreement, and that is the difference between the House and the Senate bills on the so-called "Clark-McNary" amendment. Can the gentleman advise us as to that?

Mr. SANDLIN. This is a full report on all items.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

H.R. 1647

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the bill H.R. 1647, a bill introduced by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct the attention of the House at this time to the malicious communistic propaganda being circulated among the youth of America and take this opportunity to urge the absolute necessity for enactment of legislation as proposed in my bill, H.R. 1647, to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts.

This measure, which I introduced on March 9 of last year, and which is pending before the Judiciary Committee, would curb the sinister activities of those who advocate the destruction of the Government, or the physical injury to any person or any property of the Government of the United States.

Into the crucible of economic reconstruction and readjustment, our great Nation has poured its entire vast resources in a mighty and whole-hearted attempt to win our way back to recovery. Every patriotic citizen is fighting for the continuance of the cherished ideals which have made the United States the mecca for the politically oppressed and down-trodden the world over. While most regrettable, it is perhaps to be expected that enemies of law and order would seize the time when our efforts are concentrated in a great campaign to banish the depression to endeavor to undermine the existing social order by means of insidious and vicious communistic propaganda spread through our school system.

To claim that our present social order has reached perfection would be stupid. However, to advocate its overthrow by bloodshed and violence is criminal. Our Government is elastic and malleable in construction and is easily subject to necessary adjustments and reforms by the will of the people, asserting itself through the regular and proper channels provided by the Constitution. The subversive activities of radical groups against the United States must not be tolerated.

The recent exposé of the activities and aims of the communistic organizations which are conducting a systematic campaign to spread their destructive propaganda through the schools of the country gives ample evidence of the pressing need for action to check their undermining influence. It has been found that the official publication of an avowed communistic organization is being carefully distributed through mailing lists of student agents in colleges and schools throughout the Nation.

Recent articles on this subject by the chairman of the executive council of the National Civic Federation appearing in the Hearst papers throughout the country show that the following numbers of the Student Review, published by the National Student League, have been shipped recently for private distribution to student members:

University of Chicago, 50; Chicago distribution, unidentified as to schools, 300; University of Wisconsin, 40; University of Illinois, 15; Purdue, La Fayette, Ind., 10; Omaha, Nebr., 10; University of Nebraska, Lincoln, Nebr., 10; Detroit City College, 75; Northern High School, Detroit, 25; University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, 50; Columbia, Mo., 25; Washington University, St. Louis, 20; University of Minnesota, Minneapolis, 50; in the New York metropolitan area there was a total distribution of 2,260; about 300 copies were distributed at meetings in high schools; Harvard, 25; Amherst, 25; Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 40; Tufts, Roxbury, Mass., 75; Yale, 50; University of Syracuse, N.Y., 25; Buffalo, N.Y., 60; Cornell, Ithaca, N.Y., 30; Pittsburgh, unidentified as to school, 100; Philadelphia, 100; Cleveland, Case School and unidentified, 60; Washington, D.C., unidentified, 75; Baltimore, four agents, 10 each; Johns Hopkins University, 25; Georgia School of Technology, Atlanta, Ga., 10; University of California, Berkeley, 100; Stanford, Palo Alto, 25; Oakland, Calif., 15; Los Angeles, four agents, 110; University of Washington, Seattle, 35.

Entries indicating smaller membership, usually 5 to 10; Milwaukee State Teachers College, Milwaukee, Wis.; Baylor University, Waco, Tex.; University of Texas, Austin, Tex.; San Antonio, Tex.; Charlottesville, Va.; Castleton, Vt.; Memphis, Tenn.; Lancaster, Pa.; Scranton, Pa.; Eugene, Oreg.; Toledo, Ohio; Cincinnati, Ohio; Durham, N.C.; Augusta College, Moline, Ill.; Bridgeport, Conn.; Dearborn, Mich.; University of Iowa, Iowa City.

These lists form but a part of the evidence gathered to show that communist forces are conducting an elaborate campaign to overthrow our present Government and establish a communistic Soviet form of government. An article recently published by the official central organ of the Communist Party on February 28 openly states that the purpose of the Young Communist League is to "still more energetically organize the masses for the struggle for a Soviet America."

The indications apparently are that the communistic agitators are failing to make much headway with adult citizens and are concentrating their efforts on the youth of America in our schools and colleges. The National Civic Federation has charged that the primary aims of the movement to convert students to communism are being centered on an effort at crippling national defense, stirring up racial hatred and active student participation in communistic activities in fomenting strikes and labor troubles in industry.

We are at present in the midst of a war against the depression, upon the success of which depends the existence of even the basic foundations of our Government. If we were at war with another nation, we would not tolerate these destructive activities of radical agitators for an instant. Their insidious propaganda campaign would be instantly suppressed. Our present war for self-preservation is just as important as any conflict we have waged in the past against a transgressor nation, and it is up to us to put a stop to these nefarious activities without delay.

We are a tolerant, broad-minded, and free-thinking people. Criticism of existing institutions and the established order of things is a right we would not think of denying. However, when in their fanaticism these destructive zealots deliberately overstep the constitutional right of free speech and begin to preach the downfall of government by violence and the adoption of their own pet theories of a communistic regime, the time has come for us to recognize that in combating the depression we must not overlook the danger that besets us in this direction.

Enactment of legislation to curb such activities has become a patriotic duty and an urgent necessity. The ruthless, destructive policies of those who would overthrow our Government must not be permitted to interfere with our efforts toward recovery. Our early action on this vital question daily becomes more imperative.

NATIONAL STUDENT LEAGUE,
13 West Seventeenth Street, New York, N.Y.
(583 Sixth Avenue.)

The National Student League fights for—

1. Lower tuition fees, a free college in every city.
2. Academic freedom for all students and instructors.
3. Abolition of all forms of compulsory religious services in college.
4. Abolition of R.O.T.C.
5. Full social and political equality for Negroes and other minorities.

The Student Review, the official organ of the National Student League, is the prime organizer of the radical student movement.

It is also a monthly review of the contemporary political, economic, and cultural situation, from a Marxist point of view. Published and edited by college students, it reflects the rise of student dissent against the narrow confines of the capitalist order. Although sometimes calling on outside contributors, the Review will remain, for the most part, a student publication.

LINK REVEALED

Although the National Student League disclaims affiliation with the Communist Party, the organization department of the national executive committee of the Young Communist League (officially a part of the Communist Party) asks the National Student League to supply detailed information in order "to have a complete picture of our mass organization by January 1."

To N. S. L.:

Some time ago we sent you a brief note asking you to turn in a report on the organizational status of the fraction, etc. That was to be an approximate report. In the same letter we asked that by January 1 you prepare a detailed report on the basis of reports from each of your districts or locals, regarding the exact membership, composition of membership (workers, students, etc.), etc.

We ask that you take the necessary steps to get such detailed information immediately. Our intention is to have the complete picture of our mass organizations by January 1. The report should also contain information as to the number of members on the various district committees, the size of our fractions, the circulation of whatever papers issued, etc. Let us have this at once.

Comradely,

J. MARKS,
Org. Dept. NEC YCL.

Facsimiles of extracts from a radical magazine (mimeographed) issued at Oberlin College by a local "Liberal Club", which is also a National Student League chapter. The masthead of this magazine does not mention the N.S.L. Karl Marx, Lenin, and the Communist Party come in for attention on page 1, as shown in the facsimile.

OBERLIN'S OTHER HALF

By Robert Creegan

Many practical, rather skeptical people will not accept the scientific socialism of Karl Marx. They will not be forced leftward by any logical system whatsoever. They demand the chance to see the mansion, the factory, and the slum as they actually exist before they make their decision which side to support, the left or the right. So, by all means, let's be practical.

Let us bring the matter clean — [between the] capitalistic system — [and the] working class under our economic system based on private profits and greed is an adequate reason in itself for supporting the Communist Party. By all means read Marx and Lenin—but don't forget to notice the world around you.

[Washington Herald, Mar. 4, 1934]

Brian Kent, in a report to the National Student League, from Adairsville, Ga., reveals that he is "under cover", "working on a farm so as not to arouse suspicion", trying to organize industrial strikes, fighting the A.F. of L., trying to organize a Farmers' Union, trying to organize N.S.L. in the Berry School. He expects to be arrested, and asks that the International Labor Defense (Communist) jump to his defense. Herewith are portions of his letter:

"Perlo sent me $5. I spent every cent of it getting out 4,000 leaflets and mailing a lot of stuff. I'm flat broke now and can't get in touch with Perlo, except through the N.S.L. Get money from Tuffy or someone and send it right away. Send bills; money orders are unhandy. Register the letter and mail it to Arnold Sulton, Adairsville, Ga. Never mention my name or the N.S.L. on any envelopes."

"The S.O. here has asked me to organize a Farmers' Union here while I'm working on Berry. I have several good contacts and expect results. If you received my other letters, you know why I have to remain under cover to a great extent. I am having former Berry students do my running around. I am working on a farm here so as not to arouse suspicion and can carry on my work among the farmers.

"I meet people who work in the cotton mills, and I'm trying to get them to fight the A.F.L. They are very militant, and I expect to attend some strike meetings soon.

"Send copies of the Manifesto and Wage, Labor, and Capital to Willis Sutton, Adairsville, Ga. He is ripe for that."

"I expect to be nabbed by the police before the Berry affair is over. They had me once. If they do, I'm going to have the I.L.D. jump in, so be prepared.

"Write immediately and tell me what's up. I'd sure like to know.

"Comradely,

"BRIAN KENT, C. J."

In a second letter Brian Kent asks "Nat Solomon", of the National Student League, who is "organizer" for the new N.S.L. drive in the high schools of America:

"What do you think about letting the undersigned stay in the South and organize for the party. The S.O. wants me, and I want to stay. You may get a letter from him soon.

"Anyhow, send me money because this is my last letter until I get money, unless Heaven rains shekels.

"Comradely,

"BRIAN KENT."

Max Stern, C.C.N.Y., 1933, writes to the National Student League that he has "seen the light" and has become an off-campus revolutionist. His N.S.L. brothers can go on discussing "proletarian literature"; he is doing a man's work.

A portion of his letter follows:

"MY DEAR NATIONAL STUDENT LEAGUE:

"I have joined the Citizens' Conservation Camp and am busy spreading revolutionary propaganda. Here is a man's work. You can have a harmless good time discussing "proletarian literature" and getting yourselves suspended by fearful "collitch" presidents. I am justifying my existence.

"An intellect who was not afraid.

"MAX STERN, C.C.N.Y., '33.

"I am on leave until October 15. I would read a reply."

The fiftieth anniversary of the death of Karl Marx occurs at the same time that the revolutionary student movement in the United States, the National Student League, is approaching a new plane in its development. We have had a sort of mushroom growth. Our job now is to build a very strong, firm foundation for this movement. This task is slow and arduous. Our first form of existence, really our raison d'être, is action, leadership in the struggle for student demands. But to accomplish the highest forms of action we have to pass through a simultaneous process of organization and education, agitation, and propaganda. This is not divorced from action, but develops through action and as a result leads to action on a higher plane. An essential and integral part of this process is the study of our theory and history, the study of Marxism-Leninism.

On this occasion let us set for ourselves a Nation-wide task. We should organize study groups on each campus for the study and propagation of the Marxian system. But we should never divorce this study from reality. We should study Marxism "not as a dogma, but a guide to action." In this respect we offer the columns of Student Review to aid in any respect in this task of education. Write us for information. Send us questions. We will attempt to give as much aid and guidance as we can.

IDEALS SET FORTH

The radical nature of the National Student League is shown in the above editorial which appeared in the National Student Review of March 1933.

SENATE

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal Father who hast begirt us round with loving care, blessings beforehand, ties of gratefulness, and hast committed to us rules of reason as holy messengers of Thine: Forgive our foolish ways, capture our truant thoughts, direct our wandering wills, as once again with contrite hearts we fling ourselves as penitents in utter self-abasement upon the world's great altar stairs of prayer that slope through darkness up to Thee.

Touch Thou our lips with truth; let kindness rule our hearts, that we may ever devote ourselves to the furtherance of Thy promise of a regenerated world, and bring comfort for grief, confidence for fear to all the sons of men whom in Thy name we are called upon to serve. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Monday, March 19, when, on motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2534) to further extend the operation of the act entitled "An act for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law", approved April 1, 1932, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 7581. An act to authorize a board composed of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture to negotiate with foreign buyers with the view of selling American agricultural surplus products at the world market price and to accept in payment therefor silver coin or bullion at such value as may be agreed upon which shall not exceed 25 percent above the world market price of silver, and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue silver certificates based upon the agreed value of such silver bullion or coin in payment for the products sold, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 8402. An act to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 356) for the relief of the Great American Indemnity Co. of New York, and it was signed by the Vice President.

DISPOSITION OF AGRICULTURAL SURPLUSES—HOUSE BILL REFERRED

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the bill just messaged over from the House, being House bill 7581, deals with agricultural surpluses. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be so referred.

The bill (H.R. 7581) to authorize a board composed of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture to negotiate with foreign buyers with the view of selling American agricultural surplus products at the world market price and to accept in payment therefor silver coin or bullion at such value as may be agreed upon which shall not exceed 25 percent above the world market price of silver, and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue silver certificates based upon the agreed value of such silver bullion or coin in payment for the products sold, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

HOARDERS OF SILVER

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution and ask that it be read, and, when that shall have been done, I will ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S.Res. 211), as follows:

Whereas it is currently reported that speculation in the commodity known as silver is being practiced; and

Whereas it has been charged that certain persons are hoarding said commodity; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States has pending before it legislation which would have, if enacted, a strong effect on the market price of silver: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is requested to furnish to the Senate a list of the names of hoarders of silver, if such information is available and if the furnishing of such information would not be incompatible with the public interest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTION—CONFERENCE REPORT (S.DOC. NO. 156)

Mr. TRAMMELL submitted the following report, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6604) to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 6, and 7, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the first and each succeeding alternate vessel of each category, except the 15,000-ton aircraft carrier, upon which work is undertaken, and the main engines, armor, and armament for such vessels, the construction and manufacture of which is authorized by this act, shall be constructed or manufactured in the Government navy yards, naval stations, naval gun factories, naval ordnance plants, or arsenals of the United States, except such material or parts as were not customarily manufactured in such Government plants prior to February 13, 1929: Provided further, That, if inconsistent with the public interests in any year to have a vessel or vessels constructed as required above, the President may have such vessel or vessels built in a Government or private yard as he may direct."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That not less than 10 percent of the aircraft, including the engines therefor, the procurement of which is authorized by this act and hereafter undertaken, shall be constructed and/or manufactured in Government aircraft factories and/or other plants or factories owned and operated by the United States Government.

"The foregoing paragraph is subject to the following conditions:

"(1) That if it shall be determined by the President that present plants, factories, and equipment owned by the Government are not such as to permit the construction and/or manufacture of the said aircraft and/or engines in such Government plants and factories, in the proportions herein specified and required, then and in that event such requirement may be suspended in whole or in part by his order. However, in the event of such order of suspension being made by the President, then at his discretion the existing plants, factories, and facilities now owned and/or operated by the Government shall forthwith be expanded and equipped to enable the Government to construct, manufacture, and repair not less than 10 percent of its naval aircraft therein, except that it shall be discretionary with the President as to the percent constructed and/or manufactured in Government plants if he should find it impracticable for the Government to undertake the construction and/or manufacture of not less than 10 percent of its naval aircraft therein.

"(2) The President is also authorized to employ Government establishments in any case where—

"(a) It should reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents therefor, bidding for the construction of any of said aircraft, engines, spare parts, or equipment have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said aircraft, engines, spare parts, or equipment, or—

"(b) Should it reasonably appear that any person, firm, or corporation, or agents thereof, being solely or peculiarly in position to manufacture or furnish the particular type or design of aircraft, engines, spare parts, or equipment required by the Navy, in bidding on such aircraft, engines, spare parts, or equipment, have named a price in excess of cost of production plus a reasonable profit, as provided in section 3 of this act.

"The funds necessary for the enlargement and expansion of such existing plants and facilities now owned by the Government for the construction and manufacture of naval aircraft, are hereby authorized to be appropriated."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 3 and 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3 and 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by amendment numbered 3, and in lieu of the matter inserted by amendment numbered 4, insert the following:

"Provided, That no contract shall be made by the Secretary of the Navy for the construction and/or manufacture of any complete naval vessel or aircraft, or any portion thereof, herein, heretofore, or hereafter authorized unless the contractor agrees—

"(a) To make a report, as hereinafter described, under oath, to the Secretary of the Navy upon the completion of the contract.

"(b) To pay into the Treasury profit, as hereinafter provided shall be determined by the Treasury Department, in excess of 10 percent of the total contract price, such amount to become the property of the United States: Provided, That if such amount is not voluntarily paid the Secretary of the Treasury may collect the same under the usual methods employed under the internal revenue laws to collect Federal income taxes.

"(c) To make no subdivisions of any contract or subcontract for the same article or articles for the purpose of evading the provisions of this act, but any subdivision of any contract or subcontract involving an amount in excess of $50,000 shall be subject to the conditions herein prescribed.

"(d) That the manufacturing spaces and books of its own plant, affiliates, and subdivisions shall at all times be subject to inspection and audit by any person designated by the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Treasury, and/or by a duly authorized committee of Congress.

"(e) To make no subcontract unless the subcontractor agrees to the foregoing conditions.

"The report shall be in form prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy and shall state the total contract price, the cost of performing the contract, the net income, and the percent such net income bears to the contract price. A copy of such report shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury for consideration in connection with the Federal income tax returns of the contractor for the taxable year or years concerned.

"The method of ascertaining the amount of excess profit to be paid into the Treasury shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury in agreement with the Secretary of the Navy and made available to the public. The method initially fixed upon shall be so determined on or before June 30, 1934: Provided, That in any case where an excess profit may be found to be owing to the United States in consequence hereof, the Secretary of the Treasury shall allow credit for any Federal income taxes paid or remaining to be paid upon the amount of such excess profit.

"The contract or subcontracts referred to herein are limited to those where the award exceeds $50,000.

"The provisions of this section shall not become effective until June 30, 1934."

And the Senate agree to the same.

PARK TRAMMELL,
MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
FREDERICK HALE,

ADMINISTRATION PROGRAM AND ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered to the Young People's Democratic League of Illinois, on Saturday, March 3, 1934, by Richard F. Roper, executive secretary of the Democratic National Committee, on the Administration's Program and Accomplishments.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, when the president of your State organization, Mr. Floyd Kenlay, extended to me the invitation of your arrangements committee to address this convention, my mind went back to the last Young Democratic convention I had the pleasure of attending. I refer to your first national convention at Kansas City, the 1st of September 1933.

At that convention you had delegates from all parts of the United States, all eager to know the plans of our great President in the future months to come, all eager to help him shoulder the great burden that was his.

Since that convention, the accomplishments of our President and the program of the national administration have unfolded so rapidly that it is impossible for me to describe these events here. So great has been the activity at the Nation's Capital that we must rely upon the historians of the future to give us an adequate impression of what has occurred under our very eyes.

Our President has told us in his speech of acceptance at Chicago that he had no sympathy with foolish precedent which was adhered to for its own sake. He had made it plain that he would not hesitate to break with tradition and precedent when he felt that the greatest good for the greatest number of people required him to do so.

Franklin D. Roosevelt has not forgotten that pledge. He has kept the faith, and the events of his first year as President of the United States bear adequate testimony to this assertion. Never in the history of this or any other nation has so much constructive work been done in so short a period of time. Never in the history of this or any other nation has a leader so clearly understood the temper of his people. It is not by chance that today President Roosevelt has a place in the hearts of the American people as no other President has had in his own lifetime.

As this convention of Young Democrats gets under way it is well for us to remember that Franklin D. Roosevelt is the President of all the people, and not of the Democratic Party alone. Of course, it is natural for those of us who worked shoulder to shoulder in the thick of the presidential campaign fight of 1932 to remember our victory with a great deal of pride. We have a right to believe in our hearts that had it not been for the work which we did, America might not have had this great leader in the White House today. But we must remember that the events of the past year have proved that had it not been for the courageous action on the part of the Federal Government our very form of government itself might not have survived. The past year has been no time for partisanship. No one in this country realizes this fact as keenly as President Roosevelt. Because of this understanding, the President has insisted that his recovery program extend relief to every American, regardless of political affiliation.

Americans, young and old, have caught the vision of the President. Democrats and Republicans alike have realized that we have all been in the same boat, that recovery would come to Republican as soon as to Democrat. There have been no party lines in the past year. You are for recovery or you are against it. You are willing to put your shoulder to the wheel or you are a shirker. This has been a show-your-colors year. We have shown the President's colors because we know he is trying to do a job which will do the most for all of us.

What part has the Young Democratic Clubs of America as a political organization had to do with this great program? The answer is evident. As a political organization, it has not been the function of your national organization to concern itself with assisting in directing the Nation's recovery program. But as individuals, the members of the Young Democratic clubs of every State have had a most important part in the events of the past year. One of the most encouraging signs of this period has been the enthusiasm of the young people of this country to accept 100 percent the program of the Nation's leaders and to do all in their power to promote its success. It is fitting and proper that as individuals the members of Young Democratic clubs of this and other States have contributed to an aggressive support of recovery without which our President would have been helpless.

What can the young Democrats of Illinois and what can the Young Democratic Clubs of America do now, next year, and in the more distant future? What can this important organization and its brother groups in other States contribute to permanent national recovery and well-being? The answer lies with you, and with each and every sincere young American.

You are a political organization. Your name labels you as such. But what are the real purposes and ideals which are in your minds? I do not mean the purposes set forth in your National and State constitutions, though these are important. I have in mind the plans and thoughts which young Democrats have as individuals.

Since the 1st of February 1932 I have had an opportunity to talk with hundreds of young Democrats about this very matter. It was on this date that I had the privilege of starting to work with Hon. James A. Farley and Hon. Louis Howe, who were in charge of Governor Roosevelt's preconvention campaign.

During the campaign and after, I talked with Democrats of every State and asked them what they thought of a national club organization of young people to foster and promote the ideals and principles of the Democratic Party. Some said it was a great idea in theory, but it wouldn't work in practice. This group said that the national club idea wasn't new; it had been tried dozens of times before only to fizzle out after a few enthusiastic months. These were the practical politicians speaking. "What do you mean?" I asked. "Why did they have to fail?" "Look at the record", they replied; "it speaks for itself."

And so I did look at the record of club organizations for many years back. What was the result? I found that there were many such groups but that they all had certain characteristics in common. The first type was formed purely for the purpose of the personal advancement of one or two people. Of course, these groups failed. It was right that they should not succeed. They had no real contribution to make for a better political society.

Then there was the second group. Some of these had the proper ideals. They really wanted to make a contribution to American political life. But their enthusiastic organizers didn't realize that they must stay out of primary and preconvention contests; that they must not try to tie their groups to personalities. Enmities were brought about which resulted in the ultimate destruction of organizations which had much good about them.

What about the third type of club organization we find in the pages of Democratic Party history? The story of these groups is probably the saddest of all. They were formed and led in most cases by persons of serious purpose, who refused to tie their organizations to personalities, and who had no personal motives of self-advancement. They believed in the responsibility of political parties, and they wanted to keep those parties clean and honest and progressive. What happened to them? They failed because they tried to operate as national organizations directing political activity in many States. They didn't realize that the way to bring about political reform is through the legal means provided for it. They forgot that the Democratic National Committee and no other national political group has any power granted to it by the laws of State or Nation. They did not reckon with the fact that the only source of local political authority is drawn from the election laws of the 48 States. They built their foundations upon the sands, and the tide of waning interest came and washed their groups away.

This must not happen to the Young Democratic Clubs of America and to its affiliated groups in the several States. It cannot happen if the Young Democratic club members have in their hearts political ideals that are worth saving anyway.

The President of the United States is not one of those who feel that a national Democratic youth organization cannot succeed. There are many progressive and liberal Democrats who know that as long as your groups in their various States follow the proper procedure they can continue for years to come.

What is this "proper procedure?" Only ordinary common sense. Make sure that you Young Democrats in this and other States have safeguarded your basic principles by adopting State constitutions which guarantee that your State executive groups and every local unit have ample and frequent opportunity to select leaders in which 51 percent of the members have the greatest confidence. Change that constitution when you will, but make sure that a change is really in the interest of all the members and not designed to help one or two ambitious leaders.

Make sure that each and every member in this and other States has a thorough understanding of the State election laws and takes a real interest in the selection of regular Democratic Party officials. If you don't believe those election laws are fair and right, work in the State legislature to get them altered. In short, make sure that Young Democratic organizations provide outlets for liberal thought and opinion on all political and governmental questions. Don't stifle a fellow just because you think his ideas too conservative or too radical. Make the Young Democratic clubs of America the "melting pot" for American political expression.

Be sure that everyone understands that the purpose of each Young Democratic group is to provide this freedom of expression and not merely to get votes for the Democratic candidates on election day. Don't make a young man or woman promise to "vote the ticket straight" before he can join the local club. Open the membership rolls to every young American who feels his obligation of citizenship, Republican and Democrat alike, Progressive, Communist, and Socialist. Make the open forum the real thing.

Remember, that in trying to accomplish your ideals, you will have the whole-hearted cooperation of the Democratic National Committee. We will do anything we can to help, as long as we do not do things for you that you should do yourselves. We do not wish to stifle your initiative by too active support. Your group should operate under its own leaders, and the Democratic National Committee will be the last group to try to control or stifle your activity. The party leaders in Washington are proud of your spirit and your enthusiasm, and they want you to keep it up without restraint.

Let's get back to cold, practical politics for a moment. In a few weeks the whole country will begin to get ready for the wholesale speech making of a congressional campaign. What is the function of each Young Democratic State unit in this election year? Obviously, the first and foremost thing for each young Democrat to do is to make sure that his local and State unit is not pledged as a unit for or against any candidate for office. Oust the member who tries to commit the Young Democrats of this or any other State or county as an organization for any individual. This does not prohibit every member from working for his own congressional candidate. Each and every young Democrat as an individual should stimulate interest in the State primaries and conventions for selection of nominees. But wait until the nominees are selected before beginning the group work. The obligation rests on every loyal friend of American Government to work for the election of legislators who will go to Washington to give whole-hearted, loyal support to the President's long-time recovery program.

Now let me call to your attention the main reason why I am here at your convention today. I have already made it clear, I hope, that the Young Democratic Clubs of America is your organization, and that the Democratic National Committee has no desire to take control out of your hands. But we do want to cooperate with you fully. Here is a suggestion I should like to make:

I should like to see the Young Democratic clubs of this and every other State draw up a program designed to make the work of each State unit more effective in future years. Don't limit it to a 1-year plan. I should like to see every thinking group of Young Democrats in the country draw up a 7-year program designed to inform all young people about the ideals and principles of the Democratic Party, and a program which will stimulate interest in the selection of all party officers, so that the Democratic organization will be kept clean, honest, and progressive. Such a program should have as its underlying premise President Roosevelt's belief that what is best for all the people is best for the Democratic Party. The Nation must come first.

Draw up your suggestions. Let's have hundreds of them sent to Washington. No matter how conservative or radical they may be, they will be read and studied with a great deal of interest at national headquarters.

One month from tomorrow, on April 4, the Young Democratic Clubs of America will celebrate the first anniversary of the adoption of your official national constitution, and I think it would be a great thing if by that date your national executive committee could have enough suggestions from each State unit to have at least the rough outline of your Young Democratic 7-year program.

It is my honest opinion that if you decide to do this and if you draw up a program liberal in its outlook, honest in its motives, and with proper safeguards against disastrous blind partisanship, then the Y.D.C.A. will capture the imagination of every young man and woman in the land. Republican and Democrat alike will applaud, and you will gain an impetus to this movement that will make it possible for you to make a lasting contribution to American political life. With National, State, and local constitutions which guarantee freedom of expression, with provisions which safeguard selection of leaders having the confidence of a majority of the members and with a real program worth working for and putting over, the Young Democratic Clubs of America can, and will, last in this country for a hundred years.

I want to thank you for this opportunity of attending this meeting, and I hope that before I leave Galesburg I shall have the privilege of meeting and talking with all of you. I want to know more about Young Democratic problems in the Middle West.

In closing, I want to read to this convention a telegram I received this morning from Washington:

DEAR FRED: Please convey to each and every delegate my very best wishes for an enthusiastic and successful convention. Also say to them that the President and his Cabinet are deeply appreciative of the support accorded this administration in the first year, which closes tomorrow. We are particularly grateful for the spirit of unselfishness which Young Democrats have shown and which has made it possible for the President to forward his recovery program in the best interest of all the people without accusation of favoritism or partisanship.

JAMES A. FARLEY,
Chairman Democratic National Committee.

THE LIBRARY PROBLEM AND THE ARCHIVES BUILDING

MR. FESS. Mr. President, there is in course of construction one of the most magnificent buildings in Washington known as the Archives Building. In due time it will be ready for the valuable documents now in the various departments of the Government. I am very deeply concerned about making it certain that the building will not be made simply a dumping ground or a storehouse for worthless documents, as well as depository for valuable ones.

Some days ago I introduced a bill, identical with one which I introduced at the last session, to provide authority in the President to appoint an archivist so that he may be studying the documents in order that they may be placed there not only for protection, but that they may be used in the future by students of social science and others interested in research work.

I rose at this time to ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD what I think is a very notable paper on the library problem with respect to social-science source materials. The paper deals with the subject I have in mind. It was written by Dr. Joseph Mayer, consultant in sociology in the Library of Congress, Washington, D.C.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Library Journal, Apr. 15, 1933]

THE LIBRARY PROBLEM WITH RESPECT TO SOCIAL-SCIENCE SOURCE MATERIALS¹

(By Joseph Mayer, Consultant in Sociology, Library of Congress, Washington, D.C.)

In opening the discussion on the topic assigned to me, I thought it well to have before us, in general outline, what the joint committee of the Social Science Research Council and of the American Council of Learned Societies (at whose request this round table has been arranged) proposes to do and has already accomplished with respect to the broader problem of materials for research as related not only to libraries and the field of social science but to all the institutions and disciplines included in its survey. The opening sentences of its report published in May 1931 present the issues admirably. I quote from pages 73 and 74.

"The social sciences and humanities have developed in a necessary dependence upon institutions which have other functions than those of research. The scholar relies upon the publishing trade, the Government, the library system, and the educational system for an indispensable apparatus. Disharmonies between the interests of these institutions which serve research incidentally and the interests of research itself are evidenced in the divergence between scholarly value and commercial value in the publishing trade, in the problem of the use of impermanent papers in commercial and Government publications, in the problem of secrecy in Government archives, in the compromise a library must make between bibliophile and research standards of value in acquisition, or between educational and research practices in administration, and finally in the tension present throughout the university system between the requirements of teaching and those of research. . . ."

"In the past 30 years there has been an extraordinary increase in America's investment in research materials, but despite the enormous expansion of libraries, universities, and research institutes, the need for materials has outrun the available resources. The scholars have included in their interest a wider range of documentation and have assumed wider responsibilities toward society. The output of printed matter increases by geometric ratio, so that libraries must count on doubling their capacity every 20 years. The whole problem has been further complicated by the increased use of perishable paper in printing. In the presence of this situation the Social Science Research Council and the American Council of Learned Societies set up a joint committee on research materials to survey America's total equipment for research in the social sciences and humanities, to bring to light unnecessary omissions or duplications, and to review the entire establishment of libraries, historical societies, research institutes, museums, and archives as if it were one vast national enterprise committed to a common purpose of providing material for research."

The first action of the joint committee was to arrange for two surveys: One, of the activities of the American agencies which collect, organize, or publish materials for research; the other, a survey of neglected categories of research which are not adequately cared for at present. It is in connection with this second inquiry that various learned societies, including the social-science societies, have been asked to provide in their annual meetings for 1931 opportunities for the discussion of categories of research materials pertaining to their disciplines. From these combined discussions the joint committee hopes to secure an adequate conspectus of the needs of all the social sciences and the humanities.²

While these surveys are in process the committee is giving immediate attention to three matters regarding which the collecting and preserving machinery in the United States is known to be somewhat inadequate, viz, with respect to newspapers, organization records, and ephemera. Several approaches are being made to the newspaper problem; first, to preserve newspapers from disintegration; second, to reproduce them photographically at less expense and bulk; third, to discover which sections of the country are under-equipped with newspaper records and which are unnecessarily duplicative. As for the preservation of the records of such organizations as welfare societies or business concerns, the joint committee has thus far focused attention primarily upon the dearth of historical business documents; but for the social scientist such a lack is, of course, only part of a much larger need, viz, that of preserving the records and statistics of boards, commissions, agencies, associations, and the like, dealing with education, health, sanitation, recreation, prisons, reformatories, charities, housing, city planning, licensing, inspection, and regulation, and other forms of social welfare and control, of political parties, of courts of law, of certain other Federal, State, county, and local agencies whose records are now inadequately preserved, of religious bodies, fraternal orders, protective associations, and of the learned societies themselves. It has already been suggested that these additional needs be called to the attention of the joint committee by the American Sociological Society. Ephemera, the third category with respect to which the country's collecting and preserving machinery is relatively inadequate, have to do with unbound materials, circulars, book jackets, handbills, programs, advertisements, broadsides, and the like.³

The social scientist is naturally interested in these three categories of somewhat neglected materials and probably in others, as it will be the purpose of these discussions to bring to light. The library's problem with respect to them is, as I see it, mainly one of further elaboration, administration, and cooperation, for its machinery, especially in the larger library, is not so much inadequate as it has not yet been fully applied to the more or less elusive data in question.

At the Library of Congress, for example, there are at least six divisions which, it would seem, already have the equipment necessary for assembling, storing, indexing, and making available to research workers in the social sciences these additional source materials.

One is the division of manuscripts with its special apparatus for taking care of data in unbound and ephemeral form and its unique collection of photostatic reproductions. This division is devoted primarily to American history, and its resources have recently been greatly augmented through a generous grant ($450,000) from Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., for the acquisition of photostats of material in European archives bearing on American history. More than 500,000 documents are thus being made available to American historians who are having increasing use of the division's apparatus, which includes the sale of photostats and their circulation through the interlibrary loan system. Regarding this material, the chief of the manuscripts division, Dr. J. Franklin Jameson, had the following to say in his 1932 report, page 60:

"Photostat copies of any of the Library's photostats, or enlargements from its films, can be obtained at prescribed rates. Request for them or for interlibrary loan of photostats or enlargements will be facilitated by observing the fact that these reproductions are kept in the same order in which the originals are kept, and are marked with the same reference numbers or other designations which the originals bear in the archives or libraries where those originals are preserved. While it is not practicable to put forth in print any really satisfactory guide to the collection until the project has been completed, a descriptive inventory list and a journal of the accessions have been prepared and will be kept currently as means by which it is hoped the needs of investigators may in the meantime be measurably satisfied."

Whatever social-science data there is in this vast collection is, of course, indirect, more important types having already been indicated above. The point here is that suitable apparatus is in successful use for making available unbound and ephemeral source materials. Its extension to the field of social science would seem to await only the acquisition of the additional data and suitable provision for their administration.

Another division is that of maps. The importance of a comprehensive map collection to the student of cultural geography needs no particular emphasis here. But it is relevant to the problem of the proper care of material now relatively neglected to point out that the apparatus of a large map division, as at the Library of Congress, is such—involving, as it does, the care of manuscript maps and views, as well as printed maps and atlases; the exhibiting, photostating, repairing, mounting, titling, classifying, and cataloging of such unique material; and the making of it available for users to the extent now of over 10,000 items a year—that no really different equipment is needed for the care of statistical charts and graphs of social, economic, and political conditions, which are now among the relatively neglected materials. The problem here again is largely one of suitable administration.

The division of documents of the Library of Congress is a third division to be considered in this connection. Here are housed, so far as it is readily feasible to secure them, the official publications of Federal, State, county, and local governments the world over. It would doubtless lead to confusion and division of interest if a vast supply of additional unofficial publications—the records of the organizations, societies, boards, commissions, and agencies mentioned above—were sent to the documents division. But the unofficial publications logically begin where the official documents leave off and the apparatus employed for the latter could readily be applied to the care of the former and of the many border-line records now also neglected. Temporarily the additional published and unpublished social-science research records and statistics here envisaged could doubtless be cared for through such divisions as those of documents, maps, manuscripts, and two or three others, but it would ultimately seem desirable that a new division be created for the social sciences—say, a division of records and statistics—which would utilize existing library apparatus in now relatively neglected fields.

The law library is another Library of Congress division pertinent to the present discussion. Here might be housed, if only for a time, certain court records and records of political parties and of voting for Federal, State, county, and local officials. Its expert staff would be particularly valuable with respect to court records. Much material of interest to the social scientist is already housed in the law library of Congress. For example, recently it has acquired 17 typewritten volumes of over 600 pages each, constituting the first complete English translation of the Code of Justinian and related rules and opinions, than which there is probably no more significant corpus of social-science source data in existence anywhere pertaining to the life of the Roman Empire and the foundations of later medieval society.

The importance for social-science research of adequate files of periodicals, such as newspapers, journals, proceedings and transactions, almanacs, annual reports, yearbooks, and the like, is being increasingly felt by investigators. The resources of the Library of Congress in these respects are comprehended in two important divisions, the periodical and the Smithsonian, and are already well known to social scientists. They have only recently been utilized to good effect by some of those here present. The number of separate periodical items received at the Library of Congress during the last fiscal year was nearly 170,500, including 950 files of different newspapers, 165 of which are foreign and 785 American. The Smithsonian deposit now includes sets of the reports, proceedings, and transactions of the learned institutions and societies of the world, including in most instances the earliest numbers of these series. Here the problem with respect to additional social-science needs is largely one of increasing further the Library's "Announcement is made by the Library of Congress in March 1933 of the receipt of a bequest from the late James Benjamin Wilbur, part of the income of which will be available for the expert treatment of this material.

² Progress in these inquiries is indicated in Survey of Activities of American Agencies in Relation to Materials of Research in the Social Science and the Humanities, by Franklin F. Holbrook, published by the Cooperating Councils, Washington and New York, 1932; Minutes and Annexes of the meeting of the joint committee held in Washington, D.C., Mar. 11 and 12, 1932; Preserving Social Science Source Materials, by Augustus Frederick Kuhlman, Bulletin of the American Library Association, March 1933; Shortcomings of Government Documents and Suggested Remedies, by Jerome Kear Wilcox, The Library Journal, Mar. 1, 1933.

already vast collections and possibly, as an immediate contingency, of helping secure a special subvention to eliminate the present arrearage in binding, to prevent deterioration and loss, and to increase the availability for research use pending the time when the bindery itself may be considerably enlarged, another purely administrative consideration.

Increased facilities and personnel in all these Library of Congress divisions, as well as in others, and the possible addition of another division to deal particularly with neglected social-science source materials, are very much needed if the interests of social research are to be more adequately served there. Besides stressing the need for increased bindery facilities for the periodical division, the superintendent of the reading rooms has this to say in a recent report: "The collection of periodicals in this Library is, perhaps, unequaled in the Western Hemisphere. If the volumes on our shelves were to be analyzed by authors, subjects, and titles, our informational resources would be greatly enlarged." Dr. Jameson reports that the cataloging of manuscripts is considerably behind, the present staff being able to keep up with current accessions only. The line divisions of accessions, cataloging, and classification are even further behind in their activities, and since the care of printed materials pertaining to social science (i.e., sociology, economics, and political science) constitutes by far the greatest burden, as will be indicated presently, it would help materially if supplementary expert assistance under the jurisdiction of the Librarian could be provided by private grant to apply particularly to this field. The Library of Congress now has around 4,500,000 printed books and pamphlets, exclusive of manuscripts, maps, music, and prints, which probably cover more than 4,000,000 additional items. Of the 4,500,000 printed volumes, 2,900,000 have (through the fiscal year 1931-32) been classified under the new classification scheme. Of these, almost one fourth lie in the field of social science (700,110), whereas American history contains only 204,180 volumes and other history 244,130. The next largest classified group to social science is language and literature, with 271,600 volumes as against 700,110. American history, with less than one third the size of the social science printed collection, has been provided by private endowment with a chair at the Library of Congress, with the result that the Library is becoming the greatest center for historical research in the country. The creation of a chair of social science should be likewise instrumental, if a division of records and statistics is also provided, in bringing social-science investigators into satisfactory contact with the basic source materials they now so much lack.

As for wider cooperation between libraries and other agencies designed to assist the social-science research scholar, the Joint Committee of the Social Science Research Council and the American Council of Learned Societies on Materials for Research has made the following suggestions: (1) That a survey be undertaken of the state of local archives throughout the country; (2) that for the care of unbound materials in libraries a new primer or handbook be prepared; (3) that a greater division of labor between libraries be worked out; (4) that the regional principle of collaboration between libraries be more fully utilized in the acquisition of bulky materials and in the collection of business history and like data; (5) that in view of the projected organization of the National Archives in this country, a survey be made of the practices of governments in the destruction of archives; and (6) that a clearing house of photographic reproductions of research materials be provided appropriately at the Library of Congress. I believe we may confidently look to the joint committee to develop these and similar suggestions for cooperative enterprise in a satisfactory manner.⁵

Several notable cooperative ventures, as bearing on the topic of our discussion, are now under way at the Library of Congress. One is the Union Catalog, made possible by another generous grant by Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., of $250,000, providing, in the words of the Librarian of Congress, "for the development of the bibliographic apparatus which forms the basis of our service as a bureau of information in aid of research." There are now nearly 14,000,000 cards in this Union Catalog. Another cooperative project, made possible through a grant by the General Education Board, consists in the preparation of a catalog of all classical and medieval manuscripts—Greek, Latin, and vernacular—of date prior to the sixteenth century, which are to be found in the United States and Canada, in public and, so far as is permitted, in private collections. Books, manuscripts, documents, and papyri are all included. This census of classical and medieval material should provide an important basis for certain types of future sociological as well as historical research.

So much for the problem of enlarged facilities of apparatus and personnel at a great central depository like the Library of Congress, and for national, regional, and local cooperation between libraries and other agencies with respect to social-science source materials. Some of this is quantitative in import, merely doing on a more comprehensive scale what had previously been done to good research effect in the best of the large libraries. The more significant features, however, are also qualitative in import, especially as they concern certain unique facilities for research developed in recent years at the Library of Congress. Such specialized divisions as fine arts, music, Chinese, Semitic, and Slavic literature are, of course, to be found in some other large libraries also, but I venture the opinion that there is no other library in which these specialized services as a whole have been carried to the degree of perfection that they have at the Congressional Library, especially in the creation of chairs and consultantships, which provide for a group of specialist-advisers, now numbering 16, scholars in their respective fields of learning, as an auxiliary to the regular Library staff.

It is interesting to note that during the past fiscal year, the third for this new and unique interpretive service in aid of research, 820 mature investigators used the study rooms and study tables of the Library, among them 81 representatives of 23 foreign countries. This constituted a 33-percent increase over the preceding year. What the Congressional Library already offers to the research scholar is well summed up in the 1931 report of the Librarian. I quote from pages 378 and 379:

"The printed books and pamphlets in our collections now number alone in excess of 4,300,000 items." This collection has been practically built up during the past quarter of a century. The effort over this period of years was to provide a well-balanced collection in each field of learning and in addition provide also the technical apparatus (catalog, classification, etc.), to make the material quickly available. That having been accomplished, the next logical step was the expansion and development of our physical facilities—study rooms and study tables—to provide every convenience in the scholarly use of the material. And when the size and character of the collections and the complexity of our classification are considered, the need for specialized interpretation as a fitting climax to these other developments was quickly realized. That this need has been met in the provision for consultants is apparent from the appreciative acknowledgments that have come from the investigators who are now using our collections in ever-increasing numbers. The wide experience and scholarly training of these consultants are available to all investigators who may wish to take advantage of our research facilities.

"The aid rendered by the consultants is of diverse character. They discuss with the investigator his problem, interpret our collections, point out likely sources of information and material, furnish highly specialized information by correspondence, clear up important lacunae in our collections by recommendations for purchase, cooperate in advising as to specialized lists of references, suggest methods of procedure, besides advising as to matters of style in the preparation of manuscripts, and in many instances exert a profound influence through constructive criticism. And their usefulness is constantly expanding. This is instanced during the past year by their aid to a number of distinguished scholars on official Government missions studying what America is doing to meet certain problems. To these they were of invaluable aid in interpreting not only our own source material, but in indicating to them source material available elsewhere and in advising as to the establishment of contacts in the furtherance of their studies."

Besides the consultantships, the Library of Congress now maintains the following chairs: Music, fine arts, American history, aeronautics, and geography. A chair of social science would make a sixth. As in a university, a chair at the Library of Congress implies an endowment, but not for teaching or research, except in the sense that it promotes the latter. Its purpose is interpretive, which involves something more than the mere administration of the collections in the ordinary way. Qualifications beyond the usual technique are required, particularly a specialist knowledge of a given field of learning and experience in its methods of research. By adding the income from private endowment to a Government stipend for the administration of the division to which the chair is attached, the total compensation insures for the holders of these chairs specialists comparable in training and standing with full professors in a university.

An important problem with every library is the necessary increase in its physical equipment to accommodate additional needs. This would seem to have been solved for some time to come at the Library of Congress by the authorization in 1930 of $6,500,000 for the actual construction of an annex to the present Library Building, an adjacent site having previously been selected. Appropriations have been delayed but should be forthcoming in the near future.

It is such considerations as these, in viewing the library problem with respect to social-science source materials, which have led me to the conclusion that at the Library of Congress all the essentials of apparatus and service are already provided and that further elaboration, administration, and cooperation, along the lines established and in process of being worked out, will make available to the social scientist the neglected source data for which he now seeks.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. Under the unanimous-consent agreement previously entered entered into the clerk will call the calendar for unobjected bills, commencing with Order of Business No. 471.

HEAT IN LIVING QUARTERS IN DISTRICT

The bill (S. 1100) to require the furnishing of heat in living quarters in the District of Columbia was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every owner, landlord, lessor, or sublessor, or agent thereof, who shall lease or sublease any apartment, building, or part of a building, room, or rooms to another, with an agreement to heat the same, and shall neglect or fail to keep the temperature of such apartment, building, or part of a building, room, or rooms at not less than 68° F. between the hours of 7 o'clock a.m. and 10 o'clock p.m., shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than $25 nor more than $100 for each offense, and each day of such neglect or failure shall be deemed a separate offense.

PROPERTY OF NATIONAL SOCIETY UNITED STATES DAUGHTERS OF

The bill (S. 2580) to exempt from taxation certain property of the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 in the District of Columbia was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the property situated in square no. 210 in the city of Washington, D.C., described as lot 811, occupied and used by the National Society United States Daughters of 1912, is hereby exempt from all taxation so long as the same is so occupied and used, subject to the provisions of section 8 of the act of March 3, 1877, as amended and supplemented (D.C. Code, title 20, sec. 712), providing for exemptions of church and school property.

EMERGENCY AID IN EARTHQUAKE, FLOOD, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 7599) to provide emergency aid for the repair or reconstruction of homes and other property damaged by earthquake, tidal wave, flood, tornado, or cyclone in 1933 and 1934, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans to nonprofit corporations, with or without capital stock, organized for the purpose of financing the acquisition of home or building sites in replacement of sites formerly occupied by buildings where such sites are declared by public authority to be unsafe by reason of flood, danger of flood, or earthquake, and for the purpose of financing the repair or reconstruction of buildings or structures, or water, irrigation, gas, electric, sewer, drainage, flood-control, communication or transportation systems, damaged or destroyed by earthquake, conflagration, tornado, cyclone, or flood in the year 1933, and in the months of January and February 1934, and deemed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to be economically useful or necessary.

Obligations accepted hereunder shall be collateralized—

(a) In case of loans for the acquisition, repair, or reconstruction of private property, by the obligations of the owner of such property, secured by a paramount lien except as to taxes and special assessments on the property to be acquired, repaired, or reconstructed, or on other property of the borrowers;

(b) In case of loans for the repair or reconstruction of privately owned water, gas, electric, communication, or transportation systems, by the obligations of the owners of such water, gas, electric, communication, or transportation systems, secured by a lien thereon; and

(c) In case of loans for the repair or reconstruction of property of municipalities or political subdivisions of States or of their public agencies, including public-school boards and public-school districts, and water, irrigation, sewer, drainage, and flood-control districts, by an obligation of such municipality, political subdivision, public agency, board, or district, payable from any source, including taxation or tax-anticipation warrants.

In any case in which any such loan is made, in whole or in part, for the acquisition of land in replacement of land privately owned and declared by public authority to be unsafe by reason of flood, danger of flood, or earthquake, such unsafe property shall be conveyed by the owner thereof, without cost, to the county, municipality, or district in which such property is situated.

The corporation shall not deny otherwise acceptable applications for loans for repair or reconstruction of buildings or structures, or water, irrigation, gas, electric, sewer, drainage, flood-control, communication, or transportation systems of municipalities, political subdivisions, public agencies, boards, or districts because of constitutional or other legal inhibitions affecting the collateral. The collateral obligations shall have maturities not exceeding 10 years in case of loans made under paragraph (a) of this act and not exceeding 20 years in case of loans under paragraphs (b) and (c) of this act.

The aggregate of loans made under this act shall not exceed $3,000,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand the bill is presented as an emergency measure. Will the Senator in charge of the bill explain the primary differences between the Senate committee amendment and the House provision?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the Senate committee amendment relates to the floods and disasters which occurred in January 1934 and really extends the power that heretofore existed in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Dalton bill, which passed the House, is amplified in small degree only by the Senate bill which was introduced by my colleague [Mr. McAdoo] and in which I very heartily concur.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senate amendment is then in reality the bill of the junior Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo]?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. KING. My recollection is that a rather large appropriation was made at one of the former sessions of Congress for earthquake and flood relief. Does this bill supplement the appropriation then made?

Mr. JOHNSON. The original appropriation was general in character, dealing with all the disasters that had occurred in the United States. This is general as well and touches Washington and Oregon and the recent flood disasters there, as well as in some other States in which Representative DALTON is also interested, and likewise the tremendous flood and fire damage in southern California.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The bill provides for a loan and requires security?

Mr. JOHNSON. Absolutely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to nonprofit corporations for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes."

AMMON McCLELLAN

The bill (S. 2467) for the relief of Ammon McClellan was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Ammon McClellan, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $376.27 as compensation for services rendered from July 18, 1933, to August 31, 1933, in the Department of Agriculture.

CALVIN M. HEAD

The bill (H.R. 5163) for the relief of Calvin M. Head was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $350 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the relief of Calvin M. Head, chief of police of Alma, Ga., whose car was burned by bootleggers while he was assisting enforcement officers in destruction of stills some distance from where automobile was parked at roadside. Such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

FLORENCE GLASS

The bill (H.R. 5228) to authorize the payment of hospital and other expenses arising from an injury to Florence Glass was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the following creditors of Florence Glass the amounts specified after their names: Davis Memorial Hospital, Elkins, W.Va., $65.74; Dr. W. E. Whiteside, Parsons, W.Va., $6; Dr. Benjamin Ira Golden, Elkins, W.Va., $30; John W. Minear, Parsons, W.Va., $7. Such sums shall be paid in full settlement of all claims of the aforesaid creditors against Florence Glass in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States arising out of injuries sustained by her on February 2, 1931, when she was struck by a large stone during the construction of a road in the Monongahela National Forest in West Virginia.

JOHN F. KORBEL

The bill (S. 2664) for the relief of John F. Korbel was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem, in favor of John F. Korbel, of Calmar, Iowa, United States permanent coupon bonds numbered 2806442 to 2806444, inclusive, for $100 each of the third Liberty Loan 4½-percent bonds of 1928, without interest and without presentation of the said bonds, which are alleged to have been lost, stolen, or destroyed: Provided, That the said bonds shall not have been previously presented to the Treasury Department: And provided further, That the said John F. Korbel shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of the said bonds in such form and with such corporate surety as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the bonds hereinbefore described.

S. L. WELLS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2677) for the relief of S. L. Wells, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem in favor of Samuel L. Wells, Lehi, Utah, United States registered bonds numbered 132033 and 132034 in the denomination of $100 each and 47328 in the denomination of $500, inscribed "S. L. Wells", of the second Liberty Loan converted 4½-percent bonds of 1927-42, with interest from May 15, 1927, to November 15, 1927, the date on which the bonds of this loan were called for redemption, without presentation of the bonds, said bonds alleged to have been assigned in blank by the registered payee and subsequently stolen from the Peoples Bank of Lehi, Lehi, Utah: Provided, That the said bonds shall not have been previously presented to the Department: And provided further, That the said Samuel L. Wells shall first file in the United States Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of the missing bonds and the final interest thereon payable November 15, 1927, in such form and with such corporate surety as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury with condition to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any claim on account of the bonds hereinbefore described.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Samuel L. Wells."

ELMER E. MILLER

The bill (S. 232) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Elmer E. Miller was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Elmer E. Miller, former disbursing clerk in the Bureau of Pensions, against the United States for the recovery of any unpaid part of his salary as such clerk, as fixed by law, for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1922, June 30, 1923, and June 30, 1924, respectively.

SEC. 2. Such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceeding for the determination of such claim, and appeals from, and payment of, any judgment thereon shall be in the same manner as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

VELIE MOTORS CORPORATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2905) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Velie Motors Corporation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, the bill was introduced to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine a matter which arose during the period of the war when the Velie Motor Co. was given a contract to construct certain carriages. By some misunderstanding the carriages were constructed according to the specifications; that is, specifications were furnished which were afterward changed. It was thought the carriages were being constructed for domestic use when, as a matter of fact, they were really being constructed for shipment across the ocean. By reason of the change in the specifications the construction of the carriages was made much more expensive. The matter was at one time heard by the Court of Claims and at one time they held with the Velie Motor Co., but afterward a controversy arose as a result of which the Velie Motor Co. got into financial difficulties. Before those difficulties could be straightened out the time had expired. All they want is a chance to submit the matter to the Court of Claims for determination upon its merits.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment, notwithstanding the lapse of time, or any statute of limitations, or any limitation upon the jurisdiction of such court with respect to claims upon any contract implied in law, upon the claim of the Velie Motors Corporation for reimbursement for net losses sustained by such corporation on account of the additional requirements imposed by the Government with respect to the crating of gun carts manufactured pursuant to a certain war contract (no. CMG-74, dated Oct. 25, 1917) with the Ordnance Department, United States Army, which requirements were not contemplated by such contract.

SEC. 2. Such claim shall be instituted by or on behalf of the Velie Motors Corporation within 1 year after the date of the enactment of this act. Proceedings in any suit before the Court of Claims under this act, and review thereof, and payment of any judgment therein, shall be had as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

B. E. DYSON

The bill (S. 1758) for the relief of B. E. Dyson, former United States marshal, southern district of Florida, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office is hereby authorized and directed to credit the accounts of B. E. Dyson, former United States marshal, southern district of Florida, in the amount of $1,060 disallowed by certificate of settlement no. F-22358-J, dated December 18, 1931, representing payments made to Frank A. Kopp for services rendered as bailiff while also holding an appointment as deputy marshal at a compensation of $175 per annum.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 255) for the relief of John Hampshire was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator in charge of that bill explain it? There seems to be a recommendation by the Department against the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator ask to have the bill go over?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SPANISH WAR SERVICE MEDAL

The bill (S. 1810) to amend the act authorizing the issuance of the Spanish War Service Medal was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last paragraph under the subheading "Medals of Honor, Distinguished Service Crosses, and Distinguished Service Medals" in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919", approved July 9, 1918 (40 Stat. 845, 873), as amended, is amended by striking out "not less than 90 days."

FORT SMITH NATIONAL CEMETERY RESERVATION, ARK.

The bill (S. 2266) to authorize the sale of a portion of the Fort Smith National Cemetery Reservation, Ark., and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, under such terms and conditions as he deems advisable, to sell and convey by quitclaim deed to the Midland Valley Railroad Co., its successors and assigns, the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a tract of land containing approximately 0.1 acre, outside of the wall enclosure of the Fort Smith National Cemetery Reservation, Ark.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War shall cause an appraisal to be made of the aforesaid land, the cost of such appraisal to be paid by the Midland Valley Railroad, and said land shall be sold at not less than the appraised value thereof, the proceeds from such sale to be deposited into the Treasury to the credit of the fund known as the "military post construction fund" as provided in section 4 of the act of March 12, 1926 (44 Stat. 203).

AMENDMENT OF GAMBLING LAWS OF THE DISTRICT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2925) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this seems to be an important bill. I suggest that the Senator from Utah explain its provisions.

Mr. KING. Very gladly I will do so, Mr. President.

The bill is rather formidable in length, but, as a matter of fact, it proposes just two amendments to existing law.

Evidence came before the committee, and facts were brought to the attention of the Commissioners and of Mr. Garnett, the district attorney, to the effect that a gambling device known as "numbers" has become very prevalent, and little children are induced to buy these numbers and participate in a gambling game, the result of which is very disadvantageous to the people. It is recommended that this game of numbers be included in the present law against gambling.

That is the important change embodied in the measure.

One other addition to the existing law is this, and I refer to the report on page 2: Efforts have been made to punish the men who keep gambling paraphernalia and maintain gambling houses; but notwithstanding a large number of persons may be found within the gambling houses, and notwithstanding there may be paraphernalia, and so forth, it has been impossible to convict them because no one would testify that they actually engaged in gambling. So the district attorney, Mr. Garnett, prepared the amendment and came before the committee and made the following statement:

To meet the situation confronting the officials charged with the duty of enforcing the laws in the District, particularly in the matter of proof, the proposed bill provides that possession of tickets, slips, and so forth, which are issued in gambling transactions shall be prima facie evidence of purpose or intent of carrying on gambling transactions (sec. 863); that possession of gambling paraphernalia shall be prima facie evidence of the use thereof for gambling purposes and of permitting, inducing, betting, or playing, on the part of the owner, lessee, or occupant of any house, or other place where the paraphernalia is found (sec. 865).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 25, after the word "house", to insert "or part thereof"; on page 3, line 1, after the word "gaming", to insert "or for the purpose of buying, selling, or dealing in numbers, or any slips, tokens, certificates, or devices in connection therewith"; in line 11, after the word "device", to strike out "or on the side of or against the keeper thereof" and insert "or suffer a game to be played by which money or any article or thing is lost or won"; in line 15, after the words "table or", to insert "any other"; in the same line, after the word "device", to insert "or numbers slips, certificates, tickets, or tokens"; in line 17, after the words "prima facie evidence of the", to insert "unlawful"; in line 21, before the word "gambling", to insert "other", and in the same line, after the word "device", to insert "or numbers slips, certificates, tickets, or tokens", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, constituting a Code of Law for the District of Columbia, be, and the same hereby are, amended as follows:

Section 863 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 863. If any person shall within the District keep, set up, or promote, or be concerned as owner, agent, or clerk, or in any other manner, in managing any policy lottery or policy shop, or the game or device known as the 'game of numbers', or shall sell or transfer any ticket, certificate, bill, token, or other device purporting or intended to guarantee or assure to any person or entitle him to a chance of drawing or obtaining a prize, to be drawn in any lottery, or in the game or device commonly known as 'policy lottery' or 'policy' or 'numbers', or shall, for himself or another person, sell or transfer, or have in his possession for the purpose of sale or transfer, or shall aid in selling, exchanging, negotiating, or transferring a chance or ticket in or share of a ticket in any policy lottery or game of numbers, or any such bill, certificate, token, or other device, he shall be fined not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both. The possession of any such tickets, certificates, bills, slips, tokens, or other device shall be prima facie evidence of purpose or intent of selling, transferring, exchanging, or negotiating the same."

SEC. 2. Section 865 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 865. Whoever shall in the District set up or keep any gaming table, or any house or part thereof, vessel, or place, on land or water, for the purpose of gaming, or for the purpose of buying, selling, or dealing in numbers, or any slips, tokens, certificates, or devices in connection therewith, or gambling device commonly called 'ABC', 'faro bank', 'EO', 'roulette', 'equality', 'keno', 'thimbles', or 'little joker', 'numbers', or any kind of gaming table or gambling device adapted, devised, and designed for the purpose of playing any game of chance for money or property, or shall induce, entice, and permit any person to bet or play at or upon any such gaming table or gambling device, or suffer a game to be played by which money or any article or thing is lost or won, shall be punished by imprisonment for a term of not more than 5 years. The possession of any such gaming table or any other gambling device, or numbers, slips, certificates, tickets, or tokens, shall be prima facie evidence of the unlawful use thereof and of the purpose of gaming or gambling or of inducing or permitting betting or playing, on the part of the lessee, occupant, or owner of such house, vessel, or place where such gaming table or other gambling device, or numbers slips, certificates, tickets, or tokens, may be found."

SEC. 3. Section 866 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 866. Whoever in the District knowingly permits any gaming table, bank, or device to be set up or used for the purpose of gaming in any house, building, vessel, shed, booth, shelter, lot, or other premises to him belonging or by him occupied, or of which at the time he has possession or control, shall be punished by imprisonment in the jail for not more than 1 year or by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or both."

SEC. 4. Section 869 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 869. It shall be unlawful for any person or association of persons to bet, gamble, or make books or pools on the result of any trotting or running race of horses, or boat race, or race of any kind, or on any election, or any contest of any kind, or game of baseball, or the game known as 'numbers', or any like game. Any person or association of persons violating the provisions of this section shall be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

SEC. 5. Section 911 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 911. Upon complaint, under oath, before the police court, or a United States commissioner, setting forth that the affiant believes and has good cause to believe that there are concealed in any house or place articles stolen, taken by robbers, embezzled, or obtained by false pretenses, forged or counterfeited coins, stamps, labels, bank bills, or other instruments, or dies, plates, stamps, or brands for making the same, books or printed papers, drawings, engravings, photographs, or pictures of an indecent or obscene character, or instruments for immoral use, or any gaming table, device, or apparatus kept for the purpose of unlawful gaming, or any lottery tickets or lottery policies, or any book, paper, memorandum, or device for or used in recording any bet or deposit of money or thing or consideration of value received for any share, ticket, certificate, writing, bill, slip, or token in any pool or lottery or as a wager on or in connection with any race, game, contest, election, or other gambling transaction or device of an unlawful nature as defined in sections 863, 864, 865, 866, 868, and 869, of the act of March 3, 1901, as amended and supplemented, particularly describing the house or place to be searched, the things to be seized, substantially alleging the offense in relation thereto and describing the person to be seized, the said court or United States commissioner may issue a warrant to the marshal or any officer of the Metropolitan police commanding him to search such house or place for the property or other things, and, if found, to bring the same, together with the person to be seized, before the police court."

"The said warrant shall have annexed to it, or inserted therein a copy of the affidavit upon which it is issued, and may be substantially in the form following:

"Whereas there has been filed before — an affidavit, of which the following is a copy (here insert). These are therefore to command you to enter (here describe the place) and there diligently search for the said articles, goods, or chattels in the said affidavit described, and that you bring the same, or any part thereof, found on said search and also the body of — before the police court, to be dealt with and disposed of according to law."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELECTRIFICATION OF STEAM RAILROADS IN THE DISTRICT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2950) to authorize steam railroads to electrify their lines within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah explain this bill? The question I wish to ask him is whether the bill provides that the Government shall bear any of the expense involved.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill is really to relieve one of the nuisances of which complaint is made, namely, large quantities of smoke being emitted from engines engaged in railroad operations within the District. One of the railroads has planned to electrify its line between here and Baltimore, and this bill merely gives it authority to put electric poles upon its own land within the District. The District Commissioners approve the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 3, after the word "companies", to insert "now operating within the District of Columbia", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That steam-railroad companies now operating within the District of Columbia are hereby authorized, after approval of their detailed plans and issuance of a permit by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to electrify their lines within the District of Columbia and across the Anacostia and Potomac Rivers with an alternating current overhead catenary or other type of electrification system, with all necessary transmission, signal and communication conductors and equipment, poles, conduits, underground and overhead construction, substations, and any other structures necessary in such electrification, the provisions of any law or laws to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sec. 2. Submarine cables may be used at drawbridge openings, provided previous approval shall have been obtained from the War Department.

Sec. 3. Where necessary for such electrification, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may issue permits to construct conduit systems through or under the surfaces of public streets or other District of Columbia or United States property: Provided, however, That three ducts therein shall be reserved for the use of the United States and the District of Columbia.

Sec. 4. Nothing herein contained shall be construed as limiting or abridging the authority of the War Department, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Sec. 5. The said railroad companies shall be liable for any accident to, or injuries sustained by, any person by reason of any act or omission of the railroad companies or by their agents or servants during the construction, installation, maintenance, or operation of the electrical equipment and apparatus of the railroad trains.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPAGATION OF SALMON IN COLUMBIA RIVER DISTRICT

The bill (S. 2629) establishing a fund for the propagation of salmon in the Columbia River district was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established in the Treasury a fund to be known as the "Columbia River salmon-propagation fund." There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid into such fund, a sum equal to the sums heretofore received since 1905 by the United States as rental for fishing rights on Sand Island, near the mouth of the Columbia River, since the attempted grant of such land to the United States by the State of Oregon. All sums hereafter received by the United States as rental for fishing rights on such island shall be covered into such fund.

Sec. 2. All moneys in such fund are hereby reserved, set aside, and appropriated to be available for expenditure by the Secretary of Commerce for the propagation of salmon in the Columbia River district, including the establishment and operation of fish-cultural stations and fish hatcheries, the conduct of practical and scientific investigations and experiments relative to the salmon fisheries, and the diffusion of useful information relative thereto.

Sec. 3. No part of the moneys authorized to be appropriated by this act shall be expended in the construction, purchase, or enlargement of any fish hatchery or fish-cultural station or laboratory unless or until the State in which such hatchery, station, or laboratory is to be located, through appropriate legislative action has accorded or shall accord to the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents the right to conduct fish hatching and fish culture and all operations connected therewith in any manner and at any time that may by the Commissioner be deemed necessary and proper, any laws of the State to the contrary notwithstanding. The operation of any hatchery, station, or laboratory shall be suspended whenever the State ceases to accord such right, or whenever in the judgment of the Secretary of Commerce, State laws and regulations affecting fish propagated are allowed to remain so inadequate as to impair the efficiency of such hatchery, station, or laboratory.

RUSSIAN RAILWAY SERVICE CORPS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2320) for the relief of the officers of the Russian Railway Service Corps organized by the War Department under authority of the President of the United States for service during the war with Germany, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this measure.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, this bill has once before been passed by the Senate. It is a bill for the relief of 288 men who were organized, brought into the service of the United States, and given the title of the Russian Railway Service Corps during the last years of the World War. The men were made part of the military forces of the United States by order of the President, were enlisted in the ordinary way, were issued uniforms, wore uniforms with insignia on them, and carried on in the normal way in which ordinary officers do for a given special task. The same type of men who were brought into the service for duty in France were given regular military service, and were allowed all of the honors and privileges of the military department.

This bill is more sentimental than anything else. It merely gives to these men the right to consider themselves ex-members of the military department of the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I may say to my colleague that I am familiar now with the terms of the bill, and I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 1, after the words "United States", to insert "Army", and in the same line, after the word "War", to insert "Provided, That no back pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the officers appointed by the President, and who served honorably during the war with Germany on and after April 6, 1917, in the Russian Railway Service Corps organized by the War Department under authority of the President of the United States shall be deemed to have the same legal status as if they had received a full and honorable discharge as emergency officers of the United States Army in the World War: Provided, That no back pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT OF ALASKA

The bill (H.R. 6185) fixing the date for holding elections of a delegate from Alaska to the House of Representatives and of members of the Legislature of Alaska; fixing the date on which the Legislature of Alaska shall hereafter meet; prescribing the personnel of the Territorial canvassing board, defining its duties, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the election of a Delegate from the Territory of Alaska to the House of Representatives provided for by the act of Congress entitled "An act providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the Territory of Alaska", approved May 7, 1906, as amended, and the election of the members of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, provided for by the act of Congress entitled "An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes", approved August 24, 1912, shall hereafter be held on the second Tuesday in September in the year 1934, and every second year thereafter on the said second Tuesday in September.

Sec. 2. That the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska shall hereafter convene at the capitol at the city of Juneau, Alaska, on the second Monday in January in the year 1935, and on the second Monday in January every 2 years thereafter.

Sec. 3. That the canvassing board for the Territory of Alaska created by the act of Congress entitled "An act providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the Territory of Alaska", approved May 7, 1906, shall hereafter consist of the Governor, the secretary of the Territory, and the collector of customs for Alaska. It shall be the duty of the said canvassing board to canvass and compile in writing the vote specified in the certificates of election returned to the Governor from the several election precincts in the Territory and to keep an accurate record of each voting precinct in the Territory and the date of its creation.

The said canvassing board shall commence the performance of its duties at the office of the Governor within 10 days after the second Tuesday in October in each year in which an election is held as hereinabove provided, and shall continue with such work from day to day until the same is completed. No packages containing election returns shall be opened until the canvass commences, at which time they shall be opened in public and in such manner and under such conditions, as nearly as possible, as to give all parties interested an opportunity to see the returns. In case it shall appear to the board that no election return, as herein prescribed, has been received by the Governor from any precinct in which an election has been held, the said board may accept in place thereof the certified copy of the certificate of election for such precinct received from the clerk of the court, and may canvass and compile the same with the other election returns. The canvassing board shall terminate the canvass and issue the certificates of election so soon as it is satisfied that no missing return would, if received, change the result of a canvass based upon the returns at hand, but when the board has information that an election was held at any precinct from which no return has been received and which return, if received, the board has reason to believe will affect the result of the election, it shall be the duty of the board to await the arrival of such return until 4 o'clock p.m. on the 10th day of December in the year during which the election is held, but no longer, and any return received after that time shall not be counted by the board.

Upon the completion of the said canvass as herein provided, the said board shall declare the person who has received the greatest number of votes for the office for which he is a candidate elected to such office for the term for which he is elected, and shall issue and deliver to him in writing, under their hands and seals, a certificate of his election. It shall be the duty of the Governor to preserve all election returns carefully and inviolate, and, after the certificates of result have been canvassed, to replace the returns into the packages from which they were taken and carefully seal the same and preserve all such returns inviolate for at least 2 years thereafter, unless sooner called upon by the House of Representatives of Congress or some court or tribunal of competent jurisdiction to produce the same for inspection. It shall also be the duty of the Governor to notify each successful candidate of his election, and to do so by the speediest means of communication.

SEC. 4. Except as herein otherwise provided, all of the provisions of the acts of May 7, 1906, and of August 24, 1912, hereinabove referred to, shall continue in full force and effect until altered, amended, or repealed by Congress. And any and all laws enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska pertaining to elections in said Territory shall remain in full force and effect until altered, amended, or repealed by the said Legislature or by Congress. That the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska shall have the power from time to time as the need therefor may arise to change the date of general elections in the said Territory, including the date of election of a Delegate from the Territory of Alaska to the House of Representatives and of the members of the Territorial legislature; and that the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska shall also have the power by law to change from time to time the personnel of the canvassing board, the dates of its meetings, and may prescribe its duties.

N. W. CARRINGTON AND J. E. MITCHELL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2620) for the relief of N. W. Carrington and J. E. Mitchell, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Virginia", to insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to N. W. Carrington, Dumbarton, Va., and to J. E. Mitchell, Richmond, Va., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sums of $1,020 and $1,260, respectively, in full settlement of Federal indemnity for the destruction of their cattle in 1925 and 1926 which were found to be affected with tuberculosis.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 31) consenting that certain States may sue the United States and providing for trial on the merits in any suit brought hereunder by a State to recover direct taxes alleged to have been illegally collected by the United States during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1866, 1867, and 1868, and vesting the right in each State to sue in its own name was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. REED subsequently said: Mr. President, may I inquire what was done with Senate Joint Resolution 31?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It went over upon objection.

ZUNI RESERVATION, N.MEX.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2876) to provide for the transfer of national-forest lands to the Zuni Reservation, N.Mex., exchanges, and consolidation of holdings, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New Mexico whether this measure will interfere in any way with the lands belonging to the Zuni Indians.

Mr. HATCH. The bill will transfer to the Zuni Indian Reservation about 12 sections of land. It will not interfere with their land. It will give them additional land; and, as I understand, the Department of Agriculture consents to the transfer.

Mr. KING. Will it require, later on, an appropriation by the Government to compensate somebody for the lands, or compel the Indians to pay for the lands so transferred?

Mr. HATCH. No; I think not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 2, line 11, after the words "on the", to strike out "public domain" and insert "unreserved public lands", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the lands in townships 8 and 9 north, ranges 16 and 17 west, New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico, comprising the Miller Division of the Cibola National Forest, are hereby eliminated from the Cibola National Forest and added to and made a part of the Zuni Reservation, subject to all valid rights and claims of individuals initiated prior to the approval of this act.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of effecting exchanges and consolidation of Indian and privately owned lands, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, to accept reconveyances to the Government of privately owned lands, and relinquishments of valid homestead entries or other filings, including Indian allotments, within the above-mentioned national-forest unit, and to permit lieu selections, by those surrendering their rights, of similar lands approximately equal in value, from any lands within the said forest unit or on the unreserved public lands in New Mexico: Provided, That in determining the values and areas of lieu lands the value of improvements, including timber, on privately owned lands to be conveyed or relinquished for Indian benefit shall be taken into consideration and full credit in the form of lands may be allowed therefor: Provided further, That all privately owned lands acquired by the United States under the provisions of this act are hereby declared to be held for the benefit of the Indians of the Zuni Reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECORDS OF FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES

The bill (H.R. 5631) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to place with the Oklahoma Historical Society, at Oklahoma City, Okla., as custodian for the United States, certain records of the Five Civilized Tribes, and of other Indian tribes in the State of Oklahoma, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, to place with the Oklahoma Historical Society of the State of Oklahoma any records of the Five Civilized Tribes, including the Cherokees, Creeks, Choctaws, Chickasaws, and Seminoles, which may be in the custody or control of the Secretary of the Interior and the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes; also of the Wichita, Kiowa, Comanche, Caddo, and Apache Indians that may be within his custody or control or of the agent at Anadarko, Okla.; also of the Arapaho and Cheyenne Indians that may be within his custody or control or of the agent at Concho, Okla.; also of the Sac and Fox, Pottawatomie, Kickapoo, and Iowa Indians that may be within his custody or control or of the agent at Shawnee, Okla.; also of the Wyandotte, Seneca, Quapaw, Peoria, Modoc, and Miami Indians that may be within his custody or control or of the agent at Miami, Okla.; also of the Tonkawa, Ponca, Pawnee, Otoe, and Kaw Indians that may be within his custody or control or of the agent at Pawnee, Okla., and of the Osage Indians that may be within his custody or control or of the agent at Pawhuska, Okla. The Oklahoma Historical Society in receiving the custody of such papers, records, and matters of historical interest to receive same as custodian for the United States of America and the Secretary of the Interior, and to hold same under rules and regulations as may be prescribed by him: Provided, That copies of any documents, records, books, or papers in the office of and custody of the Oklahoma Historical Society when certified by the secretary or chief clerk of said society under its seal, or when such office or position is vacant by the officer or person acting as secretary or chief clerk for the time, shall be evidence equally with the original, and in making such certified copies such secretary or acting secretary and such chief clerk or acting chief clerk shall be acting as a Federal agent, and such certified copies shall have the same force and effect as if made by the Secretary of the Interior when such documents, records, books, or papers were in his office as Secretary of the Interior and certified by him under seal of his office: Provided further, That wherever such certified copies are desired by the Government to be used for the benefit of the Government they shall be furnished without cost: Provided further, That any of the records placed with the Historical Society shall be promptly returned to the Government official designated by the said Secretary upon his request therefor.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2788) to amend section 5219 of the Revised Statutes as amended (relating to State taxation of national banking associations) was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let that bill go over.

ABANDONED PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS, SITKA, ALASKA

The bill (H.R. 5745) granting abandoned public buildings and grounds at Sitka, Alaska, to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following described public buildings and grounds at Sitka, Alaska, are granted to the Territory of Alaska, to be used by the said Territory as a home for aged, sick, and infirm pioneers and residents thereof at the expense of the Territory, to wit: A tract of land described hereafter by metes and bounds:

SEC. 2. That the Territory of Alaska shall never sell or otherwise dispose of any part of said property; and if the same shall ever be abandoned for the uses herein declared the said premises shall revert to the United States.

COMMEMORATION OF THREE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDING OF MARYLAND

The bill (S. 2966) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Province of Maryland was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Province of Maryland, there shall be coined by the Director of the Mint ten thousand 50-cent pieces of standard size, weight, and silver fineness and of a special appropriate design to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be legal tender in all payments at face value.

SEC. 2. That the coins herein authorized shall be issued at par and only upon the request of the chairman or secretary of the Maryland Tercentenary Commission.

SEC. 3. Such coins may be disposed of at par or at a premium by said Commission and all proceeds shall be used in furtherance of the Maryland Tercentenary Commission projects.

SEC. 4. That all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same; regulating and guarding the process of coining; providing for the purchase of material, and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins; for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting; for security of the coin; or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein directed.

RELIEF OF SUFFERERS FROM FIRE IN MINNESOTA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 770) for the relief of certain claimants who suffered loss by fire in the State of Minnesota during October 1918, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 3, line 3, after the words "to the", to strike out "United States Railroad Administration" and insert "Comptroller General of the United States", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to each claimant or its or his heirs, administrators, executors, or successors, the amount of whose loss on account of fire originating from the operation of railroads by the United States in the State of Minnesota on or about October 12, 1918, has been determined by court proceedings or by the Director General of Railroads, the difference between the amount of such loss so determined and the amount actually paid by the United States to such claimant less any amount paid to such claimant by any fire insurance company on account of such fire: Provided, That notwithstanding the terms and conditions of any policy of insurance, or the provisions of any law, no fire insurance company, except farmers' mutual fire insurance companies shall have any rights in and to funds herein appropriated, the payments herein provided for, nor to any right of subrogation whatsoever. That said farmers' mutual fire insurance companies shall be paid in the same manner and to the same extent as other claimants: Provided further, That no person who makes claim under this act by virtue of having acquired and succeeded to the rights of the original claimant through purchase and assignment from said claimant of said claim, shall receive more than the amount actually paid for such claim and assignment: And provided further, That in making payments to claimants, the Secretary of the Treasury shall promulgate rules and regulations as to proof required, as to the identity of claimants, validity of assignments, and all other matters in connection with said payments, and his determination as to the person entitled to receive payment shall be final.

SEC. 2. No payment under the provisions of this act shall be made unless an application therefor is filed with the Secretary of the Treasury by or on behalf of the person entitled to payment within 2 years after the date of the enactment of this act. All applications shall be referred to the Comptroller General of the United States for investigation and adjustment, and payment shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury in accordance therewith.

SEC. 3. The words "person" and "claimant", as used in the act, shall include an individual, two or more persons having a joint or common interest, company, partnership, and municipal and private corporations.

SEC. 4. Any person or group of persons individually or collectively who charge or collect, or attempt to charge or collect, either directly or indirectly, any fee or other compensation for assisting in any manner any person in obtaining the benefits of this act in excess of 10 percent of the amount of the claim actually paid under this act, shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this measure. What obligation is there upon the Government, and what is the amount of the obligation, if any?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, the amount of the obligation can be determined only by going into the records of the courts where the obligation was fixed, either by a decision of the Supreme Court or by stipulation of the claimants. The result of that stipulation was made a part of the court records, and they will have to be searched in order to determine definitely the amount of the claims. The limitation is in those records.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] reported the bill. I will ask him to continue the explanation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Kentucky to justify—and I make the observation in a very proper way—measures which place no limitation whatever upon appropriations?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the limitation is there; and, so that the Senator from Utah may understand it, I will say that the amount involved is big, but the claim is just, and has been approved by everyone, I believe, who has ever gone into the matter.

I have not the time to tell the Senate about the terrible fire that occurred in Minnesota. It destroyed several hundred lives, burned up cities, and burned over 1,500 square miles of territory, leaving the people homeless and in distress. It was impossible to secure relief through the courts. The courts were congested. The liability of the Government was determined in a suit which went to the supreme court of Minnesota. The fire was started by the railroads while they were under the control of the Government. It was impossible to secure any relief in the courts, as I say, by reason of the number of claims. The Railroad Administration fought every inch of the way, until at last it made a proposition that the actual amount of loss sustained by each claimant should be determined, and that was determined and supervised by the Railroad Administration.

After it had done that, the Railroad Administration said to each one of these claimants, "We will give you 40 or 50 percent of the amount you actually lost." It was determined by the court that the Railroad Administration was liable, and the claimants were informed that they could take that or they could take nothing. These Minnesotans did accept settlements and gave receipts under the conditions then existing, without home and without property. Since that was done they have been trying to get the balances that it has already been determined are due them.

This matter was submitted to the Comptroller General, and there is in the report a letter showing his suggestion. The bill refers the case to the Comptroller General to determine what is due under the settlements previously made.

It was submitted to the Attorney General of the United States, who recently sent a letter here in which he said that justice demanded that this matter be handled in the way we have attempted to handle it. Not only did that occur, but the President of the United States himself, whose letter is in the record, said that he had examined the report of the Attorney General on the bill, and that he concurred fully in the report.

The claim is just. The claimants have waited for 15 or 16 or 17 years, and it is time that the claim should be paid. I do not believe that anyone who would study the case would have any objection at all. But as my time has expired, I will merely say that I trust the bill will be passed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the aggregate amount that will be required?

Mr. LOGAN. I should say that it would run anywhere from seven to ten million dollars.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL ARMS & FUZE CO., INC.

The bill (S. 2809) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the International Arms & Fuze Co., Inc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

WEYMOUTH KIRKLAND AND ROBERT N. GOLDING

The bill (S. 2864) for the relief of Weymouth Kirkland and Robert N. Golding was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, to Weymouth Kirkland and Robert N. Golding the sum of $5,155.76 for legal services rendered to the Railroad Labor Board, under the direction and approval of the Department of Justice.

Mr. McKELLAR subsequently said: Mr. President, what was done with Calendar No. 502, Senate bill 2864?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill was passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, because I see that Comptroller General McCarl recommends the disallowance of the claim, and the bill certainly should not be passed under those circumstances without an explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote by which the bill was passed will be reconsidered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ESTATE OF VICTOR L. BERGER

The bill (H.R. 7229) for the relief of the estate of Victor L. Berger, deceased, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to the legal heirs of the estate of Victor L. Berger, deceased, the sum of $9,856.12, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, the same being the unpaid balance, and without interest, of the salary to which the said Victor L. Berger would have been entitled as a Member of Congress in the Sixty-sixth Congress, to which he had been regularly and duly elected but denied his seat therein because of his conviction for an alleged violation of the Espionage Act, which conviction was subsequently reversed by the United States Supreme Court, and the indictments nolle-prossed on January 23, 1923, in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

RICHARD J. ROONEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 60) for the relief of Richard J. Rooney, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out the words "$100 as compensation", and to insert in lieu thereof the words "$75, in full settlement of all claims against the Government", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Richard J. Rooney, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75, in full settlement of all claims against the Government for loss suffered by him by reason of a delay in delivery of registered letter numbered 44336 on the part of the United States Post Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD F. GRUVER

The bill (S. 336) for the relief of Edward F. Gruver was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized to adjust and settle the claim of the Edward F. Gruver Co. in an amount not to exceed $200 for leather labels furnished the Federal Radio Commission, notwithstanding any provision of law requiring such supplies to be obtained from the Government Printing Office.

ROBERT V. RENSCH

The bill (S. 2338) for the relief of Robert V. Rensch was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $136.50 to Robert V. Rensch, of St. Paul, Minn., to reimburse him for expenses in said sum incurred and paid by him as assistant United States attorney for the district of Minnesota, on behalf of the United States of America, with the approval of the Attorney General of the United States of America, in the trial of the case of United States of America v. Wilbur B. Foshay et al., in the city of Minneapolis, in said district, between August 31, 1931, and September 30, 1931, which said sum was duly paid to said Robert V. Rensch by the United States marshal for said district, and subsequently and on the 20th day of October 1933 refunded by said Robert V. Rensch, under protest, to said United States marshal, by reason of the fact that on the 3d day of March 1933 the Comptroller General of the United States of America refused to allow credit to the said United States marshal for vouchers covering said sum for said expense.

TRIFUNE KORAC

The bill (S. 2709) for the relief of Trifune Korac was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Trifune Korac, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000, representing the amount reimbursed by him to the American Employers Insurance Co. upon the forfeiture of two immigration bonds executed by said company upon security furnished by said Trifune Korac, conditioned upon the appearance before the immigration authorities of Klrsto Temelkovich and Kosta Simonovich, aliens, who, after the forfeiture of said bonds and the payment of the amount thereof by the bonding company, were apprehended through the efforts of said Trifune Korac and subsequently deported.

WILLIAM A. DELANEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1901) for the relief of William A. Delaney, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the sum "$133.53", to strike out the words "with interest at 6 percent per annum from May 15, 1919" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William A. Delaney, former captain, Medical Corps, United States Army, the sum of $133.53, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States arising out of a payment made by the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, to Daniel E. Anthony, a soldier who fraudulently represented himself to be a second lieutenant entitled to such payment, and for which payment the said William A. Delaney was held accountable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF MARTIN FLYNN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1998) for the relief of the estate of Martin Flynn, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the sum "$4,000", to strike out the words "with interest at the rate of — percent per annum", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Martin Flynn, deceased, of Des Moines, Iowa, the sum of $4,000, in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for expenses incurred by the estate in restoring to their original condition the fifth and sixth floors of the Flynn Building, Des Moines, Iowa, which were vacated on September 30, 1929, by the United States Veterans' Bureau, at the expiration of its lease.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this appears to be an unusual bill. I suggest that some Senator who is familiar with it should explain it.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, this is a bill for the relief of the estate of Martin Flynn. It calls for the payment of $4,000 in full satisfaction of a claim against the United States for expenses incurred in restoring to its original condition two floors of the Flynn Building in Des Moines, Iowa, which was used by the Veterans' Bureau.

Paragraph 8 of the original lease provided that if the lessor claimed restoration, he should file written demands for restoration 90 days before the termination of the lease. At the time Government occupancy terminated the original long-term lease had been modified by a clause giving the Government the privilege of renewal by successive 3-month periods. Having arrived at the end of the lease term, the Government took the building on a 3-month-term basis, so that it was not possible for the claimant to give the 3 months' notice of claim for restoration.

The claim was referred to the General Accounting Office, and denied, but the Veterans' Administration is of the opinion that the claim has merit, and recommended that the bill be amended so as to include only two items. It appears, however, that there was a third item which was contracted for at the time the other two items were contracted for; and if the two items are to be paid, the third one ought to be paid. So the committee felt that the claim was a just one, and that it should be allowed in full.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I note that the Veterans' Administration fixes the amount at $3,025, and would not include any interest.

Mr. GIBSON. It does not include any interest.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why increase the amount over what the Veterans' Administration recommended?

Mr. GIBSON. There was one item left out of consideration by the Veterans' Administration, namely, the expense of the replacement of lavatories. Bids were invited for that work and the amount of the bid for the restoration of the lavatories represents the difference between the amount the Veterans' Administration recommended and the amount the committee recommends.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think the recommendation of the Veterans' Administration ought to be followed. If the Senator is willing to have an amendment to that effect agreed to, I will not object to the consideration of the bill. I move that in line 6, page 1, of the bill, "$4,000" be stricken out and "$3,025" inserted.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] is greatly interested in this bill. He explained to me last evening that it was necessary for him to be absent today, so I suggest that the bill go over until he can be here.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that will be entirely satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY

The bill (H.R. 5884) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this is a long bill, and I do not think we should consider such a bill at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM M. STODDARD

The bill (H.R. 2743) for the relief of William M. Stoddard was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers William M. Stoddard, who was a member of Company D,

Second Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 25th day of February 1899: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

THOMAS J. GARDNER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 895) for the relief of Thomas J. Gardner, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, at the beginning of line 10, to strike out "no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act" and to insert in lieu thereof "no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Thomas J. Gardner shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company L, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, on the 1st day of May 1865: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARCHIBALD M'DONALD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 365), for the relief of Archibald MacDonald, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Archibald MacDonald, postmaster at Putnam, Conn., the sum of $143.86 to reimburse him for payment of loss of postal funds due to the failure of the First National Bank of Putnam.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELMER BLAIR

The bill (S. 791) for the relief of Elmer Blair was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill? If not, I shall ask that it go over.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, the soldier who is the claimant in this bill was a man of very ordinary intelligence, a raw recruit. He had a furlough to go home and visit his father.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought we had reached the next order on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, marines, their widows and dependent relatives, Elmer Blair, formerly private, Company B, Three Hundred and Thirtieth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private on March 13, 1918: Provided, That no back pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCES AGRAMONTE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2526) to pay an annuity to Frances Agramonte, the widow of Dr. Aristides Agramonte, member of the Yellow Fever Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill is to pay Mrs. Agramonte the annuity which was being paid to Dr. Agramonte when he died. The same annuity is paid to the widows of the other members of the Walter Reed Yellow Fever Commission. The bill would merely extend to Mrs. Agramonte the same treatment given the widows of the other members of the Yellow Fever Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts annually as may be necessary to pay, during the remainder of her natural life, the sum of $125 per month to Frances Agramonte, widow of Dr. Aristides Agramonte, deceased, who was a member of the Yellow Fever Commission, and whose name appears on the roll of honor of the participants in the yellow-fever investigations in Cuba, published annually in the Army Register, said annuity being the same heretofore paid to Dr. Aristides Agramonte pursuant to the provisions of the public act approved February 28, 1929, entitled "An act to recognize the high public service rendered by Maj. Walter Reed and those associated with him in the discovery of the cause and means of transmission of yellow fever."

RESEARCH STATION AT SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1665) to provide for the establishment and maintenance under the Bureau of Mines of a research station at Salt Lake City, Utah, which had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the words "Secretary of", to strike out the word "Commerce" and to insert the words "the Interior"; on page 2, line 7, after the words "Secretary of", to strike out the word "Commerce" and to insert the words "the Interior"; on page 2, line 14, after the words "Secretary of", to strike out the word "Commerce" and to insert the words "the Interior"; and on page 2, line 15, after the words "Secretary of", to strike out the word "Commerce" and to insert the words "the Interior", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to establish and maintain in Salt Lake City, Utah, under the Bureau of Mines, a research and experiment station, the province and duty of which shall be to make inquiries and investigations into the mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of ores and other mineral substances, including coal, oil, gas, and the hydrocarbons, and to disseminate information, with a view to improving conditions in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries, safeguarding life among employees, preventing unnecessary waste of resources, and otherwise contributing to the advancement of these industries.

SEC. 2. In order to carry out the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to transfer to the station at Salt Lake City such personnel and equipment of the Bureau of Mines and such funds already appropriated or hereinafter appropriated for the work of the Bureau of Mines as may be necessary for the carrying out of this act and for such other expenditures in connection with operation of the station as the Secretary of the Interior deems advisable.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to cooperate with the State of Utah in carrying out the provisions of this act and for such purpose to accept lands, buildings, or other contributions from such State.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OBADIAH SIMPSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1361) for the relief of Obadiah Simpson, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the word "regiment", to insert the words "on May 18, 1864", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Obadiah Simpson, late of Company F, Fourth Regiment Kentucky Mounted Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of said company and regiment on May 18, 1864: Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or other allowance shall be considered to have accrued by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES TULLEY HAZEL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 896) for the relief of James Tulley Hazel.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that bill. The Secretary of War recommends against its enactment.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, this bill presents a case which turns on a single day.

James Tulley Hazel, a captain in the Medical Corps, was brought into the service on a given day, September 3. His acceptance of his detail was received in Washington on September 4. He claims to have telegraphed his acceptance on September 3; and if what he says is true—and he has two affidavits to evidence that what he says is true—he would have served 90 days during the World War. He was relieved of duty on the eighty-ninth day, however, if his enlistment is considered as beginning on September 4.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I note the following in the letter of the Secretary of War dated April 5, 1933:

There are numerous cases in which former officers and enlisted men have claimed a longer period of service than that shown by the official records. I know of no peculiar merits in the case of Captain Hazel which should single him out for relief that is not extended to all others in the same category, and it is recommended that favorable action be not taken in this case.

Sincerely yours,

GEO. H. DERN, Secretary of War.

It seems to me that if that is true—and I have no reason to doubt the statement made by the Secretary of War in regard to his records—it would not be fair to others in a like situation to single Mr. Hazel out and give him consideration that is not given to the others.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I doubt very much whether one could find another case exactly like this. The case turns upon the decision of this question: When does a person's service start, at the time of his acceptance or at the time of the arrival of a message saying that he has accepted? In the civil law the question has not been decided. It seemed to the Committee on Military Affairs that a case of this type would seldom come up; and that if such a case did come up again, it should be decided upon its individual merits, as this case was decided.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it may be that this is a proper case, but I ask that the bill go over until we can examine it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2026) providing for payment of $50 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of Minnesota from the funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the words "payment of", to strike out "$50" and insert "$25", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to withdraw from the Treasury so much as may be necessary of the principal fund on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, under section 7 of the act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota", approved January 14, 1889, as amended, and to make therefrom payment of $25 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of Minnesota, under such regulations as such Secretary shall prescribe. No payment shall be made under this act until the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota shall, in such manner as such Secretary shall prescribe, have accepted such payments and ratified the provisions of this act. The money paid to the Indians under this act shall not be subject to any lien or claim of whatever nature against any of said Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for payment of $25 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of Minnesota from the funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2800) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ANN ENGLE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1526) for the relief of Ann Engle, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments on page 1, line 6, after "$1,500", to strike out "as compensation" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government"; and on page 1, line 9, after the date "1930", to insert:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Ann Engle, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for personal injuries caused as a result of an accident involving an Army vehicle near Garden City, Long Island, N.Y., on October 1, 1930: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2850) to amend section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ONE HUNDRETH ANNIVERSARY OF ADMISSION OF ARKANSAS

The bill (S. 2901) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Arkansas into the Union was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Arkansas into the Union there shall be coined at the mints of the United States 500,000 silver 50-cent pieces of such design as the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may select; but the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the models or master dies or other preparations for this coinage.

Sec. 2. All laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material, for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for security of the coin, or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage authorized by this act.

Sec. 3. The coins authorized by this act shall be issued only to the Arkansas Honorary Centennial Celebration Commission, or its duly authorized agent, in such numbers, and at such times as they shall be requested by such commission or any such agent, and upon payment to the United States of the face value of such coins.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3022) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend sections 3 and 4 of an act of Congress entitled 'An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska', approved June 26, 1906, as amended by the act of Congress approved June 6, 1924, and for other purposes", was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], who introduced and reported the bill, is not present.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SETH B. SIMMONS

The bill (H.R. 3072) for the relief of Seth B. Simmons was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Seth B. Simmons, who was a member of Company M, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 15th day of December 1908: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

ROBERT GRAY FRY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 101) for the relief of Robert Gray Fry, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Fry", to insert the word "deceased", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, benefits, and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers Robert Gray Fry, deceased, shall be held and considered as having been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on July 31, 1865, late of Company H, Twenty-eighth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Robert Gray Fry, deceased."

WALTER E. DANDY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 257) to authorize full settlement for professional services rendered to an officer of the United States Army, which has been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury"; and in lines 5 and 6, after the words "out of", to strike out "the appropriation 'medical and hospital department, 1928'", and insert "any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Dr. Walter E. Dandy the sum of $1,000 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated in full settlement for professional services rendered on November 26, 1928, to Maj. Frank V. Schneider, Infantry, United States Army, who was suffering from a rare and obscure disease contracted in the line of duty, the said services resulting in the cure and restoration to full duty of the said Maj. Frank V. Schneider.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas explain this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this officer underwent two or three operations by distinguished surgeons abroad for wounds received in line of duty in the World War, without favorable results. After periods of observation at Walter Reed Hospital the conclusion was reached that his was not a case for further surgical intervention. Assured by surgeons at Johns Hopkins that an operation they had devised would effect a cure, he obtained sick leave and took the suggested operation at Johns Hopkins, which resulted in recovery. This measure is to pay the bill for the last-named operation. Technically it cannot be paid out of War Department funds because he was operated on in a private hospital. This officer is now on active duty.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUMBERLAND RIVER BRIDGE, TENNESSEE

The bill (S. 2953) granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Carthage, Smith County, Tenn., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Cumberland River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Carthage, Smith County, Tenn., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

GOVERNMENT FOR AMERICAN SAMOA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1574) to provide a government for American Samoa.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland explain the difference between existing law and the proposed measure?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, similar bills have twice before passed the Senate. It will be recalled that some years ago a commission, of which the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] was a member, went to the Samoan Islands, and this bill is a result of that visit. The bill is designed to give to the Samoans, who number about 10,000 people, some measure of local self-government in the islands. That briefly is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the American Samoan Islands contain a population of about 10,000 people. Those islands have been governed for more than 30 years under a very peculiar form of government. A naval officer appointed by the President has almost unlimited authority. He virtually makes the laws, interprets them—or appoints officers who do interpret them—and administers and enforces them. This bill is designed to give to the American Samoans a civil form of government. It was very carefully worked out by a commission.

As stated by the Senator from Maryland, similar bills have twice passed the Senate but have failed of action in the body at the other end of the Capitol. That body has proposed a number of amendments, which have, however, never come to the Senate. When I say "that body", meaning the House of Representatives, I mean Members of the House of Representatives. I think the bill should be passed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

TITLE I—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This act may be cited as the "Samoa organic act." ISLANDS INCLUDED WITHIN AMERICAN SAMOA

SEC. 2. The islands acquired by the United States of America under the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to provide for accepting, ratifying, and confirming the cessions of certain islands of the Samoan group to the United States, and for other purposes", approved February 20, 1929, and the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution extending the sovereignty of the United States over Swains Island and making the island a part of American Samoa", approved March 4, 1925 (U.S.C., title 48, sec. 1431), shall be known as American Samoa.

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE GOVERNMENT

SEC. 3. The citizens of American Samoa shall constitute a body politic. A government is hereby established over American Samoa with its capital at Pagopago on the island of Tutuila. The government of American Samoa shall have the powers set forth in this act and shall have power to sue and be sued by such name. Such government shall not enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation. The government of American Samoa shall be under the supervision of such executive department of the Government of the United States as the President may direct.

UNITED STATES CITIZENSHIP

Sec. 4. (a) All persons of full or any part Samoan blood born in American Samoa after the effective date of this act are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States.

(b) All persons of full or any part Samoan blood who are inhabitants of American Samoa on the effective date of this act, and their children born subsequent thereto, are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States of America: Provided, That any such person who is a citizen, subject, or national of any foreign country and who remains in American Samoa may preserve such status upon filing with the Governor of American Samoa, within 1 year from the effective date of this act, a declaration of his decision to preserve such status.

(c) Any person of full or any part Samoan blood who (1) was an inhabitant of American Samoa before the effective date of this act, (2) was residing outside of American Samoa or was engaged in foreign travel on such date, and (3) is not a citizen, subject, or national of any foreign country, if he desires to be a citizen of the United States may, at any time within 2 years after such date, file with the Governor of American Samoa, or with the District Court of the United States for the District of Hawaii or any district court of the United States, a declaration to that effect on a form to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Naturalization. Such declaration shall set forth the status of such persons with respect to the qualifications required by this subsection, and shall be sworn to before an officer authorized by law to administer oaths. If the Governor or such court finds that such declaration satisfactorily establishes the qualifications required by this subsection, such person and his spouse, if of full or any part Samoan blood, and minor children shall be citizens of the United States, and the Governor or the clerk of such court, as the case may be, shall issue a certificate of citizenship to such person which shall contain the names of the spouse and the minor children of such person.

(d) Any person who has preserved his status as a citizen, subject, or national of a foreign country pursuant to the proviso in subsection (b) of this section, if he desires to become a citizen of the United States, shall file with the Governor of American Samoa or with the District Court of the United States for the District of Hawaii or any district court of the United States a declaration on a form to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Naturalization. Such declaration shall set forth facts showing that such person was qualified to have become a citizen under subsection (b) of this section and that he preserved his status as a citizen, subject, or national of a foreign country, and that he desires to renounce such preserved allegiance. Such declaration shall be sworn to before an officer authorized by law to administer oaths. If the Governor or such court finds that such declaration substantially establishes the qualifications required by this subsection, such person, upon taking the oath of allegiance to the United States, shall be a citizen of the United States, and the Governor or the clerk of such court, as the case may be, shall issue a certificate of citizenship to such person.

(e) Any person of full or any part Samoan blood who (1) is not a citizen of the United States, (2) has resided in American Samoa for a period of 1 year last preceding the filing of his declaration hereunder, and (3) marries an American citizen of full or any part Samoan blood, shall be deemed a citizen of the United States. Any such person may file with the Governor of American Samoa a declaration on a form to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Naturalization. Such declaration shall set forth the status of such person with respect to the qualifications required by this subsection and shall be sworn to before an officer authorized by law to administer oaths. If the Governor finds that such declaration substantially establishes the qualifications required by such person by this subsection, he shall, when such person has taken the oath of allegiance to the United States, issue a certificate of citizenship to such person.

AMERICAN SAMOAN CITIZENSHIP

Sec. 5. The people of American Samoa through the legislative authority of the government thereof shall determine from time to time the qualifications necessary for citizenship in American Samoa, but no person shall be qualified to become a citizen of American Samoa who is not a citizen of the United States and is not of full or any part Samoan blood.

APPLICATION OF THE LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES TO AMERICAN SAMOA

Sec. 6. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this act, all the laws of the United States, including laws carrying general appropriations, shall have the same force and effect within American Samoa as in the United States.

(b) The laws of the United States dealing with or covering the general subjects of public lands, immigration, naturalization, quarantine, internal revenue, tariff, and income tax shall not apply to American Samoa, unless specifically so made applicable by an act of Congress, except that the laws dealing with or covering the general subject of immigration shall apply to the travel of persons not citizens of the United States from American Samoa to the United States.

(c) The provisions of law of the United States of which sections 1453 to 1489, inclusive, of title 48 of the United States Code, as amended and supplemented, are prima facie evidence, shall not apply to American Samoa.

(d) The provisions of law of the United States restricting to vessels of the United States the transportation of passengers and merchandise directly or indirectly from any port of the United States to another port of the United States shall not be applicable to foreign vessels engaging in trade between the islands of American Samoa or between those islands and other ports under the jurisdiction of the United States.

LAWS OF AMERICAN SAMOA

Sec. 7. (a) The phrase "the laws of American Samoa", when used in this act without qualifying words, shall mean the laws of American Samoa in force on the effective date of this act.

(b) The laws of American Samoa, except as amended by this act, are hereby continued in force, subject to modification or repeal by the Congress of the United States or the Fono, and all laws of American Samoa inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

(c) Whenever occurring in the laws of American Samoa not repealed by this Act—

(1) The words "president of the high court" or "an American judge" or "American district judge" or "foreign associate judges" are hereby amended to read "chief justice";

(2) The words "foreign officials" are hereby amended to read "other officials";

(3) The words "secretary of native affairs" are hereby amended to read "attorney general";

(4) The words "island government of American Samoa" are hereby amended to read "government of American Samoa";

(5) The word "regulation" is hereby amended to read "law"; and

(6) The word "declaration" is hereby amended to read "section."

BILL OF RIGHTS

Sec. 8. (a) No law shall be enacted in American Samoa respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the government for a redress of grievances.

(b) The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated; and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the person or things to be seized.

(c) No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right to a speedy and public trial; to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist in American Samoa.

(d) The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion or imminent danger thereof, the public safety shall require it.

(e) No bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be passed.

(f) No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.

(g) Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

TITLE II—THE LEGISLATURE

SCOPE OF LEGISLATIVE POWER

SECTION 20. (a) The legislature of American Samoa shall consist of one body, which shall be organized and shall sit according to the laws of American Samoa in force on the effective date of this act and as amended or modified after such date. The legislature shall be styled the "Fono."

(b) The legislative power of American Samoa shall extend to all subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the provisions of this act and the laws of the United States applicable to American Samoa, but it shall not grant to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive privileges, immunity, or franchise without the approval of Congress; nor shall it grant private charters, but it may by general act permit persons to associate themselves together as bodies corporate for agricultural, maritime, educational, ecclesiastical, charitable, fraternal, and industrial pursuits, and for the establishment and conduct of cemeteries. No divorce shall be granted by the Fono, nor shall any divorce be granted by the courts of American Samoa unless the applicant therefor shall have resided in American Samoa for 1 year next preceding the application. No lottery or sale of lottery tickets shall be allowed.

ORGANIZATION AND MEMBERSHIP OF THE LEGISLATURE

Sec. 21. (a) The Fono shall be the judge of the selection and qualifications of its own members. It shall choose its own officers and determine its rules and procedure. The Governor may attend the meetings of the Fono and take part in the deliberations of that body in an advisory capacity. He may authorize the attendance of, and similar participation by, other officials of the Government of American Samoa. He may, in his discretion, preside over the meetings of the Fono.

(b) No idiot or insane person, no person who has been or may hereafter be expelled from the Fono for giving or receiving bribes or being accessory thereto, and no person who shall have been convicted of any criminal offense punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding 1 year, whether with or without fine, shall sit in the Fono or hold any office in, or under, or by authority of, the government unless the person so convicted shall have been pardoned and restored to his civil rights. No person shall sit in the Fono who is not a citizen of American Samoa and who has not resided in American Samoa for at least 5 years immediately preceding the sitting of the Fono in which he seeks to qualify as a member.

OATH OF OFFICE

Sec. 22. Every member of the Fono and all officers of the government of American Samoa shall take the following oath or affirmation:

"I solemnly swear (or affirm) in the presence of Almighty God that I will faithfully support the Constitution and laws of the United States and conscientiously and impartially discharge my duties as a member of the Fono or as an officer of the government of American Samoa (as the case may be)."

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS

Sec. 23. The members of the Fono shall receive no compensation for their services, but may be allowed mileage in such amount as the Fono may fix by law, not, however, in excess of 15 cents a mile each way going to and returning from each session of the Fono.

EXEMPTION FROM LIABILITY AND ARREST

Sec. 24. (a) No member of the Fono shall be held to answer before any tribunal other than the Fono itself for any speech or debate in the Fono except as provided in this section.

(b) The members of the Fono shall, in all cases except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the sessions of the Fono and in going to and returning from the same. Such privilege as to going and returning shall not cover a period of over 10 days each way.

DISTRICTS

Sec. 25. For the purpose of representation in the Fono, American Samoa is divided into the following districts:

The Eastern District of Tutuila;
The Western District of Tutuila; and
The District of Manua, including the islands of Ofu, Olosega, Tau, Rose Island, and Swains Island.

SESSIONS OF THE FONO

Sec. 26. The regular session of the annual Fono shall be held between the 1st and 15th days of November each year at Pago-pago unless that body shall by law select a different time or place. The Governor may convene the Fono in special session at such time and place as he may deem it necessary. All meetings of the Fono shall be open to the public.

SIGNING BILLS AND VETO BY GOVERNOR

Sec. 27. No bill passed by the Fono shall become law until signed by the Governor. Every bill which shall have passed the Fono shall be certified by the attorney general and shall thereupon be presented to the Governor. If the Governor approves it, he shall sign it and it shall become a law. If the Governor does not approve of such bill, he may return it, with his objections, to the Fono. He may veto any specific item or items in any bill which appropriates money for specific purposes, but shall veto other bills, if at all, only as a whole.

RIGHT OF PETITION

Sec. 28. The Fono shall have the unrestricted right to petition the President of the United States in any matter affecting the government or the welfare of the Samoan people. The Governor shall forward such petition without delay with such comment as he may consider appropriate.

APPROPRIATIONS

Sec. 29. (a) Appropriations, except as otherwise provided in this act, shall be made by the Fono.

(b) The Governor shall submit to the Fono estimates for appropriations for the succeeding fiscal year as fixed by the Fono. He may submit also such bills to the Fono as he shall consider to be in the people's interest. The Governor is empowered to suspend the expenditure of funds appropriated by the Fono whenever by reason of disaster or economic disturbance such action is necessary or desirable in the public interest.

(c) In the case of failure of the Fono to pass appropriation bills providing for payments of the necessary current expenses of government and meeting its legal obligations, and until the Fono shall have acted, the sums appropriated in the appropriation bills last enacted shall be deemed to have been reappropriated.

(d) All legislative and other appropriations made prior to the effective date of this act shall be available to the government of American Samoa.

TITLE III—THE EXECUTIVE

THE EXECUTIVE POWER

SECTION 30. (a) The executive authority of the government of American Samoa shall be vested in a Governor, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, and shall hold his office at the pleasure of the President and until his successor is appointed and qualified. The Governor may be an active, retired, or reserve officer of the Navy or Army or a person from civil life. The Governor shall be not less than 30 years of age and shall be a citizen of the United States.

(b) The Governor shall be commander in chief of the militia of American Samoa, and he may grant pardons and reprieves and remit fines and forfeitures for offenses against the laws of American Samoa, and reprieves for offenses against the laws of the United States until the decision of the President thereon is communicated to the Governor. He shall annually, and at such other times as may be required, make official report of the transactions of the government of American Samoa to the executive department of the Government of the United States designated by the President of the United States under section 3 of this act, and such annual report shall be transmitted by such department to Congress.

ENFORCEMENT OF LAW

Sec. 31. The Governor shall be responsible for the faithful execution within American Samoa of the laws of American Samoa and of such laws of the United States as have force and effect within American Samoa. Whenever it becomes necessary he may summon the posse comitatus or call out the militia to prevent or suppress lawless violence, invasion, insurrection, or rebellion in American Samoa; and he may, in case of rebellion or invasion, or imminent danger thereof, when the public safety requires it, call upon the commanders of the naval and military forces of the United States in American Samoa to suppress such rebellion or invasion, or suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, or place American Samoa, or any part thereof, under martial law until communication can be had with the President and his decision thereon be communicated to the Governor.

ATTORNEY GENERAL

Sec. 32. (a) There shall be an attorney general of American Samoa who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, and hold his office at the pleasure of the President and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified. The Attorney General may be an active, retired, or reserve officer of the Navy or Army, or a person from civil life.

(b) The attorney general shall have the nonjudicial power and duties now reposed in or required of the Attorney General of American Samoa. He shall record and preserve all the laws and proceedings of the Fono, and all acts and proceedings of the Governor, and shall promulgate proclamations of the Governor. He shall, within 30 days after the end of each session of the Fono, transmit through the Governor of American Samoa to the President of the United States, who in turn shall transmit the same to the Congress of the United States, copies of all laws enacted during the session, and copies of the journal of the session. He shall transmit to the President of the United States through the Governor of American Samoa, annually, copies of the reports of the departments of the government of American Samoa, and shall perform such other duties as are prescribed for him by this act, or as may be required of him by law. When requested by the Governor or the Fono, the attorney general shall render opinions upon questions of law.

(c) In case of the death, removal, resignation, or disability of the Governor, or his absence from American Samoa, the attorney general shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of Governor during such vacancy, disability, or absence. In case of the death, removal, resignation, disability, or absence of both the Governor and the attorney general the President may designate from time to time an officer of the government of American Samoa to act as Governor and the officer so designated shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of the Governor during such vacancy, disability, or absence.

THE TREASURER

Sec. 33. (a) There shall be a treasurer of American Samoa who shall be appointed by the head of the executive department of the Government of the United States having supervision of the government of American Samoa. The treasurer may be an active, retired, or reserve officer of the Navy or Army, or a person from civil life.

(b) The treasurer shall be custodian of all funds of the Government, and be held to a strict accountability for the same. He shall furnish a surety bond for the faithful performance of his duties in such sum as the Governor of American Samoa shall stipulate. The premium on such bond shall be paid from the funds of the government of American Samoa.

APPOINTMENT, REMOVAL, TENURE, AND SALARIES OF OFFICERS

Sec. 34. (a) The Governor shall, except as provided in this act, appoint all officers and boards of a public character that may be created by law. The manner of appointment and removal and the tenure of all other officers shall be as provided by law and the Governor may appoint or remove any officer whose appointment or removal is not otherwise provided for. All officers appointed under the provisions of this act shall be citizens of the United States. The salaries of all officers, except the salaries of officers whose payment is provided in section 51, and except the salaries of those officers provided for by the Federal Government, shall be paid from the funds of the government of American Samoa.

(b) All persons holding office in American Samoa at the time this act takes effect shall, except as otherwise provided in this act, continue to hold their respective offices until their successors are appointed and qualified. Nothing in this section shall be construed to conflict with authority and powers conferred by section 20 of this act.

TITLE IV—THE JUDICIARY THE COURTS

SECTION 40. The judicial authority of American Samoa shall be vested in one high court and in such inferior courts as may have been or hereafter may be established under the laws of American Samoa. The Governor shall not sit as a judge in any court.

HIGH COURT

SEC. 41. (a) The President shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint the chief justice of the high court, who shall hold his office for the term of 4 years unless sooner removed for cause by the President.

(b) The high court shall consist of the chief justice. The chief justice shall select from time to time two of the district judges to sit with him in a purely consultative capacity.

PROCEDURE

SEC. 42. (a) The chief justice shall prescribe the rules of procedure to be followed in the courts of American Samoa.

(b) No person shall sit as a judge in any case in which his relative by affinity or consanguinity within the third degree is interested either as a plaintiff or as a defendant, or in the issue of which such judge has directly or indirectly any pecuniary interest. The Fono may add other causes of disqualification to those herein enumerated. Unless otherwise provided by law, in case of the disqualification or absence of the Chief Justice in any cause pending before the court, the Governor shall designate a person to act as chief justice in the trial and determination of such cause.

(c) The style of all process in the courts of American Samoa shall hereafter run in the name of the government of American Samoa, and all prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the government of American Samoa.

APPEALS

SEC. 43. (a) The District Court of the United States for the District of Hawaii shall have jurisdiction to review by appeal and thereupon to confirm, modify, or reverse final decisions of the high court of American Samoa in all cases, civil or criminal, wherein any provision of this act or a statute or treaty of the United States, or any authority thereunder, is involved; in all other civil cases wherein the value in controversy, exclusive of interest and costs, exceeds $2,000; in all other criminal cases where the offense charged is punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding 1 year or by death; and in all habeas corpus proceedings. Such district court shall also have jurisdiction to review the interlocutory orders and decrees of the High Court in cases in which it has appellate jurisdiction, and also, whenever any record on appeal is manifestly incomplete or insufficient for a satisfactory understanding of the appeal, to inquire further into the matters in controversy.

(b) Such district court shall provide by its rules the mode of appeals, taking into consideration the informality of procedure in the courts of American Samoa. For the purposes of this section special terms of such district court shall be held in American Samoa at such times and in such places as the judges of such court may deem expedient. Incident to its appellate jurisdiction, such court may grant a change of venue to a district court of the United States within the State of California.

TITLE V—MISCELLANEOUS LAND

SECTION 50. (a) The Governor of American Samoa, with the approval of the Fono, may from time to time convey to the United States such lands, buildings, or interests in lands or other property owned by the Government of American Samoa, as he may deem necessary for the purposes of the United States. No such conveyance shall be made in violation of the provisions of subsection (c) of section 8 of this act. The President may from time to time reconvey to the Government of American Samoa such lands, buildings, or interests in lands, or other property owned by the United States, and within the territorial limits of American Samoa, as in his opinion are no longer needed for the purposes of the United States.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (a) of this section the public, communal, and family group lands of American Samoa shall not be sold, leased, or otherwise alienated. They shall be administered under such laws as the Fono shall enact.

(c) No person who is not a citizen of American Samoa shall acquire title to land or any leasehold interest therein by purchase or otherwise: Provided, That this prohibition shall not affect the vested rights of persons or organizations who or which own lands or hold leasehold interests therein on the effective date of this act; nor shall it apply to the conveyance or transfer, approved by the Governor, to a recognized religious, philanthropic, or educational society, of sufficient land for their necessary purposes: Provided further, That in case land or lands so conveyed or transferred under approval of the Governor cease to be used for religious, philanthropic, or educational purposes they shall revert to the original owner: And provided further, That either the Government of American Samoa or the Government of the United States may acquire by purchase or otherwise such land or lands as it may require for public purposes.

(d) All transfers of interests in land shall be passed upon by the attorney general, and if in violation of the provisions of this act shall be void.

SALARIES OF OFFICERS

SEC. 51. (a) The following officers shall receive the following annual salaries, to be paid by the United States: The Governor, $10,000; the attorney general, $6,000; the chief justice, $6,000; the treasurer, $6,000. If the Governor, attorney general, or the treasurer shall be an active, retired, or reserve officer of the Navy or Army, he shall be entitled to receive as salary under this act any difference there may be between his total pay and allowances as such officer and the salary attached to the office of Governor, attorney general, or treasurer, as the case may be.

(b) The Governor shall receive annually from the United States, in addition to his salary, the sum of $1,000, for stationery, postage, and other incidental and contingent expenses. The Governor is authorized to employ a private secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $2,400. There shall also be an official interpreter, who shall act in that capacity for all agencies of the government of American Samoa, as the Governor may direct, and who shall receive an annual salary of not to exceed $1,500.

(c) The attorney general is authorized to employ a private secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $2,400.

(d) The chief justice is authorized to employ a clerk, who shall also act as official court stenographer, at an annual salary of $2,400.

(e) All of such salaries shall be paid by the United States. Such officers and such employees shall be entitled to transportation at the expense of the United States for themselves, their immediate families, and their household effects from their homes in the United States to American Samoa upon their appointment, and from American Samoa to their homes upon completion of their duties: Provided, That such return transportation shall not be paid unless the officer or employee shall have served in American Samoa for a period of at least 2 years. Such officers and employees shall be entitled to 3 months' leave of absence not oftener than every other year. During such periods of leave of absence any such officer or employee shall be paid at the rate provided in this act, and shall be entitled to reimbursement for travel expenses not to exceed the sum of $500, to be paid by the United States. During such part of any leave of absence taken as is in excess of the periods fixed herein he shall not be entitled to any compensation as an official of the government of American Samoa. The period of leave of absence shall in every case be arranged by the Governor.

PUBLIC HEALTH

SEC. 52. Subject to the laws of American Samoa, the maintenance and operation of the public-health service of American Samoa shall be under the direction of the Governor, who shall establish quarantine stations at such places in American Samoa as he may deem necessary, and shall promulgate quarantine regulations for the protection of American Samoa against the importation of disease. The costs of all activities of the public-health service, sanitation, medical relief, and quarantine service of American Samoa shall be borne by the United States.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS

SEC. 53. (a) Imports from American Samoa into any State, Territory, or insular possession (except the Philippine Islands) of the United States, of any article not the growth, production, or manufacture of American Samoa or of the United States shall be subject to the same duties that are imposed on like articles when imported into the United States from any foreign country: Provided, That the duty paid upon importations into any State, Territory, or insular possession (except the Philippine Islands) of the United States of such articles shall not exceed the duty prescribed by law for importation of such articles into the United States less any duty which has been paid to the government of American Samoa upon importation into American Samoa.

(b) Articles which are the growth, production, or manufacture of American Samoa coming into any State, Territory, or insular possession (except the Philippine Islands) of the United States from American Samoa shall be entered at the several ports of entry free of duty.

TITLE TO LAND IN TERRITORIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1699) to prevent the loss of the title of the United States to lands in the Territories or Territorial possessions through adverse possession or prescription.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland if it can be contended validly that the statute of limitations runs against the sovereign.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, it is disputed in some quarters. Three departments of the Government—the Department of the Interior, the Department of the Navy, and the Department of War—have all expressed their approval of the bill. It is to keep down controversies and lawsuits and make it definitely of record that the Government is relinquishing its rights to these lands that this bill was introduced. Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is a rather novel doctrine that the Federal Government may lose title by adverse possession. What I am afraid of is that if we pass this bill, persons in other sections or other parts of the United States may set up claims and say that this law is a sort of recognition of the fact that anterior to this time adverse possession might cause the loss of title.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I say to the Senator from Utah that in many instances in continental United States the Government has proved that it does not lose title to the land by adverse possession; but in Puerto Rico, Alaska, and other places the question has not been decided, and the Department thinks it wise for the legislative branch of the Government to make this commitment that they do not intend to have the title of those lands even questioned. All three of the Departments I referred to have signified their approval of this bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter no prescription or statute of limitations shall run, or continue to run, against the title of the United States to lands in any Territory or possession or place or territory under the jurisdiction or control of the United States, including the Philippine Islands; and that no title to any such lands of the United States or any right therein shall be acquired by adverse possession or prescription, or otherwise than by conveyance from the United States.

BONDS OF JUNEAU, ALASKA

The bill (S. 2811) to authorize the incorporated city of Juneau, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $100,000 for municipal public works, including regrading and paving of streets and sidewalks, installation of sewer and water pipe, construction of bridges, construction of concrete bulkheads, and construction of refuse incinerator, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated city of Juneau, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to issue its general-obligation bonds in any sum not exceeding $100,000, to be used for the following purposes, namely: The sum of $51,400 for regrading and paving of streets and sidewalks, the sum of $2,750 for installation of sewer and water pipe, the sum of $5,000 for bridge construction and replacement, the sum of $12,850 for the construction of concrete bulkheads, the sum of $25,000 for construction of refuse incinerator, and the sum of $3,000 for engineering supervision and overhead on all of the above-mentioned works, the cost of the necessary materials, as well as of installation and construction, to be paid out of the sums above specified. All of said improvements are to be made in the said city of Juneau, Alaska, except said refuse incinerator, which may be placed without the corporate limits of said city.

SEC. 2. That before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said city of Juneau, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said city of Juneau whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said city for municipal taxation. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given by publication thereof in a newspaper printed and published and of general circulation of said city before the day fixed for such election. That the registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued only upon condition that not less than a majority of the votes cast at such election in said city shall be in favor of the issuance of said bonds.

SEC. 3. The said bonds, when issued, shall bear the written signature of the mayor and clerk of the city of Juneau, and shall have impressed thereon the official seal of said city at the time of their issuance. The bonds may be sold at either public or private sale, as the common council of Juneau shall direct. The bonds above mentioned, when authorized to be issued as herein provided, shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the common council of the said city of Juneau, Alaska, before the issuance of such bonds, and said interest shall not exceed the rate of 6 percent per annum, payable semiannually, and the bonds shall be sold at not less than par, plus accrued interest. Said bonds shall be in denominations of $1,000 each, or, if purchased by the United States through the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works or any other Department or agency of the United States Government, in such other denominations as shall be satisfactory to the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, or to such other agency of the United States as may have charge of the matter. The principal of said bonds shall be due within 25 years from the date thereof: Provided, That the common council of the said city of Juneau shall have the right to call and pay such bonds, or any portion thereof, at any time, at par, plus accrued interest; but if said city of Juneau shall exercise the option to pay such bonds before the date of their maturity, it shall pay first the bonds held by the Government of the United States or by any department or agency thereof, if any, the last maturities of said bonds to be paid first.

SEC. 4. The principal and interest of said bonds shall be payable in such funds as are, on the respective dates of payments of the principal of and interest on the bonds, legal tender for debts to the United States of America, at the office of the city treasurer of the city of Juneau, Alaska, or at such bank or banks, or at such place or places as may be designated by the common council of the city of Juneau, such place or places of payment to be designated in each of the several bonds issued.

SEC. 5. No part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose or purposes other than those specified in this act. Nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the issuance and sale of said bonds for any one or more of the purposes and in the respective amounts hereinbefore specified. Said bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the common council of the city of Juneau shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and directions of the said common council from time to time as the same may be required for the purposes hereinabove set forth.

SEC. 6. The city of Juneau is hereby authorized to accept hereunder such loan and grant as may be awarded to it by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works acting under and pursuant to title 2 of the National Industrial Recovery Act and any amendments, additions, and supplements thereto.

BONDS OF SKAGWAY, ALASKA

The bill (S. 2812) to authorize the incorporated city of Skagway, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000, to be used for the construction, reconstruction, replacing, and installation of a water-distribution system, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated city of Skagway, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to issue its general obligation bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000 to be used for the purpose of constructing, reconstructing, replacing, and installing a water-distribution system to replace the present system now owned by the city of Skagway.

SEC. 2. That before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said city of Skagway, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said city of Skagway whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said city for municipal taxation. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given by posting notices of the same in three conspicuous places within the corporate limits of the city of Skagway, Alaska, one of which shall be at the front door of the United States post office. That the registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued only upon condition that not less than a majority of the votes cast at such election in said city shall be in favor of the issuance of said bonds.

SEC. 3. The said bonds, when issued, shall bear the written signature of the mayor and clerk of the city of Skagway, and shall have impressed thereon the official seal of said city at the time of their issuance. The bonds may be sold at either public or private sale, as the common council of Skagway shall direct. The bonds above mentioned, when authorized to be issued as herein provided, shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the common council of the said city of Skagway, Alaska, before the issuance of such bonds, and said interest shall not exceed the rate of 6 percent per annum, payable semiannually, and the bonds shall be sold at not less than par, plus accrued interest. Said bonds shall be in denominations of $1,000 each, or, if purchased by the United States through the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works or any other department or agency of the United States Government, in such other denominations as shall be satisfactory to the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, or to such other agency of the United States as may have charge of the matter. The principal of said bonds shall be due within 25 years from the date thereof: Provided, That the common council of the said city of Skagway shall have the right to call and pay such bonds, or any portion thereof, at any time, at par, plus accrued interest; but if said city of Skagway shall exercise the option to pay said bonds before the date of their maturity, it shall pay first the bonds held by the Government of the United States or by any department or agency thereof, if any, the last maturities of said bonds to be paid first.

SEC. 4. The principal and interest of said bonds shall be payable in such funds as are, on the respective dates of payments of the principal of and interest on the bonds, legal tender for debts to the United States of America, at the office of the city treasurer of the city of Skagway, Alaska, or at such bank or banks, or at such place or places as may be designated by the Common Council of the City of Skagway, such place or places of payment to be designated in each of the several bonds issued.

SEC. 5. No part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purposes other than those specified in this act, and said bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the common council of the city of Skagway shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and directions of the said common council, from time to time, as the same may be required for the purposes hereinabove set forth.

Sec. 6. The city of Skagway is hereby authorized to accept hereunder such loan and grant as may be awarded to it by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works acting under and pursuant to title 2 of the National Industrial Recovery Act and any amendments, additions, and supplements thereto.

BONDS OF WRANGELL, ALASKA

The bill (S. 2813) to authorize the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $47,000 for municipal public works, including enlargement, extension, construction, and reconstruction of water-supply system; extension, construction, and reconstruction of retaining wall and filling, and paving streets and sidewalks; and extension, construction, and reconstruction of sewers in said town of Wrangell, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to issue its general-obligation bonds in any sum not exceeding $47,000, to be used for the following purposes, namely: The sum of $29,000 for enlargement, construction, and reconstruction of water-supply system; the sum of $12,000 for extension, construction, and reconstruction of concrete retaining wall and filling, and paving streets and sidewalks; and the sum of $6,000 for extension, construction, and reconstruction of sewers; all in the said town of Wrangell, Alaska.

Sec. 2. That before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said town of Wrangell, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said town of Wrangell whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said town for municipal taxation. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given by posting notices of the same in three conspicuous places within the corporate limits of the town of Wrangell, Alaska, one of which shall be at the front door of the United States post office. That the registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued only upon condition that not less than a majority of the votes cast at such election in said town shall be in favor of the issuance of said bonds.

Sec. 3. The bonds when issued, shall bear the written signature of the mayor and clerk of the town of Wrangell, and shall have impressed thereon the official seal of said town at the time of their issuance. The bonds may be sold at either public or private sale, as the common council of Wrangell shall direct. The bonds above mentioned, when authorized to be issued as herein provided, shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the common council of the said town of Wrangell, Alaska, before the issuance of said bonds, and said interest shall not exceed the rate of 6 percent per annum, payable semiannually, and the bonds shall be sold at not less than par, plus accrued interest. Said bonds shall be in denominations of $1,000 each, or, if purchased by the United States through the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, or any other department or agency of the United States Government, in such other denominations as shall be satisfactory to the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, or to such other agency of the United States as may have charge of the matter. The principal of said bonds shall be due within 25 years from the date thereof: Provided, That the common council of the said town of Wrangell shall have the right to call and pay such bonds, or any portion thereof, at any time, at par, plus accrued interest; but if said town of Wrangell shall exercise the option to pay said bonds before the date of their maturity, it shall pay first the bonds held by the Government of the United States or by any department or agency thereof, if any, the last maturities of said bonds to be paid first.

Sec. 4. The principal and interest of said bonds shall be payable in such funds as are, on the respective dates of payments of the principal of and interest on the bonds, legal tender for debts of the United States of America, at the office of the town treasurer of the town of Wrangell, Alaska, or at such bank or banks, or at such place or places, as may be designated by the common council of the town of Wrangell, such place or places of payment to be designated in each of the several bonds issued.

Sec. 5. No part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose or purposes other than those specified in this act. Nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the issuance and sale of said bonds for any one or more of the purposes and in the respective amounts hereinbefore specified. Said bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the Common Council of the Town of Wrangell shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and directions of the said common council from time to time as the same may be required for the purposes hereinabove set forth.

Sec. 6. The town of Wrangell is hereby authorized to accept hereunder such loan and grant as may be awarded to it by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works acting under and pursuant to title 2 of the National Industrial Recovery Act and any amendments, additions, and supplements thereto.

CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS BY THE UNITED STATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2647) prescribing the procedure and practice in condemnation proceedings brought by the United States of America, conferring plenary jurisdiction on the district courts of the United States to condemn and quiet title to land being acquired for public use, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 3, line 12, after the word "property", to insert "or any other relevant allegation or matter"; on page 3, line 15, after the word "thereto" to insert "and such exhibits or schedules shall be and are parts of the petition itself and the petition or the exhibits or schedules or other pleadings may be amended at any time before final judgment"; on page 6, line 13, after the word "any", to strike out "party" and insert "defendant or intervenor"; on page 6, line 15, after the word "within", to strike out "20 days from the time that the cause is at issue" and insert "which he is allowed to plead to the petition", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any agent, or the head of any department, or any other officer, who is authorized to procure real estate, including fixtures thereon, for the use of the United States of America shall request the Attorney General to do so, the Attorney General may cause to be instituted in the United States district court of the district wherein such property, or a part thereof, is situate, or in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the District Court for the Territory of Alaska, or the District Court for the Territory of Hawaii, if the property is situate, respectively, in the District of Columbia, the Territory of Alaska, or the Territory of Hawaii, a proceeding in condemnation and in the nature of a bill to quiet title to acquire such property, or such easement, or right, or title, or ownership therein as shall be desired; and in said proceeding the court shall have plenary jurisdiction, to the end that title to said property, or such easement, or right, or title, or ownership therein desired shall be vested in the United States of America, and divested out of all other persons, firms, or corporations: Provided, That any such proceeding instituted in the Territory of Alaska shall be instituted in the division of the court within which the property, or a part thereof, involved is situate.

Sec. 2. In all condemnation petitions filed hereunder, which need not be verified by affidavit, it shall be sufficient to allege—

- (a) The name of the petitioner.
- (b) A description of the property, to which there may be attached a map thereof.
- (c) The purpose for which the property is to be acquired.
- (d) The names of all the owners, if known, of the property sought to be condemned and their residences, if known, and giving the names of any of them under 21 years of age, or of unsound mind, or suffering under any other disability.
- (e) The petition may also allege that there are unborn persons who may have some inchoate title or interest in, or lien or encumbrance on or against the property; and such allegation may be made on information or belief.
- (f) A suitable prayer for the relief and for process.

Sec. 3. The list of owners, their conditions, ages, and addresses, and a description of the property, or any other relevant allegation or matter, may be set out in the body of the petition, or attached as exhibits or schedules thereto; and such exhibits or schedules shall be and are parts of the petition itself and the petition or the exhibits or schedules or other pleadings may be amended at any time before final judgment.

Sec. 4. Notice of such proceeding shall be given in the following manner:

(a) All persons, including minors, over 14 years of age, and the guardians of minors and all persons non compos mentis, having any interest in the property, residing within the jurisdiction of the court where the property sought to be condemned is situate, and whose residence is known, must be notified of the pendency of the proceeding by personal service on them of a citation by the United States marshal, or one of his deputies, or by a due admission of service by such persons, or by mailing a notice to him at his last known address.

(b) In addition to the notice provided in the preceding subsection, all minors, and all persons of unsound mind, shall have their interest represented and protected by a guardian ad litem, appointed by a judge of the court in which the petition is filed.

(c) All minors under the age of 14 years having a legal guardian must have notice served upon such guardian as provided in subsection (a) hereof. If such minors have no legal guardian, notice shall be served upon the person or persons having custody of the bodies of such minors.

(d) All nonresidents of the jurisdiction wherein the petition is filed, and all unknown parties, and all parties whose residences or post-office addresses are unknown, shall be notified of the pendency of the proceedings by publication, once a week for 3 successive weeks in some newspaper published in the county, parish, or district where the land is situate; and if no newspaper is published therein, then the same shall be published in an adjoining county, parish, or district, or in such other manner as the court may direct.

Sec. 5. The notice to be served personally, or by publication, shall be substantially in the following form:

In the United States District Court for the _____ District of _____:

Notice:

The United States of America has filed a petition in the above court to appropriate and acquire title to a certain tract of land in the city of _____, county of _____, State of _____, described as follows:

(Here describe the land)

"A", whose residence is unknown;

"B", who lives at _____, in the State of _____, and any and all other persons, firms, or corporations whomsoever or whatsoever, known or unknown, are hereby notified of the filing of such proceedings; and that the same will be heard before said court at the place of holding the same at _____ o'clock, _____ m., on the _____ day of _____, 19__.

Clerk of said Court.

Sec. 6. Each defendant shall have 10 days after the service of notice as aforesaid to plead to the petition.

After the cause is at issue, all other notices may be given by delivering copies of the papers to the attorneys of record, or by filing the same in the office of the clerk of the court where the proceeding is pending.

Sec. 7. If the issues are determined in favor of the petitioner, the court shall enter a decree condemning the property; vesting title in the United States of America, according to the prayer of the petition, quieting title to said property, and appointing commissioners to fix just compensation therefor: Provided, That no commissioners shall be appointed in any case where a jury trial has been allowed.

Sec. 8. The petitioner may file a written demand for a common-law jury trial with the petition, and any defendant or intervenor to the suit may file a written demand for a jury trial at any time within which he is allowed to plead to the petition. In such event the cause shall be tried as other jury cases. If no jury trial is demanded, the court shall appoint as commissioners three disinterested residents of the judicial district, the District of Columbia, the Territory of Hawaii, or the division of the District Court for the Territory of Alaska, as the case may be, where the property, or any part thereof, is situate, to view the property, hear testimony, and value the same, and award damages to the owner for the taking.

Sec. 9. The order appointing the commissioners may be in substantial compliance with the following form:

United States of America against A Certain Parcel of Land et al., defendants

In the United States District Court for the _____ District of _____ Notice to _____

You are hereby appointed and notified of your appointment as commissioners to fix the amount of damages to which the several defendants in the above-entitled cause are entitled for taking their property under the proceedings therein, and you must make the return of your award within 15 days from the time you are sworn in as such commissioners, in substantially the following form.

Judge of the District Court.

The commissioners must report in writing, which may be substantially in the following form:

The undersigned commissioners named in the foregoing order in the above-entitled cause to view the property described in the petition and exhibits attached, after being duly sworn, viewed the property and examined the witnesses under oath in regard to the matters under inquisition, and respectfully report our findings as follows:

(The report shall contain)

(a) The names of the owners of each parcel of property, describing it, the value of the land, the value of the improvements, if any, the value of fixtures, if any.

(b) A list of all of the liens of every kind and character against said property, including taxes and assessments; and the value placed upon each and every parcel, and each and every interest therein, and any other matters which may be submitted under the direction of the court, together with a brief statement of the manner in which they arrived at the amount of compensation awarded.

Sec. 10. The commissioners must be duly sworn, and must subscribe the oath, which shall be in substantially the following form:

We, and each of us, do solemnly swear that we will well and truly inquire into, and find and return a true award of damages and compensation to the property owners in a certain cause pending in said court, wherein the United States of America is petitioner and _____ are defendants, for the taking and appropriating the property described in the petition and in the foregoing commission appointing the undersigned as commissioners, according to the best of our ability.

Neither of us is in any way interested in said cause, nor are we, or any of us, of kin, nor related, to any of the parties to said cause by affinity or consanguinity.

The foregoing was subscribed and sworn to before me, the undersigned authority, by each and all of the above-named commissioners, on this, the ____ day of _____, 19__.

(Here give official title.)

Sec. 11. The above oath may be administered by, and sworn to before any judge of any court of record, or the clerk of any court of record, or notary public.

Sec. 12. There may be attached to the petition, and made a part thereof, a suitable and correct map of the land sought to be condemned, and the order of the court appointing the commissioners may have attached thereto a true copy of the petition and all exhibits or schedules exhibited.

Sec. 13. Where there are several parcels of land, regardless of whether they are owned by the same or different persons, jointly or separately, they may all be joined and condemned in one petition or proceeding, provided such parcels are contiguous, or provided they are being taken for one and the same project. Where lands sought to be acquired are contiguous and lie within the jurisdiction of two or more courts, the petition may be filed in either.

Sec. 14. It shall be the duty of the commissioners so appointed to examine into the value of the lands sought to be condemned, to conduct hearings and receive evidence, and generally to take such other and additional steps as may be proper for the determination of the value of the lands, as well as rights-of-way or other interests sought to be condemned, and for such purposes the commissioners are authorized to subpoena witnesses, administer oaths, and conduct hearings for the ascertainment of just compensation to be awarded for the appropriation of the property. The award must be filed with the clerk of the court in which such proceedings are pending within 15 days from the date of the taking of the oath, unless further time is granted by the court, and upon the filing of such award in court, the clerk shall give notice of such filing to all the parties to said proceeding in the manner and form directed by a judge of said court.

Sec. 15. At any time within 20 days from the date of the filing of the said award in court, any party may file exceptions thereto. Such exceptions shall be heard before the court, which shall review questions of law and fact and shall render a final decree fixing just compensation.

Sec. 16. At any time within 30 days from the filing of the decree of the court any party may appeal therefrom to the Circuit Court of Appeals or the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, as the case may be.

Sec. 17. The United States may appeal without giving bond; but any other party appealing shall give bond, with good and sufficient surety, to be approved by the court, conditioned to pay all costs taxed against appellant on such appeal.

Sec. 18. If no exceptions shall be filed within 20 days from the filing of report of commissioners with the clerk, the court shall cause to be entered a decree fixing the amount of damages or compensation to which each and every party is entitled. The United States may withdraw or dismiss its petition at any time before the vesting of title to the property in the United States of America.

Sec. 19. All judgments or decrees awarded for the appropriation of property by the United States of America shall bear 6 percent interest from the time that title vests in the United States, subject to abatement for use, income, rents, or profits derived therefrom subsequent to entry of judgment or award, or verdict.

Sec. 20. On the rendition of the final decree, the clerk shall make and certify, under the seal of the court, a copy or copies of such decree, which shall be recorded in the proper local recording office or offices.

Sec. 21. Whenever, in the judgment of the court, there are so many defendants as to make it too expensive and impracticable to have all of them summoned as parties, the court may enter an order directing that a certain number of each class of claimants or owners, if there are more than one class, be selected for service and notice; and shall order notice given to all others by publication, as hereinbefore set out.

Sec. 22. Any person not already a party to the suit, who claims any interest in the property, may intervene as a party defendant.

Sec. 23. The court shall have full power and authority to determine any and all adverse claims or title or interest in the property, and the priority of liens thereon, without the intervention of a jury, unless demanded.

Sec. 24. All condemnation suits shall be preferred cases having precedence over all others except criminal causes where the defendants are in jail.

Sec. 25. All laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That the act approved February 26, 1931, entitled "An act to expedite the construction of public buildings and works outside of the District of Columbia by enabling possession and title of sites to be taken in advance of final judgment in proceedings for the acquisition thereof under the power of eminent domain", shall not be deemed repealed by this act.

SEC. 26. Should any provision or part of this act be declared unconstitutional or invalid, such decision shall not affect any other portion or part thereof.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the calendar.

WILLIAM J. COCKE

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Calendar No. 466, being the bill (S. 2558) for the relief of William J. Cocke, which has been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2558) for the relief of William J. Cocke, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment on page 1, line 6, after the sum of "$9,116.88", to insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William J. Cocke, of North Carolina, the sum of $9,116.88 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for losses growing out of contracts with the War Department, one dated July 1, 1918, for the purchase of garbage from Camp Green, situate at or near the city of Charlotte, N.C.; and the other dated September 23, 1918, for Camp Wadsworth, situate at or near the city of Spartanburg, S.C.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PINKIE OSBORNE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate passed the bill (S. 2153) for the relief of Pinkie Osborne. The House has passed a similar bill, being House bill 3554, which has been messaged over to the Senate today. I ask unanimous consent that the House bill now be considered and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H.R. 3554) for the relief of Pinkie Osborne was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Pinkie Osborne, of Elizabethtown, Hardin County, Ky., the sum of $2,500 in full settlement of all claim against the United States for injuries arising out of a gunshot wound inflicted by the discharge of a machine gun at Elizabethtown on April 6, 1918: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act shall be paid or delivered or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent for a reconsideration of the vote by which Senate bill 2153 was passed, and that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. What is the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the Senate bill for which the House bill was substituted. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky, and it is so ordered.

INTERNATIONAL MANUFACTURERS' SALES CO. OF AMERICA, INC.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, when the calendar was under consideration on Thursday last, Order of Business No. 463, being Senate bill 411, is reported as having been objected to. I ask unanimous consent to recur to it, and that it may be considered at this time. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 411) for the relief of the International Manufacturers' Sales Co. of America, Inc., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 8, after the word "of", to strike out "$963,748.12" and insert "$658,050", and on page 2, line 15, after the name "United States", to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the International Manufacturers' Sales Co. of America, Inc., or its duly authorized representative on record, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $658,050 in full settlement for losses sustained by the said International Manufacturers' Sales Co. of America, Inc., during the years 1918 and 1919 while engaged, at the invitation of the United States Government, in furnishing articles of necessity to the Siberian population of Russia under and in pursuance to the plan formulated by the War Trade Board in the fall of the year 1918 for extending economic aid to the Siberian population of Russia, said losses having been incurred through the inability of the said International Manufacturers' Sales Co. of America, Inc., to exchange the Russian rubles received from the sale of said articles of prime necessity into American dollars because of the regulation issued by the Federal Reserve Board under date of February 14, 1919, under authority of the Executive order of January 26, 1918, prohibiting the exportation or importation of Russian rubles or the transfer of funds for their purchase by persons or dealers in the United States: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. RANDOLPH HOLLADAY

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, a few days ago, when the calendar was under consideration, order of business 402, being Senate bill 2719, for the relief of A. Randolph Holladay, was passed over on objection. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I will inquire of the Senator from Delaware if that is the measure which he explained to me, which provides for the return of taxes because of double payment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is.

Mr. KING. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Delaware?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2719) for the relief of A. Randolph Holladay was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to A. Randolph Holladay the sum of $11,172.15, with all interest due thereon, as a refund on income tax paid by A. Randolph Holladay, and which cannot be returned because of an agreement made between A. Randolph Holladay and the Treasury Department on form no. 866.

ELIGIBLE PAPER IN FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, during my absence, order of business 523, being Senate bill 2850, was reached.

I can understand how objection might naturally be made to it, inasmuch as no report accompanies the bill, but it is a very simple measure.

The facts are that under the law as it now stands section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act provides that any paper eligible for rediscount must be "indorsed and otherwise secured to the satisfaction of the Federal Reserve bank." The Federal Reserve Board and the Treasury Department have each recommended to us that that provision be changed so as to read "endorsed and/or otherwise secured." In other words, if the eligible paper is secured, it need not be endorsed, or, if it is endorsed by a member bank, it need not be otherwise secured. Both the Federal Reserve Board and the Treasury Department ask for this proposed legislation. The committee reported the bill unanimously, and I believe it is important. It is felt now that the banks ought to be relieved of endorsement where they furnish security; and if they do not furnish security they must endorse the eligible paper. I think the Senator from Delaware remembers our discussion of the measure?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do remember it.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a very simple measure. It has been, as I have said, recommended by both the Federal Reserve Board and by the Treasury. It will enable paper that is eligible for rediscount either to be secured or endorsed by a member bank, whereas now it must be both endorsed and secured. I ask unanimous consent to recur to that bill, and to have it considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2850) to amend section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the third paragraph of section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by changing the words "indorsed and otherwise secured to the satisfaction of the Federal Reserve bank" in that paragraph to read "endorsed and/or otherwise secured to the satisfaction of the Federal Reserve bank".

CANCELATION OF AIR-MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in order that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Couzens	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Cutting	Keyes	Russell
Bachman	Davis	King	Schall
Bailey	Dieterich	La Follette	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dill	Logan	Shipstead
Barbour	Duffy	Loneragan	Smith
Barkley	Erickson	McAdoo	Stetwer
Black	Fess	McCarran	Stephens
Bone	Fletcher	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Brown	George	McNary	Thompson
Bulkley	Gibson	Metcalf	Townsend
Bulow	Glass	Neely	Trammell
Byrd	Goldsborough	Norris	Tydings
Byrnes	Gore	Nye	Vandenberg

Caraway	Harrison	Overton	Wagner
Carey	Hastings	Patterson	Walcott
Clark	Hatch	Pope	Walsh
Connally	Hatfield	Reed	Wheeler
Coolidge	Hayden	Reynolds	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, on Thursday last, the 15th of March, in an address to the Senate on the subject of air-mail contracts, I made the following statement:

The Pittsburgh Aviation Industries, Inc., was a strong political factor in Pennsylvania, and the Mellons were prominent stockholders and officers in that company. This combination put in a bid of 97½ percent of the maximum rate allowed by law. The United Aviation Co. bid on the same line on a basis of 64 percent of the maximum rate.

Mr. Andrew W. Mellon, former Secretary of the Treasury, took exception to that statement. In a letter to me, dated March 16, 1934, he said:

In your speech in the Senate yesterday on the cancelation of air-mail contracts you refer to the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries, Inc., as a "strong political factor in Pennsylvania" and stated that "the Mellons were prominent stockholders and officers in that company."

Mr. Mellon also refers in the letter to a communication which he addressed on February 2 to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], and in his letter to me states:

Neither I nor any member of my family owned any shares of stock in this corporation (Pittsburgh Aviation Industries, Inc.), with the exception that my brother and my two nephews had each subscribed for quite inconsequential amounts of stock solely as a civic duty in furthering a local enterprise to establish air-mail service between Washington and Pittsburgh.

It seems proper that the entire letter should be incorporated in the RECORD at this point. I therefore send the letter from Mr. Mellon to the desk and ask that the Secretary read it and return it to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A. W. MELLON,
730 Fifteenth Street,
Washington, D.C., March 16, 1934.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In your speech in the Senate yesterday on the cancelation of air-mail contracts, you referred to the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries, Inc., as "a strong political factor in Pennsylvania" and stated that "the Mellons were prominent stockholders and officers in that company."

For your information, I enclose a copy of a letter which I wrote to Senator BLACK on February 2, protesting against references emanating from his committee to the effect that the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries was a "Mellon-controlled company", and asking that he bring to the attention of his committee the fact that neither I nor any members of my family owned any shares of stock of this corporation with the exception that my brother and my two nephews had each subscribed for quite inconsequential amounts of stock solely as a civic duty in furthering a local enterprise to establish air-mail service between Washington and Pittsburgh.

Notwithstanding this, a totally erroneous impression continues to be given, as in your speech, and as the facts have evidently not been brought to your attention, I am doing so now as I know you would wish to correct the impression given, I am sure, inadvertently in your speech yesterday.

Sincerely yours,

A. W. MELLON.

HON. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. In submitting Mr. Mellon's letter for the RECORD, I present the evidence which, in my judgment, conclusively establishes the accuracy of both of the statements of which Mr. Mellon complains.

It is clearly shown from the minute book of the executive committee of the corporation, from communications addressed by its officers to parties in interest, and from letters written by Mr. A. W. Mellon himself that the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation was a strong political factor in Pennsylvania. Its officers designedly collaborated for the purpose of influencing both State and National legislation, and in fact, boasted of their political power and influence. Moreover, some of the communications are couched in such language as to indicate that performance of "civic duties" was not the primary motive, but that control of aviation in Pennsylvania and procurement of a profitable part of a transcontinental air-mail contract were the undoubted objects to be accomplished through the instrumentality of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation.

So much for the present for the declaration that the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation was a strong political factor in Pennsylvania. I shall later submit from the record evidence supporting the declaration so conclusively that I do not think anyone can successfully contradict its reliability.

With reference to the second feature of Mr. Mellon's protest, namely, that the Mellons were prominent stockholders and officers in the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, the following facts clearly appear on the record:

First. That the executive committee which determined the policy of the corporation and directed its efforts to influence legislation and governmental administrative functions, both State and National, included Mr. Richard K. Mellon, one of the relatives referred to by Mr. A. W. Mellon in his letter and a business associate of the Mellon group.

Second. The board of directors of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation included the said Mr. Richard K. Mellon and Mr. W. L. Mellon, who was also president of the Gulf Oil Corporation. The latter, as will more clearly appear hereafter, actively interested himself in many of the affairs and proceedings of the corporation, while Mr. Richard K. Mellon sat in at the inner councils and is described in the communications mentioned as among those most vitally interested in the affairs of the corporation.

Third. The records of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation show that R. B. Mellon owned 1,000 shares; R. K. Mellon, 400; and W. L. Mellon, 1,000, making a total of 2,400, with a par value of $10 per share, representing a total stock in the aggregate amount of $24,000. It will be recalled that Mr. A. W. Mellon in his letter to me states:

Neither I nor any member of my family owned any shares in this corporation with the exception that my brother and two nephews had each subscribed for quite inconsequential amounts of stock as a civic duty in furthering a local enterprise—

And so forth.

I have not referred to the members of the board of directors of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, who are also officers of various Mellon corporations. The stockholdings here described are limited to the stocks which appear on the books as owned by the Mellons individually. The chairman of the board of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation is Mr. George S. Davison, who was president of the Gulf Refining Co.; Mr. W. L. Clause, who was the chairman of the board of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. and a member of the board of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation.

Mr. Frank A. Leovy, a director of the Gulf Oil Co., was also a director in the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation. Mr. H. D. Rust was another member of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation board, and he was president of Koppers Co.

The Aluminum Co. of America, with which the Mellons are prominently connected, subscribed for a thousand shares, as appears from the letter of the president of Aluminum Co., Mr. Hunt, addressed to Mr. Hann, president of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, December 28, 1928.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator have the capitalization or the total capital stock of the company?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No.

Mr. FESS. I have it somewhere.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator may supply it.

In that connection it appears that there is no stockholder who owns a larger amount of the stock of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation than Mr. R. K. Mellon or Mr. W. L. Mellon. The maximum amount of stock held by anyone in the company, according to the books, is 1,000 shares, and, as I remember, the par value of the shares is $10; so that it does not appear to be accurate to state that the subscriptions of the Mellons to stock were "inconsequential", since each of two of those subscriptions equals that of any other shareholder in the corporation.

I had referred to a letter from Mr. Hunt. I now read that letter, addressed to Mr. George R. Hann, president Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, dated December 28, 1928:

DEAR GEORGE: Your letter of December 27, 1928, has been received concerning the $10,000 subscription of the Aluminum Co. of America to the capital stock of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, and I confirm this to you.

Mr. C. Bedell Monro's letter as secretary, dated December 27, 1928, calling for payment of 10 percent of the amount of the subscription on or before January 15, 1929, will have attention and a check will be mailed in due time covering this $1,000.

If any of our people can be of assistance, please command us. We are very much interested in promoting aviation and the use of aluminum and its strong alloys in the aviation industry. Our people know many of the personnel connected with the industry and perhaps can be of some aid in this respect.

With best wishes for a prosperous New Year, I remain,

Very truly yours,

ROY C. HUNT, President.

I read now the letter of Mr. George R. Hann, president of Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, to which the letter last read is a reply:

DECEMBER 27, 1928.

Mr. ROY A. HUNT,

Henry W. Oliver Building, Pittsburgh, Pa.

DEAR MR. HUNT: Mr. R. K. Mellon has advised me of the subscription of $10,000 for the capital stock of this company, which you gave him. He also made clear to us your position, which we understand thoroughly.

He has also advised us of your assurances to him that we can count on the cooperation of you and your associates and we shall expect to take advantage of this offer. Right now we have a manufacturing project under consideration, which we feel will be of interest to you and your associates, and when we get the matter a little further along we may want to get the benefit of your advice and suggestion.

I enclose herewith a formal notice of first call (10 percent) which is going out to all subscribers.

Very truly yours,

GEORGE R. HANN, President.

While the record that I have quoted shows that the Aluminum Co. of America subscribed for $10,000 worth of the capital stock of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, and while these communications show a confirmation of the subscription, the stock-book lists do not, so far as my investigation discloses, show that the Aluminum Co. of America is a stockholder.

I read now from the minute book of the executive committee meeting of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation of January 9, 1929:

The committee, on suggestion by Mr. George R. Hann, agreed that the policy should be adopted by the company of forming proper contacts with the State and National Governments. In Washington the company could thus be helpful to the Post Office and to the Army and Navy authorities by supporting such legislation as would be beneficial to the air mail and to the future of aviation as a whole. In Harrisburg the company could do much to support State legislation for the general benefit of aviation.

In this connection attention is called to the circular issued by the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, showing its list of officers, its technical staff, its general counsel, its board of directors, the members of the executive committee being indicated by stars, including Mr. George S. Davison, Mr. Norman Allderice, Mr. Arthur E. Braun, Mr. George R. Hann, Mr. A. L. Humphrey, Mr. George T. Ladd, Mr. Richard K. Mellon, and Mr. Lloyd W. Smith. I submit the list for the RECORD, and ask that it be returned to me when printed.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"TO MAKE PITTSBURGH AN AVIATION CENTER"

Snowden, Jr., Secretary Reliance Steel Casting Co.; William Penn Snyder, Jr., president Shenango Furnace Co.; C. M. Yohe, vice president Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad (New York Central Lines).

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The president of the board of directors of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation reported on Wednesday, April 17, 1929:

Messrs. A. E. Braun, R. K. Mellon, W. L. Monroe, Lloyd W. Smith, George T. Ladd, and Norman Allderdice, with the chairman of the board and the president as members ex officio:

The officers of your company have established cordial relationship with Army and Navy officials in Washington and with the Post Office Department through Postmaster Brown and Second Assistant Postmaster Glover. Their contacts were made early after the organization of the company, and every effort has been made to arouse and maintain the interest of officials in Washington in our Pittsburgh situation.

I read next from the minutes of the twentieth meeting of the executive committee, May 23, 1930:

The president then reported that indications pointed to creation of a number of new air-mail lines through the country, including a midcontinent transcontinental line, and efforts were being made by Postmaster General Brown, under recent legislation of Congress, to establish this mileage by extension of existing contract routes rather than by advertising for public bids. The president further reported that every effort was being made to insure for the company the proper share in the pending developments.

The significance of that statement in the minutes of the meeting of the executive board, of which board Mr. R. K. Mellon was a member, is clear. At that time, months before the contracts were actually let, the executive committee of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation were working with the Postmaster General to obtain contracts in disregard of the provision of law which required that those contracts be let to the lowest bidder. It clearly establishes the contention that there was a fixed and deliberate purpose upon the part of the officers of this company, or at least on the part of its executive committee, to obtain, through the Postmaster General, a contract or contracts without regard to the requirements of the law relating to competitive bidding.

In further establishment of the strong political influence of this company, which Mr. Mellon controverts, I read an excerpt from a letter of Mr. George R. Hann, president of the company, to Mr. Daniel Scheaffer, of the Transcontinental Air Transport and of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., dated July 15, 1930:

I spent 2 hours yesterday with Mr. Humphrey, our executive chairman, and at least another hour with each Mr. Braun and Mr. Mellon. These are three of our most interested associates, all serving on the executive committee. I told you in New York that I did not think this deal, as proposed, would be acceptable to our people, and I find that I had not misapprehended the situation in the slightest. I feel quite certain that at our executive committee meeting tomorrow, the other members are going to take the same position as those to whom I have talked individually, yesterday and today.

Continuing:

We approve heartily of this proposal, and we like the idea of this partnership, as well as believing in the soundness of one major line as contrasted with several ownerships. We balk only upon the terms. If P.A.I.C.—

That is the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation—is not responsible for the airports in Pittsburgh, for the present construction of airways in Pennsylvania, for the Harrisburg airport, for the aviation legislation now on the statute books, as well as for Pennsylvania's handsome appropriation of $250,000 for aviation advancement—at least, we can claim to have done more than any other organization. T.A.T. and W.A.E. cannot, in our estimation, have the slightest claim to any credit. * * *

The Postmaster General is the final authority on this transaction and unless T.A.T. and W.A.E. are agreeable to more nearly meeting the ideas of this Pittsburgh group, it was agreed at our meeting this noon (Wednesday) that several of our executive committee would go to Washington and present our position to Mr. Brown and request his acting as arbitrator.

On the official stationery of the Secretary of the Treasury Mr. A. W. Mellon wrote a letter to A. L. Humphrey, chairman of the executive committee of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, as follows:

DECEMBER 4, 1930.

DEAR MR. HUMPHREY: I have your letter of December 2 with reference to the establishment of air-mail service between Pittsburgh and Washington. I referred your letter to the Postmaster General and also spoke to him about the matter at Cabinet this morning. He said that he was giving the question careful consideration but that, before any definite action is taken, he must await certain developments which are now under way.

With kind regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

A. W. MELLON.

The proof shows that Mr. Ball, who was being pressed, sold out under protest to the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, and thereafter the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, through a subsidiary, operated a line under air-mail contract from Pittsburgh to Washington.

The minutes of the second meeting of the executive committee, July 16, 1930, show that a new company was to be organized with a capital stock of $5,000,000, in which the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation was to have an interest from 5 to 10 percent, and that this new company would be granted an air-mail contract by the Post Office Department over the entire route—New York to San Francisco, 3,600 miles—the rate to be approximately $1 per mile; that operations would start in the early future with a daily mileage of approximately 7,200 miles. This meeting was held and these minutes of record entered approximately 40 days before any bids were opened. The implications from this fact are clear and conclusive.

The minutes of the executive committee, made on August 29, 1930, 4 days after the bids were opened, show among other things the following:

* Members executive committee.

† Officers and directors of all subsidiary companies except Pittsburgh Metal Airplane Co.

R. W. Robbins reported on the air-mail situation in Washington, stated that Western Air Express and Transcontinental Air Transportation, Inc., had bid 97½ percent of the maximum total allowed on the new mid-transcontinental lines, and that another company called the "United Aviation Corporation" had bid 64 percent of the maximum total allowance. In this connection, he stated, that due to irregularities in the bid of the United Aviation Corporation it was expected that Western Air Express and Transcontinental Air Transportation, Inc., would be awarded the contract.

These proceedings were had and minutes of the executive committee of Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation entered of record subsequent to the report of D. M. Sheaffer, chairman of the executive committee of Transcontinental Air Transportation under date of July 15, 1930, 40 days before the bids were opened, in which report Mr. Sheaffer said:

The Postmaster General having indicated that he could and would arrange so that an air-mail-contract award would be properly made to the central transcontinental, provided the two companies organized for the operation of the service, T.A.T. got together with the Western Air Express on a plan to form an operating company.

Thus it appears clearly from the records of the company itself that 40 days before the bids were opened the officers and agents of the company were assured that this contract would be let, as it was let, without regard to competitive bidding, and with little regard to the fact that a competitor had bid 64 percent of the maximum which could be allowed, whereas the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation bid 97½ percent.

Mr. President, I know it is true that subsequently Mr. MacCracken secured adoption of a rule under which it was held that the lower bidder was not eligible to bid, but I submit that this record warrants the conclusion that there was a deliberate purpose to evade the provisions of the law and to secure a very liberal, if not an extortionate, arrangement in the matter of the payment for transportation.

The plan referred to included the following:

That a third party, namely, the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, which organization had done a great deal of valuable work in developing a new air line across the State of Pennsylvania, should have an equitable interest.

As a matter of fact, the record shows that Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation had no line and had never operated a ship on any schedule.

The minutes of the second meeting of the executive committee, of which Mr. R. K. Mellon was a member, show that a policy for the corporation was adopted, which policy contemplated efforts to influence legislation both in Washington and in Harrisburg. The minutes of the meeting of April 17, 1929, show:

The officers of our company have established cordial relations with Army and Navy officials in Washington and with Post Office Department through Postmaster General Brown and Second Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Glover, for the purpose of arousing interest in the Pittsburgh situation.

Mr. President, attention now is called to a letter which, in my opinion, is very significant. Many of the expressions contained in this letter are, as any lawyer will say, and as almost any citizen will say, inconsistent with a policy of square dealing. It is written on the stationery of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, Henry W. Oliver Building, Pittsburgh, Atlantic 0816, dated May 2, 1931, and is as follows:

MR. D. M. SHEAFFER,

Broad Street Station, P.R.R., Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR DAN: I am sorry that the "breaks" have not come so that you and I could sit down sometime and have a little chat about T. & W. A. matters, but Dick tells me that he keeps you constantly advised of any matters relating to this Pennsylvania balliwick.

Dick has been hopping over to Harrisburg very frequently regarding aviation legislation, and my reports from him indicate pretty good progress. House bill 991 involving a $200,000 appropriation from the motor-gas fund has been meeting some opposition, and Dick is going to Harrisburg on Monday for a conference with General Martin. This has kindly been arranged for him by Mr. W. L. Mellon.

Now is the time to bring all possible influence to bear upon getting legislative matters passed. When this legislature goes out, it is going to be a long 2 years before we have another opportunity, and it is going to be pretty much our own fault if the laws governing our business and the appropriations fall short of our desires.

May I interrupt the reading of the letter to state that the declaration last read not only shows that the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, its agents and representatives, were designedly reaching out to influence and control legislation in Washington and in Harrisburg, but that they were boastful, saying that if the laws enacted and the appropriations authorized fell short of their desires, it would be their own fault. Yet, with all these facts in evidence, Mr. Mellon calls me down for the very modest statement that the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation was a strong political influence in Pennsylvania, when its officers and agents were boasting that they could control the legislature, and secure whatever appropriations they desired from it.

I resume now the reading of the letter:

I believe our present progress with the State legislature substantiates the position taken by Dick and me 5 or 6 months ago, when we strongly urged that T. & W. A. should work out its intrastate problems without antagonizing any of our Harrisburg friends.

One other matter I cannot refrain from calling to your attention, and that is, the operation in and out of Bettis Field. I believe that it is only a matter of time before T. & W. A. is going to have an accident as the result of using this inadequate field. I am quite certain that if you check up with your operating people, and particularly your pilots, you will find that I am stating the situation correctly.

I appreciate that the traffic department has its problems which must be considered. In my opinion, the matter of safety is first, last, and always the most vital factor. Every dollar of traffic obtained out of Pittsburgh during the next 5 years would not compensate for an accident at this time.

You will recall that I advised 4 or 5 months ago giving serious consideration to taking the Pittsburgh Airways group out of the picture. I appreciate that under all the circumstances it was a distasteful thing to contemplate. These boys are still on the job, and continue to constitute a threat. I believe their present program is to make a big splurge and try to either get in some more money or to persuade some other group to buy them out. As a nucleus the Pittsburgh Airways outfit might well be of value to some outsiders who are anxious to get into this air-transport game. It is my prophecy that, if no new money is available by next fall and that, if some other outfit has not taken over Pittsburgh Airways, the organization will find it difficult, if not impossible, to continue operations throughout next winter. The threatening situation, however, promises to continue for the next 4 or 5 months.

With all best wishes, very sincerely yours,

GEORGE E. HANN.

A most remarkable communication. Let me bring attention also to a very long letter addressed to Mr. Scheaffer, by Mr. Hann, under date of July 15, 1930. I shall not read the entire letter but will place the same in the RECORD, and will call especial attention to certain paragraphs.

First, there is the paragraph that I already quoted, namely:

I spent 2 hours yesterday with Mr. Humphrey, our executive chairman, and at least another hour with each Mr. Braun and Mr. Mellon. These are three of our most interested associates, all serving on the executive committee. I told you in New York that I did not think this deal as proposed would be acceptable to our people, and I find that I had not misapprehended the situation in the slightest. I feel quite certain that at our executive committee meeting tomorrow the other members are going to take the same position as those to whom I have talked individually yesterday and today.

And then omitting some paragraphs, I quote further:

The only reason that P.A.I.C.—

That is, the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries, Inc.—

has not been conducting scheduled transportation on these two lines during the past year was because the conditions were not such as to permit an air-mail contract, and as to passenger service, it has been our conviction that until the Harrisburg Airport was available and ground facilities installed throughout these two aerial highways, it was contrary to sound aviation progress to fly passengers over the Alleghenies with the existing lack of safety precautions.

Omitting a portion of the paragraph:

It is therefore, not from choice, but from necessity, that P.A.I.C. has not been engaged in scheduled service.

Another paragraph to which attention is asked:

We approve heartily of this proposal, and we like the idea of this partnership, as well as believing in the soundness of one major line as contrasted with several ownerships. We balk—only upon the terms. If P.A.I.C. is not responsible for the airports in Pittsburgh, for the present construction of airways in Pennsylvania, for the Harrisburg airport, for the aviation legislation now on the statute books, as well as for Pennsylvania's handsome appropriation of $250,000 for aviation advancement—at least, we can claim to have done more than any other organization. T.A.T. and W.A.E. cannot, in our estimation, have the slightest claim to any credit.

Omitting a further portion of the letter, I quote:

Therefore, is it not a fact that because of the Watres bill and because of the Post Office Department's determination upon one cross-country air line, as opposed to separate air-mail operators, over which developments neither T.A.T., W.A.E., or P.A.I.C. had any option, have served to place some additional value behind the otherwise sickly dollars which were valiantly struggling only 3 months ago to reduce tremendous losses on the two passenger services of these companies. Conversely, has not the Watres bill and the resultant developments served to depreciate the pioneering assets of the P.A.I.C., provided W.A.E. and T.A.T. are permitted to capitalize the results of our hard-earned accomplishments, with our only recompense being the questionable privilege of supplying the new company with cash and matching our new dollars against your equipment dollars, which latter have only been brought back to life because of the Government's stepping in with Federal aid?

One further paragraph:

The Postmaster General is the final authority on this transaction, and unless T.A.T. and W.A.E. are agreeable to more nearly meeting the ideas of this Pittsburgh group, it was agreed at our meeting this noon (Wednesday) that several of our executive committee would go to Washington and present our position to Mr. Brown and request his acting as arbitrator.

I ask unanimous consent to have the entire letter printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

[Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, controlling Penn School of Aviation, Pittsburgh Aerial Surveys, Pittsburgh-Butler Airport, Pittsburgh Aviation Management Corporation, Pittsburgh Aviation Securities Corporation, Pittsburgh Aircraft Agency Corporation, Pittsburgh Air Transport Corporation, Pittsburgh Metal Airplane Co., Pittsburgh River Airport]

PITTSBURGH, July 15, 1930.

Mr. DANIEL SCHEAFFER,

Transcontinental Air Transport,

Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR DAN: I found yesterday that practically all of our executive committee were out of town and several of them on their vacations. Two of the committee return to Pittsburgh tomorrow and we are having them all together at luncheon to submit the proposal which was discussed on Saturday in New York.

I spent 2 hours yesterday with Mr. Humphrey, our executive chairman, and at least another hour each with Mr. Braun and Mr. Mellon. These are three of our most interested associates, all serving on the executive committee. I told you in New York that I did not think this deal as proposed would be acceptable to our people, and I find that I had not misapprehended the situation in the slightest. I feel quite certain that at our executive committee meeting tomorrow the other members are going to take the same position as those to whom I have talked individually yesterday and today.

As we view it, the Watres bill was primarily for the purpose of readjusting air-mail contracts on an equitable basis. Some contractors were receiving $1 or more per mile and others below 25 cents. Of course, this was unjust and had resulted only from the wild hysteria during the days of aviation inflation. This readjustment was the principal object of the Watres bill. Because some of the air-mail contractors were also developing passenger operations within their particular territories or spheres of influence, and because of the Post Office Department appreciating the quandary of these unsubsidized passenger lines and the necessity of assisting this important form of transportation development, both from the economic and military standpoints, it was finally determined to include in this bill a provision for assisting these passenger operators. It should not be forgotten, however, that the fundamental purpose of the bill was not to salvage passenger operations but, rather, to utilize judiciously whatever additional post-office air-mail funds might be available after granting rates sufficient to cover operating expenses of the present mail contractors and after taking care of such few additional new air-mail lines or extensions as might seem economically sound.

We, here in Pittsburgh, started 2 years ago to correct certain deficiencies, both as regards our local community as well as the State of Pennsylvania. No one else had been the slightest bit interested until the Watres bill. We had put close to $1,000,000 in aviation in this section. We honestly feel that our company has contributed, in a large measure, to the greatly improved conditions in this section and it has been our expectation, that due to our earned position we could afford to underbid other companies, including, if you wish, T.A.T. and Western Air Express, when a New York to Pittsburgh or New York to Columbus mail contract was advertised. We felt the same way regarding the Pittsburgh to Washington contract.

The only reason that P.A.I.C. has not been conducting scheduled transportation on these two lines during the past year was because the conditions were not such as to permit an air-mail contract, and as to passenger service, it has been our conviction that until the Harrisburg Airport was available and ground facilities installed throughout these two aerial highways, it was contrary to sound aviation progress to fly passengers over the Alleghenies with the existing lack of safety precautions. I am sure that T.A.T. has felt the same way. That our attitude has been correct is clearly substantiated by the recently promulgated regulations of the Department of Commerce requiring a certificate for passenger operations; one of the requisites to obtaining such a certificate being that the operation must be carried on over an approved airway. It is, therefore, not from choice but from necessity that P.A.I.C. has not been engaged in scheduled service.

And so, upon analysis this Pittsburgh company has done the only constructive businesslike thing, to wit: Devoting its efforts to developing conditions within Pennsylvania which would eventually lead both to air-mail and passenger operation. In view of these conditions rapidly being developed—and I repeat, chiefly because of our efforts—this Pittsburgh company adopted a definite policy, which was to entrench itself in the strongest possible position with trained personnel, both office and field, to utilize these facilities. Until the Watres bill, we considered that our efforts had been wisely directed and that our policy was dictated by sound business judgment. We were asking no favors but only an opportunity to develop this Pennsylvania territory on the strict merits of our business ability and in opposition to any outsiders, and again this would include T.A.T. and W.A.E.

Now, through no fault or mistake of ours, the entire situation takes a change. Contrary to the previous developments of air mail, the Post Office Department has determined to coordinate this air-transportation business, mail, passenger, and express, at a time when it is possible to do so and not to permit another situation like the railroads to develop which has defied the best of minds as regards its unscrambling.

In our opinion—and I am expressing the sentiments of the several associates with whom I have talked—this new policy of the Post Office Department is not only sound to the nth degree but constitutes the most constructive step yet taken in aviation. Instead of a straw, it promises to be a life preserver. Under these new conditions, T.A.T. and Western Air Express (as regards passenger service) have received a merited reward for pioneering passenger operations on a major scale. On the other hand, however, P.A.I.C. has had its fond hopes blasted overnight, and in exchange for what we considered at least a 50-50 chance to control this Pennsylvania territory, it is suggested that we join forces with T.A.T. and W.A.E. in one mid-transcontinental line.

We approve heartily of this proposal and we like the idea of this partnership as well as believing in the soundness of one major line as contrasted with several ownerships. We balk only upon the terms. If P.A.I.C. is not responsible for the airports in Pittsburgh, for the present construction of airways in Pennsylvania, for the Harrisburg airport, for the aviation legislation now on the statute books as well as for Pennsylvania's handsome appropriation of $250,000 for aviation advancement—at least we can claim to have done more than any other organization. T.A.T. and W.A.E. cannot, in our estimation, have the slightest claim to any credit.

You may ask, "What has it cost you?" "Are we not contributing our intangible or organization expenses and our losses?" That is quite correct, but neither T.A.T. or W.A.E. are contributing their entire assets as is being proposed in our case. Both of these companies are putting in airport facilities, trimotored equipment, large powerful engines, radio, etc., at depreciated value. These assets were necessary to W.A.E. and to T.A.T. in order that these companies might develop the western and central territories over which they operated, and in regard to which they each claim preferential right. It is actually a fact that P.A.I.C. has needed its tangible assets, an airport, smaller airplanes, shop equipment, etc., to develop this eastern section of the proposed transcontinental line. Our contribution might just as well have been a few leased airport privileges had there been any airports available, and trimotored equipment, powerful engines, radio, etc., had circumstances in Pennsylvania not precluded the use of such assets in any economical manner. Therefore, is it not a fact that because of the Watres bill and because of the Post Office Department's determination upon one cross-country air line, as opposed to separate air-mail operators, over which developments neither T.A.T., W.A.E., or P.A.I.C. had any option, have served to place some additional value behind the otherwise sickly dollars which were valiantly struggling only 3 months ago to reduce tremendous losses on the two passenger services of these companies. Conversely, has not the Watres bill and the resultant developments served to depreciate the pioneering assets of P.A.I.C., provided W.A.E. and T.A.T. are permitted to capitalize the results of our hard-earned accomplishments, with our only recompense being the questionable privilege of supplying the new company with cash and matching our new dollars against your equipment dollars, which latter have only been brought back to life because of the Government's stepping in with Federal aid.

P.A.I.C. has devoted some $650,000 of tangible assets to develop this Pennsylvania territory. In addition, some $200,000 has gone into intangible efforts and losses. We are quite agreeable to throw our organization expenses and our pioneering losses into the pot with those of T.A.T. and W.A.E. We are strongly of the opinion, however, that an unbiased appraisal of the controversy between us will generally establish that our $650,000 of tangible assets were just as essential in developing this eastern section of the proposed line as were the $2,000,000 of flying equipment and other assets which are being contributed by each T.A.T. and W.A.E. It strikes us as eminently unfair if the Federal Government should step in and by its action make T.A.T.'s dollar assets and W.A.E.'s dollar assets worth appreciably more, and at the same time depreciate P.A.I.C.'s dollar assets, which is unquestionably the case if the present proposal is justified. This would clearly not be equity to P.A.I.C., in that all three sets of dollars were devoted exactly to the same purpose—except in different sections of the country—to wit, aviation advancement and development.

We feel that P.A.I.C. is actually entitled to more consideration from the Post Office Department than either T.A.T. or W.A.E. on the real merits of past history. Both of these latter companies went into the business of carrying passengers as a means of paying dividends to their stockholders. It was a chosen activity; and had competition between them not arisen, and had it been possible to charge the fares and get the pay loads originally contemplated, it would have become a profitable undertaking without Government assistance. Both T.A.T.'s air-rail-air line and W.A.E.'s Los Angeles-to-Kansas City line were inaugurated without any thought or anticipation of Government assistance. Furthermore, these two passenger services tapped considerable territory, or at least joined together major populated centers where air activities were already in progress and on the road to development. On the other hand, P.A.I.C. was organized very largely because of a civic movement in a territory which at the time was barren, to say the least. Our efforts have not been primarily directed toward money making, except insofar as our company might develop this barren section to the point where air-mail contracts would be awarded and, if we were the successful bidders, our profitable compensation received.

We are not overly impressed with the idea of matching our new dollars against a Los Angeles airport costing the new company more than a million dollars. Such an expensive terminal will constitute about 20 percent of the total assets. This new airport certainly is not justified for the sole operations of this transcontinental line and will not be for many years to come, and the question arises, from a purely earning standpoint, as to the better business policy of leasing the necessary facilities of this port.

Neither are we impressed with $883,000 of F-32s, F-10-As, Wasps and Hornets of W.A.E. and $1,510,000 of Fords and Wasps of T.A.T.-Maddux. Here is about $2,350,000 of large, multimotored passenger equipment, which does not harmonize with the idea of this transcontinental operation being primarily a mail service. T.A.T. and W.A.E. are in the passenger-carrying business and are set up with equipment and personnel for this purpose. Because of proposed Federal air mail, it is the apparent purpose on the part of both of these companies to transfer over any of these passenger-carrying planes to some form of mail service. This is certainly expediency, but is it economically justified? Although conceding that these multimotored planes may be useful to the post-office service in the general scheme of preempting a certain space for mail on scheduled passenger trips, at the same time the entire air-mail system developed over many years must be discarded if this new proposed company is not going to utilize the present type of mail ships for any operations. Or is it proposed that our new dollars should be utilized for the purchase of these single motored mail ships. It rather looks that way. Will these single motored mail ships flying at night with the greater mail loads at greater speeds and with more economy bring in the greater revenue to the proposed company, or will the combined mail and passenger ships, even with some preempted space revenue, constitute the company's greatest service to the Post Office Department?

Unless it is the intention of the Post Office Department to revamp the present mail system and to eliminate the use, as at present, of single motored mail ships and concentrate upon the development of combining loads of passengers and mail we are strongly of the belief that for a number of years the present single motor method will remain in vogue. This would mean that all of T.A.T.'s and W.A.E.'s $2,350,000 of multimotored equipment, or at least a goodly portion, would not produce as much mail revenue as would the single motor mail ships to be purchased with the dollars supplied by our Pittsburgh company. This in turn would simply mean that indirectly P.A.I.C. was joining with the Post Office Department in subsidizing the passenger operations of T.A.T. and W.A.E.

In the proposal to combine the efforts and assets of T.A.T., W.A.E., and P.A.I.C. on some basis equitable to each company in the working out of a midtranscontinental mail line, it is apparent that T.A.T. and W.A.E. have each questioned some of the assets of the other as not constituting a contribution to this New York to west-coast project. After several weeks of negotiations, T.A.T. and W.A.E., without in any way consulting P.A.I.C. during their discussions, have finally gotten together. These two companies both finding themselves in the passenger-carrying business, with approximately $2,500,000 of equipment suitable for this passenger type of operation and seeing only one way out, and only one way to turn losing passenger operations into revenue producing through a Government subsidy, both T.A.T. and W.A.E. have faced the inevitable, and each of these companies has conceded to wash out its mutually agreed upon noncontributing assets. It is quite a question as to whether or not some of this excessive multimotored equipment, which is in existence today only because of competition between the two companies over much of the same territory, should not likewise be wiped out on the ground of noncontributing to the proposed new company's operations. The present figures, subject to minor adjustments, would result in setting up a company of approximately $4,500,000 capital, which would have roughly the following assets:

Los Angeles Airport.....	$1, 100, 000
Multimotored passenger planes (figured approximately 40 in number).....	1, 450, 000
High-powered motors for these passenger planes (figured approximately 120 in number).....	950, 000
Airways, radio, operating equipment, ground facilities, etc.....	500, 000
Cash subscribed by T.A.T.....	150, 000
Cash subscribed by P.A.I.C.....	350, 000
Total.....	4, 500, 000

These figures are, of course, only tentative and yet they are the only ones presented to us for consideration. It is proposed that T.A.T. and W.A.E. each receive 46½ percent of the total stock and P.A.I.C. 7½ percent.

Despite the expressed desire of P.A.I.C. to sit in, at least as an observer, during the discussions between T.A.T. and W.A.E., in which we felt we were vitally interested, it was not apparently agreeable. We are now in the position of learning for the first time your mutual arrangements and P.A.I.C. is invited to the table, at the last moment, not as a minority partner, but more like a rank outsider, who W.A.E. and T.A.T. unfortunately regard as having a possible nuisance value. It is quite a step down for all of these men out here in Pittsburgh to suddenly realize that their financial backing and their efforts over 2 years of what they deemed most constructive work, has now apparently resulted only in their company having a nuisance value.

To get right down to the meat of this matter, P.A.I.C. very candidly states to W.A.E. and T.A.T. that just as these two companies take the position that our $650,000 of tangible assets are not deemed "earning assets" for the proposed transcontinental company, just so P.A.I.C. cannot agree that a $1,100,000 terminal in Los Angeles (the only airport to be owned on the entire line) and nearly $2,500,000 of purely passenger equipment are properly to be considered as "earning assets" for this proposed company. To the best of our knowledge, this new company is to conduct a mail-carrying operation and is not to have passenger service as the predominating factor. The Government is to pay us for carrying the mail, and certainly were we organizing this company de novo, we would not be permitted to utilize our total $2,500,000 for equipment in the purchase exclusively the big passenger planes.

We believe eventually that air transportation will develop to the point where passengers, mail, and express will be carried together, as on the railroads, on one large plane particularly designed and constructed for this combined service. We believe that these combination planes will depart on hourly schedule, day and night. We have the faith that this is to be the eventual solution of air transportation, but this is not in our judgment the picture of tomorrow, and a company being organized today to serve the best interests of the Post Office Department, which means the company's best interests, cannot possibly use economically the type and the excessive number of multimotored equipment with which it is proposed to start this company.

We believe that our $350,000 cash subscription will be utilized for the purchase of single-motored specially designed mail planes such as are today in use, and the equipping of these mail planes with radio, etc. This $350,000 will be approximately one seventh of the amount of equipment for which T.A.T. and W.A.E. are receiving capital stock. We contend that unless your $2,500,000 of multimotored passenger equipment can earn in mail operations, exclusive of passengers, seven times the amount which the $350,000 of mail equipment will earn, that our contribution in cash to the new company is entirely disproportionate, because after all is said and done, this transcontinental line is being set up by T.A.T., W.A.E., and P.A.I.C. only to take advantage of the Post Office Department's contribution by subsidizing to the advancement of air transportation.

The Postmaster General is the final authority on this transaction and unless T.A.T. and W.A.E. are agreeable to more nearly meeting the ideas of this Pittsburgh group, it was agreed at our meeting this noon (Wednesday) that several of our executive committee would go to Washington and present our position to Mr. Brown and request his acting as arbitrator. If our position is untenable or we are asking more than that to which we are justly entitled, we feel that in justice to ourselves and our stockholders that this information should come to us from headquarters in Washington. At our meeting today (Wednesday) we had not only a quorum of our executive committee, but also about 15 members of our board of directors, and several of our largest stockholders. I was instructed to advise both T.A.T. and W.A.E. that P.A.I.C. is going to insist, up to the court of last resort, upon a 10-percent interest in this company, 5 percent of which we will contribute in cash, but not to exceed $250,000 in the initial organization (on the basis of a $5,000,000 corporation being formed) and the remaining 5 percent to be in stock delivered to P.A.I.C. for our 2 years of pioneering effort and as some measure of compensation for these tangible and intangible assets upon which we place considerable value and without which we would not now be negotiating for a position in this new company. The only other alternative discussed at this meeting today was to trade out of the new company some of the $2,500,000 passenger equipment, which we consider very excessive for a mere transcontinental air-mail operation, as we understand such an operation to be. The Los Angeles airport situation is also a matter which we would expect to discuss with Mr. Brown if T.A.T. and W.A.E. continue to feel that none of our tangible or intangible assets or our efforts in pioneering this Pennsylvania section, and our rather sizable losses are not considered as any contribution to this air line, and to this air-mail contract, other than a privilege to purchase stock for cash.

Some of the other transportation stocks are today selling at low prices and in some cases, considerably below real value. As a purely business risk, our Pittsburgh funds might more advantageously be speculated in some of these stocks.

Personally, I shall be pleased for you and Harris to come out here on Friday and meet our executive committee and hear from them first-hand what I have endeavored to explain in this letter.

Very sincerely yours,

GEORGE R. HANN.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Some two or three of the paragraphs of this letter I have already submitted in part. Emphasis is given to them because of their significance and the peculiarity of some of the declarations which they contain.

I wish now to bring the attention of the Senate to a letter from Mr. George R. Hann, president of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation to Mr. Daniel Scheaffer, Transcontinental Air Transport, dated July 5, 1930. This was more than 40 days, or approximately 40 days, before the bids were opened. I quote:

Conditions have changed somewhat, which makes our partnership arrangement, as you say, probably unworkable. However, there appears to be another partnership transaction in the making, with regard to which I gathered from your conversation on Thursday, you were undertaking to act for and protect the interests of P.A.I.C. As I very forcefully told you and Mr. Cuthell in Washington one afternoon, this Pittsburgh company is not a stepchild, and we must insist upon working out our own problems, which means that in any final determination of this transcontinental line, T.A.T., Western Air Express, and ourselves have got to sit around the table and work it out.

We have been at work out here in Pittsburgh for 2 long years, doing a job which was either too difficult or not of sufficient interest for anybody else to tackle. The airport situation in Pittsburgh received its momentum from the work of our company and the backing of our business associates. It required over a year of hard work to bring about the splendid Harrisburg Airport, which is going to prove the key to crossing these Allegheny Mountains. It took us many months and continuous trips to Harrisburg and Washington to bring about the original survey of the New York-Columbus Airway. Very largely through Dick Robbins' efforts, we are responsible not only for the State of Pennsylvania appropriating $250,000 for aviation advancement within the State but also for the coordination of efforts between the State aeronautics commission and the Department of Commerce in the actual building, which is now going on, of the intermediate fields and other ground aids which constitute a real aerial highway between New York and Columbus.

You will readily appreciate that after working 2 years—days, nights, holidays, and Sundays—developing situations and facilities which would permit a transcontinental mail and passenger line through Harrisburg and Pittsburgh to St. Louis, we are not going to be content to sit back and accept whatever may be handed to us. The matter has been clearly presented on two occasions to our executive committee, and I am but voicing our unanimous opinion when I say that we consider that P.A.I.C. has preempted more than anyone else the territory between Columbus and New York, and we are going to make every effort to protect our interests in this territory. Also we have kept the Post Office Department advised of our work since the very beginning, looking to the very situation which now exists.

Furthermore, P.A.I.C. is not going to be penalized for having been keen enough and on the job to the extent of getting the State of Pennsylvania and the State Aeronautics Commission to pay out of public funds for building the aerial highway connecting New York with Columbus.

I suspend reading for a moment to point out the fact in reply to Mr. Mellon's letter expressing resentment at my statement that the P.A.I.C. was a strong political influence in Pennsylvania, that in this letter the head of the corporation boasted that it had secured public funds for the building of an aerial highway connecting New York with Columbus; that it had worked 2 years in the face of very great and almost insurmountable difficulties, and that it would not be content with accepting merely what was handed it. Does that look like it regarded itself as a strong political influence in Pennsylvania? Is there any valid ground for resenting the declaration that P.A.I.C. was a strong political influence in Pennsylvania?

I resume now the reading of the letter of the president of P.A.I.C. to Mr. Scheaffer:

You have no idea of the amount of work that has been involved in accomplishing this result. As far as T.A.T. is concerned, it stopped at Columbus and until very recently has had no interest east of that terminal. From Columbus to the West coast T.A.T., at its own cost, has put in a lot of expensive facilities, some of which will and others of which undoubtedly will not contribute to a businesslike operation of the midtranscontinental mail and passenger line. In the rearrangement of the initial conception of air-rail-air transcontinental service to a new program of all-air service, including air mail, we here in Pittsburgh do not feel, as one of the three parties in the new transcontinental company, we should be left out of the discussions and just how this re-vamping should occur, because the determination of the usable assets of Western Air Express, T.A.T., and P.A.I.C. must eventually determine the stock interests of these three companies.

I pause in the reading to give emphasis to the next sentence, the significance of which cannot fail to impress itself on anyone who hears it.

It must also be kept in mind that airports and other facilities constructed with public funds may very well have a comparable value to like facilities privately owned and developed.

There is an assertion, as I interpret it, that the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, having lobbied and worked through the legislation appropriating the funds referred to, was entitled to be reimbursed for the amount of the funds which the people of Pennsylvania had paid; and yet they tell us, and Mr. Mellon says, that it is wrong to say that the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation was a strong political influence, and it is wrong to imply that, as among the larger stockholders of this company, there was any other motive than that of performing "a civic duty." I am perfectly willing to leave the issue on this state of the record. Anyone who reads of the manipulations and the maneuverings and combinations, and of the pressure that was exerted by these representatives of the company, and boasted of, is at liberty to say, if he chooses to do so, that the inspiration was solely civic pride and civic duty, but under it, and through it, and as inspiring it, I read the motive, the design, to take advantage not only of competitors but of the Government itself. "A strong political influence in Pennsylvania!" I might have said "in Washington as well as in Harrisburg."

That it may not be said that this claim of the right to reimbursement on the part of a private corporation for a fund appropriated by the legislature at Harrisburg was a careless expression on the part of the writer, I quote further from his letter:

This letter is written after a discussion with members of my executive committee and is for the purpose of bringing to your attention the necessity of representatives of these three companies getting together and knowing where each company stands, and that the final agreement should be presented to Mr. Brown by all three representatives in a conference with him at the same time.

I suspend reading again for a brief comment: This letter shows that there was an organized effort upon the part of representatives of certain of these companies to disregard the law regulating the letting of air-mail contracts and to enter into a scramble among themselves for advantage, an advantage which proved expensive to the Government. Is there anyone who hears that evidence who is in doubt for a moment that before the contracts were let there was an arrangement that this territory should be parceled out, preempted, if you please, and that the contract should not be let in accordance with the law requiring it to be let to the lowest bidder? I resume the quotation:

The necessity of T.A.T. and Western Air Express getting together involved the territory from Columbus west and has nothing whatsoever to do with the section from Columbus to New York. When that latter section is brought into the picture, it immediately becomes necessary to bring P.A.I.C. into the conferences as a partner. It is unnecessary for us to get into another jam, but we, here in Pittsburgh, have too much at stake to permit this mid-transcontinental line to be finally set up without our actively participating.

Both Dick and I are holding ourselves in readiness for any conferences which you and Mr. Hanshue may desire to hold with us, and have so advised Mr. Hanshue.

Yours very truly,

(George R. Hann.)

GEORGE.

I read now from a report or statement signed by Mr. D. M. Scheaffer, chairman of the executive committee of T.A.T., under date of July 15, 1930, still a long time before—

Mr. BLACK. Forty days before.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Forty days, as suggested by the Senator from Alabama, before the contracts were let. Now listen to this:

The Postmaster General having indicated that he could and would arrange so that an air-mail contract award would be properly made to the Central Transcontinental providing the two companies organized for the operation of the service, T.A.T. got together with the Western Air Express on a plan to form an operating company on the following basis, namely:

That our physical property on the line or route should be put into a new company at its depreciated value, and any difference in these property accounts should be made up by dollars on the basis of both companies having a like interest in the new transcontinental company; that a third party, namely, the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, which organization had done a great deal of valuable work in developing a new air line across the State of Pennsylvania, should have an equitable interest.

Now I read an excerpt from the minutes of the twenty-second meeting of the executive committee held on July 16, 1930. May I point out the fact, Mr. President, that the executive committee was very busy. It held, according to the notes I have here, something more than 26 meetings during the period when arrangements were being made to secure these contracts. I quote:

JULY 16, 1930.

The president then outlined the proposition as follows:

That a new company, with approximately $5,000,000 in cash and physical assets, was to be formed for the carrying of mail, express, and passengers over the proposed New York-Pittsburgh-Los Angeles air line by Western Air Express, Inc., Transcontinental Air Transport, Inc., and Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, P.A.I.C. to have an interest of from 5 to 10 percent or the amount equivalent to the distance from New York to Columbus.

Pausing for a moment to comment, P.A.I.C. won its contention. It claimed that it was entitled to have parceled out to it the distance between New York and Columbus, and that was taken into consideration in working out the arrangement of the alleged partners. I continue the quotation—

That this new company would be granted an air-mail contract by the Post Office Department of the entire route of 3,600 miles, the rate to be approximately $1 per mile; that operations would start in the early fall, with a daily mileage of approximately 7,200.

I ask now—and I want someone who knows to answer—how did this executive committee, how did Mr. Scheaffer, the chairman of the executive committee of T.A.T., Inc., know 40 days before the bids for the contract were to be opened that the Post Office Department would grant a contract to this new company at approximately $1 a mile and that the daily mileage would be approximately 7,200 miles? Such a statement made by an intelligent business man is inconsistent with any other theory than that the arrangement had been worked out with the Postmaster General. They knew that he would go through with the deal which they were seeking to arrange. If any Senator has another theory in explanation of how the head of this corporation was able to advise his executive committee and others that a contract would be made to that particular company at a certain price without regard to other bidders, I should like to have him rise now and give his answer. No one answers. No one can answer.

I read now from the minutes of the twenty-fifth meeting of the executive committee, August 29, 1930:

Upon motion duly made and seconded, it was unanimously Resolved, That the agreement signed by the President with Western Air Express & Transcontinental Air Transport, Inc., calling for a 5-percent interest ($250,000) in the new corporation to be capitalized at $5,000,000, and to be organized for the purpose of carrying mail, express, and passengers from New York to Los Angeles and San Francisco via Pittsburgh and other intermediate points in exchange for a half interest in the Pittsburgh-Butler Airport, be approved.

R. W. Robbins then reported on the air-mail situation in Washington, stating that Western Air Express & Transcontinental Air Transport, Inc., had bid 97½ percent of the maximum total allowed on the new mid-transcontinental lines and that another company, called the United Aviation Corporation, had bid 64 percent of the maximum total allowed. In this connection he stated that, due to irregularities in the bid of the United Aviation Corporation, it was expected that Western Air Express & Transcontinental Air Transport, Inc., would be awarded the contract.

I do not digress to comment at length on that statement, and yet it is said there was no political influence, yet it is said by Mr. Mellon that the subscriptions to the stock in that corporation to the amount of $24,000 by members of his family were made merely in the performance of a civic duty and were inconsequential.

Mr. President, this record shows clearly and conclusively that there was a combination among the agents and representatives of these certain companies, including the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, for the express purpose of securing mail contracts in disregard of the provision of law which requires their letter to be to the lowest bidder. It shows that they quarreled among themselves as to what their respective rights were. They parceled out the territory of the lines running from one coastline on the continent to a remote coastline on the other side of the continent. They finally reached an agreement, long before the contracts were let, that they would divide up the territory and give each other mutual arrangements and benefits, in violation of the law, in violation of the practices of common honesty.

The record shows beyond a shadow of doubt that masterful forces were organized in Pittsburgh, Pa., and members of the Cabinet gave their services to a combination which was unlawful, to a collusion which was fraudulent. Tell me that the Postmaster General had any right to assure these people that they should have a contract at approximately $1, or 97½ percent of the maximum total allowable, that they and no others should have the contract, and I tell you then that your conception of law and righteousness and fair dealing is so different from mine that I cannot argue the matter any further.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

During the delivery of the speech of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3055) to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

TEMPORARY RELIEF OF WATER USERS ON IRRIGATION PROJECTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2534) to further extend the operation of the act entitled "An act for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law", approved April 1, 1932, which was, on page 2, line 2, to strike out all after the date "1934." down to and including "1934" in line 8, and to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is further authorized, upon the acceptance by the Uncompahgre Valley Water Users Association of the Moratorium Act of April 1, 1932, and its amendments, including this act, to enter into a contract with the association deferring the initiation of its drainage construction program until January 1, 1936, and permitting the completion of said drainage program during the years 1936 to 1941, both inclusive, under the conditions set out in the act of January 31, 1931 (47 Stat. 1947), as herein modified.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CANCELANON OF AIR-MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I shall go no further in the discussion today than to deal with what the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has read at his desk, similar to the performance last Thursday, in presenting the best defense of the action in canceling the air-mail contracts that the Post Office Department can send here.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That statement is without any authority either in fact or reason.

Mr. FESS. Then, I withdraw it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Post Office Department has not communicated with me. I asked the clerk of the Black investigating committee to supply me with certain documents which I was informed were in the files of the committee. They were supplied to me and I have read them. If the Senator thinks he is going to make progress by that kind of insinuation, I tell him now that, in my judgment, he is very seriously mistaken.

Mr. FESS. Very well. We will proceed in our own way in this discussion. I shall not ask the approval of the Senator from Arkansas as to how I shall proceed. I propose to present the testimony and take my own time to do it so that the country may understand the purpose of this effort. I propose, also, to submit the testimony in refutation of all the allegations which have been made against the legality of the contracts.

As to the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, I have never made any very careful examination of the personnel of the officers or board or the efforts they have put forth to facilitate the Air Mail Service from the center of Pittsburgh. It is obvious that any plan to build an airport in such a difficult terrain as that surrounding Pittsburgh would require an enormous amount of money, first because of the congested condition of the population in that center. While Pittsburgh proper has a population of only a little over 500,000, greater Pittsburgh, including the entire district, will run considerably over 1,500,000 in population. Anyone who is acquainted with the physical contour of the area surrounding Pittsburgh in which this vast population is congregated will understand the great difficulty in finding in that hilly locality a convenient, level place adapted to meet the requirements of the people of that State, and at the same time, under the regulations of the Department of Commerce, affording a sufficiently large field to answer the purposes of an airport.

When it came to furnishing the equipment, it was evident that money would have to be provided. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a list of the directors of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation. It has on it 41 names. These names read like the Blue Book. The list represents the brains and financial ability of that section. On this list are the names of the men of greatest influence—financially, politically, and socially—in that great center. It was essential for them to be there. There was one man who was prominently identified with an effort to establish an air passenger service and to get a mail contract for a route having access to Pittsburgh, but he alone could not possibly give the service. In the first place, he could not secure the physical equipment. It was humanly impossible for him to do it, and he could not induce these influential men to back him up with sufficient financial resources to enable him to carry on the work successfully; and yet the community interest of that great center was sufficient to enlist the financial assistance of this group of men.

On this list are the names of some of the Mellons. There is W. L. Mellon. There is Richard K. Mellon. The secretary of this corporation was before the Post Office Committee this forenoon, and he gave some information which the Senator from Arkansas ought to have, and which he will get by tomorrow. That information is that of the 26,000 shares issued by this corporation, 2,400 are owned by the Mellons mentioned, and one of the Mellons resigned from the directorate before a contract was secured. If, in a group of men such as is here represented, a Mellon owning 5 percent of the shares would be regarded as having a controlling interest in the corporation, then I do not know what "controlling interest" means. I am amazed that those who have been assailing the Mellons on the ground that they want to control do not realize that when the Mellons want to control they do not limit themselves to 5 percent of a corporation's stock. They do not deal in that sort of thing if they desire control.

All the Mellons combined owned less than 2,500 shares in a corporation that issued 26,000 shares for the purpose of building an airport costing somewhere between three and five million dollars in a city of a million and a half people; and yet because these public-spirited men, responding to the local pride of that city, attempted to give it air facilities, they are impugned and assailed on the ground of sordid and corrupt purposes.

I cannot conceive of a great enterprise of any general value to the people of Pittsburgh that would not include the name of one or more of the Mellons, and yet it seems to be assumed in some quarters that their interest means something corrupt. To me it is pitiable to see how far men will go to impugn the motives of others who may differ from them on questions of public policy.

Now, we are told by the Senator from Arkansas that there was a corrupt deal in that the lowest bidder was discriminated against and did not get the contract, and the law was violated.

In the first place, the law did not require competitive bidding. There were competitive bids, but there did not have to be competitive bids. All the transcontinental routes for which contracts were made were let by competitive bids, including this one. Now the charge is made that the requirement for competitive bids was violated because the contract did not go to the lowest bidder, meaning that the lowest bidder was the Avigation Co.

Mr. President, Mr. CLYDE KELLY, the distinguished Representative in Congress from Pittsburgh, having, I think, without interruption served his district since 1913, came here originally as a Progressive Republican, and maintains his progressiveness down to this day. He was strongly opposed to the views of Postmaster General Brown, who told him that where there was only one line competitive bidding was merely a myth. Mr. KELLY did not agree with Mr. Brown on that particular question. There were a number of points of difference between Mr. Brown and Mr. Kelly. I mention that to indicate the kind of witness Mr. KELLY would make. He has discussed this particular Avigation Co. bid, and he did it only last month. Let me read what Mr. KELLY said on February 24 on the identical item to which attention is called by the Senator from Arkansas, the Avigation Co. bid that was not accepted.

Mr. KELLY says:

This ruling—

Meaning the Postmaster General's ruling—was accepted by everybody concerned. The United already had a contract for the northern transcontinental from New York to San Francisco. The midtranscontinental and the southern transcontinental were advertised for bids. The route from New York to Los Angeles was awarded to the Transcontinental & Western Air, and the route between Atlanta and Los Angeles was awarded to American Airways. Neither was an extension.

Now, the letter of Postmaster General Farley, which contains his basis for cancellation, raises another charge against the Transcontinental & Western Air, from the directly opposite point contained in his first charge. He states that this route was advertised for bids, but that T.W.A. was the highest bidder. Then he quotes the amount that would have been saved during the entire period if the low bid had been accepted.

Mr. KELLY proceeds:

I knew something of that procedure while it was happening. The route was advertised, and there were two bids. United Avigation and T.W.A.

United Avigation is the one to which the Senator referred.

United Avigation was the lowest bid, and I was interested in seeing that there be fair competition with success to the lowest responsible bidder as required by the law.

This is Mr. KELLY speaking:

These two bids were placed before the Comptroller General, and he made an exhaustive investigation. In all my experience with this officer he has fought firmly and against every pressure for the principle that the lowest bidder, who is responsible for carrying out the contract, shall be given the contract.

And I can testify to that characteristic of General McCarl.

However, after his thorough examination of all the facts he ruled that the T.W.A. was the lowest responsible bidder. He felt that it was his duty to make such a ruling, and it was made a part of the public record. Even then I suggested to United Aviation that they attempt to prove their responsibility in court, but this was not done. Under all the facts no blame can be attached to T.W.A. for this particular procedure.

So much for the indictment that the Aviation Co., the assumed lowest bidder, had not gotten a contract, and that it had been given to T.W.A., which was not in pursuance either of law or of justice, as was said by the Senator from Arkansas. The highest authority we have on the question of whether a payment can be made in accordance with law approves what was done, and states that it was in accordance with law. That ought to be sufficient, without anything further being said, as to the legality of the rejection of the aviation bids.

Mr. President, we are told by the Senator that Mr. Ball did not have his rights respected, and that he had the pioneer rights in Pittsburgh. I want to give some facts in relation to that contention.

As is well known to the Presiding Officer who now honors the Senate by presiding (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair), Postmaster General Brown took pride in seeing a fine service established in the Capital City of the United States. I knew about that, because he frequently spoke of it.

Mr. President, some of us have the hope that Washington is to be the model city, not only of the United States but of all the world. It ought to be. Ever since I have been in Congress I have voted for such improvements as looked toward making this city the one place to which any citizen of the United States would come if he desired to find a model for the cities back home. In other words, we want the finest streets to be found anywhere in the world, and we ought to have them. We want the finest parks to be found in any of the cities of the world, and we ought to have them. We want the finest police force, and the best fire protection. We would like to have the best sanitary conditions in the world. Having been a school teacher in other days I want to see established here a school system of such a type that it will serve as a model for every city in the United States, not only in the matter of buildings but in the physical equipment with which the pupils work. I have always had that feeling, and just at this moment I am concerned about our facilities in connection with the air service, because we do not have proper facilities. Our airport is inadequate. There is an interest in establishing a good airport here, but there is conflict of opinion as to how it is to be obtained, where the airport is to be located, when it is to be established, and how much it is to cost.

I happen to know that the Postmaster General in the last administration was more concerned about building up the aviation industry than in any other one thing that fell under his jurisdiction. He did not want any inconsequential or irresponsible factor to have control, one on which we could not rely. He wanted such an organization as would insure the best facilities in the air at the Capital City of the Nation.

I understood that one person who was flying the route between Washington and Pittsburgh was a very good aviator, and it was said he ought to be given considerable recognition. But Mr. Brown told him frankly that it was not possible to give him that route. He wanted to fly the route from Washington to Pittsburgh and to Cleveland.

Pittsburgh happens to be a crossroad between the East and the West, through a heavily populated section of our country. Some of the lines operating from New York to Chicago would go north of Pittsburgh. Until Colonel Lindbergh demonstrated that flying over the Allegheny Mountains was safe, Pittsburgh was somewhat avoided; but when it was determined by actual experience that planes could fly over the mountains with more or less safety, then Pittsburgh immediately became one of the most important points for air service, including the carriage of the mail, in the eastern section of the country.

There is a line going east and west, another one going north and south. The line from Washington to Cleveland goes by way of Pittsburgh, then by way of Toledo, although it misses Toledo 15 miles to the south, over South Bend to Chicago, landing at the famous Chicago airport. That was such an important route that Mr. Brown insisted upon its being under not only the control but the actual operation of a company which was not only financially responsible but which could be depended upon to make the advances necessary in a rapidly growing and new service. A man with no means could not build a plane costing $250,000, as the late Boeing planes cost. A line flying planes with single motors and open cockpits could not long be maintained. Not only were financial resources necessary but also experience and the labor of research workers. Mr. Brown was anxious to get behind the aviation service the assistance of General Motors.

Mr. President, I regret that when the Postmaster General sought the assistance of the greatest scientific and research ability in the world, immediately he was charged with a desire to discriminate against someone and in favor of someone else. Mr. Brown had one concern, and that was to build up the aviation industry, and in order to accomplish that purpose certain things had to be done. One necessity naturally was money, and another a willingness to expend that money, and another a venturesomeness that would lead people to say, "We will try this new thing." It was only upon such a basis that a new industry, hazardous as this one is, could ever be built.

I do not deny that a group of men such as are on the directorate of the Pittsburgh Aviation Co. were influential. Of course they were, and if it were charged that they were influential politically, I would not deny the allegation. I should think they would be. But I do resent not only the inference but the allegation that these men were actuated by sordid motives in their efforts to get a contract and that some competitor was being discriminated against when they sought the contract.

I resent the suggestion that in building a modern air line, Pennsylvania, with her 9,000,000 people, industrially one of the richest communities of all the world, could have been animated by a corrupt impulse. It is not reasonable to think so. I do not think anybody would make such a charge except to back up some unfortunate allegation that was made before the facts were known.

This company being as well equipped as it was, with large ability financially, could be safely dealt with, with the assurance that the requirements written into the contract would be complied with or a penalty would result. Unfortunately Mr. Ball was told that he could not have the contract. He was the one who wanted it. He thought he had pioneer rights and that there was no justification for his being denied the contract.

Mr. President, the chairman of the investigating committee went into this very item quite fully, and I am going to read some of the testimony leading up to it:

The CHAIRMAN. Now let us look at the next one, Albany to Boston, Aviation Corporation.

He was here breaking up the lines, showing the various lengths of the lines. For example, one line operates from Washington to New York, from New York to Chicago, from Chicago on west to Omaha or Kansas City, thence to Salt Lake City, then on to San Francisco. He was indicating how the Aviation Co. had taken over short disjointed lines and built a system out of them. That company could do that because they had the money to do it. They were responsible in every way, and had at their command the modern methods of aviation, with all the special requirements in the matter of better planes and better equipment which might be forthcoming. In pursuing this the chairman said:

Has there ever been any line extended or contract let from Albany to Boston since that date?

Mr. BROWN. Oh, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. When?

Mr. BROWN. Well, it was as soon as the Department of Commerce got the lights in. They were very slow in getting it lighted, and that mail had to move from Boston west, at night, to Albany, and then on to Buffalo and the far West. I think it was done—I can look it up—I have the data here if you are interested—early in 1933.

The CHAIRMAN. Who got it?

Mr. BROWN. Aviation Corporation, the only people that were in New England.

The CHAIRMAN. Aviation Corporation?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, let's look at the next one, Denver to Kansas City, United States Air Lines now flying the route.

Mr. BROWN. They were the pioneers and had been flying it. Nobody else ever flew it or wanted to fly it.

The CHAIRMAN. Nobody else wanted to?

Mr. BROWN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. All right; who got it?

Mr. BROWN. United States Air Lines did. They got it by subletting from Aviation Corporation. They were the pioneers.

The CHAIRMAN. Why did it have to be sublet from the Aviation Corporation?

Mr. BROWN. Well, that was the best way to do it, if we were going to protect the Government's interest.

The CHAIRMAN. It was sublet, and you agreed for it to be sublet to this company, didn't you?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; by having it sublet we had it under the certificate plan from the start, in which we had control of the amount of money that we paid, we had control of the service; we had complete control under the certificate plan, which we would not have had if we had not had it under the certificate plan.

Mr. President, while that statement is perfectly clear on its face, many persons would overlook its significance. The law provided that a contract could be surrendered and a certificate accepted in lieu of it. That is the law; and the Postmaster General preferred to have a certificate instead of a contract, because under a certificate he could modify the rights and require different services, which he could not have done under a contract; and while his motive is impugned and it is asserted that he wanted a certificate in order that he might be more dictatorial, the fact is that he wanted the certificate in order to be able to enforce the doing of what he thought ought to be done so as to reduce the cost of carrying the mail to the Government, which could not have been done under a contract. That is why he said that—

By having it sublet we had it under the certificate plan from the start, in which we had control of the amount of money that we paid; we had control of the service; we had complete control under the certificate plan, which we would not have had if we had not had it under the certificate plan.

The CHAIRMAN. Why not?

Mr. BROWN. Because there wasn't any way of getting that complete control until they were under the certificate.

This shows precisely why provision was made in the law originally for certificates, and the chairman would note that instantly, because the contract would run for 10 years, and under a contract one would be paid for 10 years on the poundage basis at $3 a pound, unless it could be modified; and the way to provide for opportunity for modification was to have the contract surrendered for a route certificate. Yet the former Postmaster General is charged with a sordid purpose and a corrupt motive because he made that demand, and used the power he had under the law to build a complete air map in America.

The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of fact, isn't it true that considerable controversy came up because of the fact that Mr. Letson got the idea that the Aviation Corporation was not going to take care of him and took it up with you in an effort to get you to have the Aviation Corporation take care of him?

Mr. BROWN. Oh, I have known Letson for a long time. He is a fine old fellow—

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Read the question, please, Mr. Reporter.

(The last preceding question was read by the reporter.)

Mr. BROWN. Aviation Corporation, so far as I know, never had any idea of taking care of Letson.

The CHAIRMAN. Was Mr. Coburn the president of the company at that time?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. He would know about that, wouldn't he, whether there was any requirement?

Mr. BROWN. I asked Mr. Coburn to sublet that operation to Mr. Letson.

The CHAIRMAN. Why?

Mr. BROWN. Because I wanted Mr. Letson to have it.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you consider him to be a good operator?

Mr. BROWN. I considered him to be a pretty fair flat-country, daylight operator, and a very honest old fellow, who did not want to sell out to any stock promoter.

The CHAIRMAN. And you considered him capable of operating the line, didn't you, or you would not have asked that it be sublet to him?

Mr. BROWN. I considered him capable of operating that kind of operation, limited to the flat country.

The CHAIRMAN. Flat country, between Kansas City and Denver?

Mr. BROWN. Oh, there are some hills at the west end, as you come into Denver.

The CHAIRMAN. But there are hills there?

Mr. BROWN. I have flown it; I know about as much about it as you do.

The CHAIRMAN. There are some hills there?

Mr. BROWN. There are some hills as you come into Denver, but there are none on most of the routes. Most of the routes it is a flat country.

The CHAIRMAN. It was contemplated he should carry passengers, was it not?

Mr. BROWN. He was carrying passengers, carried them all the time.

The CHAIRMAN. It was a question of protecting those passengers; you wanted it in the hands of a company that could protect them by not causing them to lose their lives?

Mr. BROWN. I had quite a good deal of confidence in Letson as a careful operator.

The CHAIRMAN. Let's see the next one—Pueblo to Fort Worth and Dallas. Who got that line?

Mr. BROWN. Well, Western Air Express were the pioneers on it, and they had the equities under the theory of the Watres Act. I think they got about half of it, and the other half, my recollection is, it was divided. Let's see, Pueblo to Fort Worth, I think, was divided at Amarillo. I would have to look at the map to be sure, but I think it was divided at Amarillo. The northern half went to Western Air Express and the southern half to Aviation Corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know what agreement was made between them as to payments before the Western Air Express surrendered a part of that line?

Mr. BROWN. No; I don't.

The CHAIRMAN. Did they ever talk to you about it?

Mr. BROWN. I have no recollection of it.

The CHAIRMAN. All right; the next one—Pueblo to El Paso. Is that the one that went to Aviation Corporation?

Mr. BROWN. Well, the operators stated, in their opinion, that Western Air Express had the equities there because they had been flying the route. My recollection is that that was divided at Albuquerque, and that the northern half went to Western Air Express and the southern half to Aviation Corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. By extensions?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The next one; Great Falls to Lethridge—National Park Airways—they kept that, of course, did they not?

Mr. BROWN. This memorandum shows they were the only party in interest.

Mr. President, I am taking the time to read this testimony because it all refers to the Aviation Co. of Pittsburgh, which was the subject of discussion by the Senator from Arkansas. That is why I am confining myself at this time along this particular line.

The CHAIRMAN. That company has never had an extension?

Mr. BROWN. I don't recall that anything was ever done about it.

The CHAIRMAN. They insisted very strenuously to you, did they not, that they ought to have it because it was in the understanding?

Please note the effort of the chairman to induce an answer about understanding. Let me read that again:

The CHAIRMAN. They insisted very strenuously to you, did they not, that they ought to have it because it was in the understanding?

Mr. BROWN. It was not in any understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. Didn't they insist that to you?

Mr. BROWN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. They never have?

Mr. BROWN. No; they never mentioned Lethridge.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, the next one—

Mr. BROWN (interposing). Just let me finish. Mr. Frank was constantly urging extensions east through Montana. He wanted to go to Billings and was very anxious to get into that northeast and west line, but I don't recall his ever speaking to me about Lethridge.

The CHAIRMAN. The next one; Seattle to Vancouver—that was never granted, was it?

Mr. BROWN. I have no recollection of its being granted.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, routes which are still the subject of negotiations, no. 5, Pittsburgh to Norfolk and Washington, final terms not yet arranged. Who did get that?

Mr. BROWN. After a great deal of pulling and hauling Ball—

He is the man about whom there had been complaint, and most of the criticism directed against the Aviation Co. has evidently emanated from him—

sold out to the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries, and no service was ever authorized from Washington to Norfolk, but an extension was made from Pittsburgh to Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. For whom?

Mr. BROWN. Well, I can't remember whether it was made to Ball or whether it was made to Pittsburgh Aviation Corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of fact, to refresh your recollection, wasn't it made to the Pennsylvania Air Lines, after it had been reported to you in writing that all of the stock of the Pennsylvania Air Lines had been sold by Ball to the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries, Inc.?

Mr. BROWN. Well, I know I was unwilling to issue a certificate to Ball.

The CHAIRMAN. Why? First, before we get to that, it was issued to the Pennsylvania Air Lines, controlled by the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries, wasn't it?

Mr. BROWN. The certificate?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. Oh, I think the certificate was issued to Ball after we had assurance that he was not going to operate the line. I think the extension down to Washington was probably made to Pennsylvania Air Lines, but I could look it up in a moment and be sure.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you would not do that, would you, until you had assurance, as you state, that Mr. Ball would not operate it?

Mr. BROWN. Not until I was assured that Mr. Ball would not control it.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know or didn't you know and wasn't it reported to you that Mr. Ball was appointed by this company after they forced him to sell out as the managing operator of the entire line?

Mr. BROWN. No; I don't think he was.

The CHAIRMAN. You don't think that?

Mr. BROWN. I don't think he was the managing operator.

The CHAIRMAN. Didn't you understand he was retained as manager by the contract of sale itself?

Mr. BROWN. I never saw the contract of sale. I know he was retained by the company, because I flew there very often and found him always on the field at Pittsburgh going out and helping to look after the servicing of the planes.

The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of fact, Mr. Brown, may I ask you if it is not true that you went over the papers completely with Ball and told him you were not going to give him the contract unless he would agree to transfer it to the Pittsburgh interests?

Mr. BROWN. No; I never told him that, but I told him I would not give him a certificate because he had not complied with the law in respect that he had not satisfactorily operated his lines. He had sent all sorts of heavy material over his line. He was being paid $3 a pound by the Government. He paid the postage himself on a lot of stuff that was sent over. His postage was 80 cents, substantially, and we had to pay him $3, and that was done over and over again until we could not tolerate it, and we fined him $5,000 and told him he could not have a certificate. I did not want to break the fellow—

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). You fined him $5,000?

Mr. BROWN. Yes. I did not want to break him.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know who his lawyer was that acted for him in connection with that fine?

Mr. BROWN. I don't recall much in connection with the fine, but he was represented by Mr. Orgill, of Cleveland.

Mr. President, there is the answer to the accusation that Mr. Ball was discriminated against, that he was not given a contract, and that he had certain claims to pioneer rights. Mr. Brown stated to him that he did not want to break him, but he could not have a certificate; that if he could make arrangements with the aviation company by which he could get some value for his property, it would be perfectly agreeable to Mr. Brown, and that he would even go to the extent of subletting or having the aviation company sublet it to him, but he would not allow Mr. Ball to hold the contract; he wanted to hold some responsible party for the carrying on of the contract with the Government. Postmaster General Brown had finally, because of unethical conduct, to penalize this man to the amount of $5,000 for an act which he ought never to have allowed himself to commit. I do not think anyone can justify a criticism for a refusal to enter into a contract with a man who had thus been guilty of certain improper practices, and especially in the case of an air route from the Capital City across the Alleghenies through Pittsburgh and on to Cleveland.

The Chairman proceeded:

You call up Mr. Orgill over the long-distance telephone and tell him that he could tell Mr. Ball he had just as well give the option to the Pittsburgh Aviation Corporation, because you were not going to give him a contract?

This is a conversation over the telephone evidently between Mr. Brown and the lawyer of Mr. Ball, who, by the way, is a good friend not only of mine but of Mr. Brown. I continue:

Mr. BROWN. I don't recall that conversation. I know this, that Mr. Orgill had two or three set-ups for the Ball transaction, for Ball to sell out, and they either looked like stock-jobbing operations or they looked as though Ball would ultimately get control of the stock, and we would be back right where we were before with Ball in charge of the company, and I was unwilling to be hoodwinked in any such way if I could help it and I insisted that we would not give a certificate to Ball until we knew the property was going to pass into the hands of people who were responsible, who were not stock jobbers, and who would do a fairly decent job out of the National Capital, where I wanted the finest operation in the whole country if I could get it.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, as I understand it, one of the prerequisites to getting contracts was that there should be no stock jobbing?

Mr. BROWN. That was the view I always entertained.

The CHAIRMAN. I find in Mr. Coburn's evidence which he gave under oath—

And so forth. I do not care to go any further in the matter of evidence on the question of the aviation company.

I want to repeat what I stated, that the complaint that the Aviation Co. did not get the contract, which was dwelt upon by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], is without foundation, because under the ruling of the Comptroller General, to whom this matter was submitted, the Aviation Co. was not the lowest bidder and the contract went to the proper party, according to his ruling, which was final in this case.

Coming to the letters which were read by the Senator from Arkansas to create suspicion that the intense anxiety, if not determination, of the people of Pittsburgh to have this service, which they were doing everything in their power to get, was fraudulent. Presenting their case in the strongest possible terms to the Postmaster General, if he yielded to their representations, not only is it intimated they were corrupt but that Postmaster General Brown was corrupt, when his clear purpose was to have established a line from Washington that would do credit to Washington.

Whatever the purpose of the people of Pittsburgh was, I assume they wanted a modern aviation industry in that city. It would be very unnatural if they did not, first, in view of their position financially and in every other way, and, secondly, in view of their geographical location. Pittsburgh would seem to be a pivotal point, and they should not be criticized because they were going to the limit of their influence to obtain the best service they could find.

In one of the letters written by George Hann, who is the leading figure in this aviation company's earliest history, it was stated that they would "have to wait a long time unless we get in now." That was immediately interpreted by the reader of the statement to mean that there was something illegal about it, meaning "if we do not grasp the situation quickly we are lost." How could any such interpretation as that be put upon the statement in the light of the law? The contracts were to run for 10 years. If they did not get a contract then in the form of a certificate or by negotiation, they would have to wait 10 years, because that is the tenure of the contracts. When he said, "if we do not now get a contract through negotiation it will be a long time we will have to wait", his statement is interpreted by the suspicious mind to mean something that is wicked, and that he meant the contract must be gotten quickly or the opportunity would be lost. I should dislike to have a condition of mind such as that. If perfectly legal conduct is to be impugned by thinking people, what is the use ever to enter into any kind of business?

It was stated that this company was not actually carrying passengers and mail. The company had branches that were carrying passengers. This was, in a way, a holding company. Let me say just a word on that point.

Holding companies have come to be—and I think rather unjustly so—the subject of very severe criticism because of certain practices in recent years. For example, we have the railroad problem. Transportation by rail is under control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. If a holding company is organized for many purposes and one of its ancillary purposes was to deal in transportation, under the present law it would be exempt from the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I say that is wrong. If a holding company is organized in order to do through that company what could not be done regularly, that is not legitimate and I would vote at any time to bring within the provisions of the law the holding company that deals in transportation, at least to the extent that it is dealing in transportation, for the reason that they have made what appear to be efforts to escape certain regulatory functions. They have been subject to bitter criticism, and, as I said, in many ways rightly so.

But when we talk about a holding company in aviation, see how different the situation is. Here is an air map. There may be a route from Buffalo to Cleveland, another from Buffalo east to Rochester, another from Rochester southward to Elmira, another one from Elmira over to Binghamton, another one from Binghamton down to Scranton, Pa., another one from Scranton to Wilkes-Barre or on to Harrisburg—disjointed, broken links, all the result of local pride and the desire to have an airport and to be on an airway. What those places lack in many instances is, first, financial ability. None of their air lines can succeed. The traffic is not there to enable them to succeed. The traffic will not justify their maintenance. Any number of such air lines are brought into being that ought never to have been brought to life and will have to be discontinued.

Here is the problem: What is needed is, first, financial ability to connect these links; secondly, such financial ability as not only to pay the first cost, but to furnish modern planes, especially if the passenger service will justify it. There are a hundred things called for that not one of those companies could supply, and all of them combined could not supply them.

I do not think it was illegitimate for a group of financial men, believing in aviation, to form a holding company and take over the physical properties of these disjointed links, then sublet each of them to the actual operator to maintain his own equities in it, and then operate them as one system instead of as a broken system. I cannot see any crime or even anything wrong in a holding company organized for that purpose and performing that service.

The bill that has been introduced to amend the law eliminates holding companies. It may be that the aviation has been sufficiently developed so that holding companies may be eliminated without breaking up the routes. I have not gone into that question. If so, I see no particular objection to their elimination, and especially would I agree to eliminate them if they are trying to escape any law, as holding companies sometimes do in other fields; but for the life of me I do not see any legitimate objection to a holding company in the inception of the building of a great route.

Mr. President, in further reference to this particular line, a great deal has been said against Mr. Brown because he did not believe that the competitive system was the best. It must be remembered, however, no matter how earnestly he thought that competition on a line where there was only one bidder was a myth, that the contracts for all the transcontinental lines made under Mr. Brown were let by competitive bidding; so that matter can be brushed aside. I know he thought that competitive bidding was not necessarily the best way to proceed in first building the air map. I am aware of that; but at the same time Mr. Brown used the competitive method in the case of all the transcontinental lines.

The reason why he said the competitive-bidding system was a myth was because there were so few bidders who could qualify. The chairman of the committee the other day went into the question as to who could qualify, and brought out the fact that in the case of various contracts heretofore made there were several bids, meaning that there was more than one bidder, and in reading the record on that point one would be led to believe that there were a great number of bids on all the lines.

I happen to have the record of the bids that were made on all the lines, including the 34 contracts in force up to the time of the cancellation.

LXXVIII—311

On no. 2 there were three bids, and only one bidder qualified.

On no. 3 there were two bids, and only one bidder qualified.

On no. 4 there were three bids, and only one bidder qualified.

On no. 6 there was one bid, and the bidder qualified.

On no. 7 there was one bid, and the bidder qualified.

On no. 8 there were three bids, and one bidder qualified.

On no. 9 there were three bids, and only one bidder qualified.

On no. 10 there were three bids, and one bidder qualified.

On no. 11 there was one bid, and the bidder qualified.

The first 11 contracts were let by bids. There were 20 bids in the aggregate, and in the case of every single contract there was only one qualified bidder. In other words, there were 11 contracts, and there were 11 bidders qualified to bid. Those were the first 11.

The twelfth contract was the one in the Midwest, where there were lines running in different directions, like the one at Cheyenne. There were 9 bids on that route, and 9 bidders qualified, which was rather a remarkable record.

On no. 13 there was only one bid, and one bidder qualified.

On no. 14 there were two bids, and only one bidder qualified.

On no. 15 there was one bid, and the bidder qualified.

On no. 16 there were three bids, and only one bidder qualified.

On no. 17 there were four bids, and only one bidder qualified.

On no. 18 there were 4 bids, and only 1 bidder qualified.

On no. 19 there was one bid, and the bidder qualified.

On no. 20 there were four bids, and all the bidders qualified.

On no. 22 there were 3 bids, and 3 bidders qualified.

It will be noted that these later ones were when the aviation industry was advancing very rapidly, and there were far more bidders who qualified than in the early time when bids were first offered.

So it will be observed that on the twenty-third contract there were 6 bids and 4 of the bidders qualified.

On the twenty-fourth there happened to be 2 bids, and only 1 bidder qualified.

On the twenty-fifth there were 3 bids, and 3 bidders qualified.

On the twenty-sixth there were 3 bids, and 3 bidders qualified.

On the twenty-seventh there were 3 bids, and 3 bidders qualified.

On the twenty-eighth there were 4 bids, and 4 bidders qualified.

On the twenty-ninth there were 6 bids, and 6 bidders qualified.

This indicates the rapid improvement in facilities and otherwise to meet the requirements of the Commerce Department in aviation. I think this is rather a splendid testimony to the improvement of air-navigation facilities.

On no. 30 there were 6 bids, and 5 of the bidders qualified.

On no. 31 there was only one bid, and the bidder qualified.

No. 31 was the first contract that was let by Postmaster General Brown.

No. 32 was the second contract let by Postmaster General Brown. There were 4 bids, and 4 bidders qualified.

No. 33 was the third contract let by Postmaster General Brown. There was one bid, and the bidder qualified.

No. 34 was the last contract let by Postmaster General Brown. There were 2 bids, and only 1 bidder qualified.

All these contracts that were let by Mr. Brown were let under competitive bidding in obedience to the first section of the law. He did not use the other section, which permitted him to make a contract by negotiation, which is not bidding, as everyone knows; and he did not employ in connection with these routes section 6 of the law, which permitted him to make extensions. The contracts for transcontinental routes were all let under the first section requiring competitive bidding. Yet every time anyone speaks, we listen to the charge that these people were in a conspiracy to avoid bidding. If they were, I am the last man who would undertake to protect them or defend them. If any men made any agreement among themselves, or with anybody else, to get a contract by agreeing not to bid one against another, I want the law to be applied to them; but for God's sake, let us not find them guilty without giving them some trial.

That is why I feel intensely upon this subject. I know that I am very unfortunate in that anything I say is attributed to partisanship. It is useless for anyone to undertake to defend himself against charges of that kind. It simply was unfortunate, that is all.

When I became a Member of the House of Representatives I went upon the congressional committee. I ought not to have done it. In 3 years I became chairman of the congressional committee, which I should not have done. In the conduct of the congressional campaigns of 1918 and 1920 my friends on the other side of the aisle in the House came to the conclusion, farthest possible from the truth, that I thought only in partisan terms.

I know that whenever I say anything good about a Democrat, the statement is made, "Oh, he is dead!" That is not fair. I do not mind saying that there is in this body the son of a great statesman who was a candidate for reelection when I had charge of the campaign on behalf of the Republicans. The order went out from me that Republicans in that district should not oppose Mr. Clark, for we would rather have a man like Champ Clark in the House of Representatives than any Republican who could be named.

The present presiding officer [Mr. REYNOLDS in the chair] will be pleased to know that I gave the same order exactly on behalf of my beloved, saintly friend, Major Stedman, of the Fifth District of North Carolina. That was my order. But having been identified with the machinery of my party, I have put the label of partisanship upon myself, and I must expect that everything I say will be interpreted as a partisan statement.

I have stood for certain proposals which the present President has advanced. I have stood against some of the things he has advocated. I think, in his opinion, I have not supported the most important measures he has proposed, because I think they are radical and revolutionary, and that is why I have not favored them. I feel absolutely certain that time will prove my position to be correct. I will stand any day for anything the President wants if it commends itself to my best judgment, without regard to political affiliations.

It was a splendid statement for the President to make when in recommending some of the radical measures, he said that if they did not prove successful, he would be the first to admit it. I had hoped that he would take the same position about the air-mail contracts, for I know that the President would not have given the order he issued had he known all the facts. It is not conceivable that a great American, in the responsibility of the Presidency, would ever permit himself to deny to any group a chance to be heard in its own defense if it was charged with fraud. He is not that type of man. He has been misled, and now the effort on this floor is to cushion the offense, and we hear every day something from the other side tending to prove that the President acted knowingly, in the way he wanted to act, and that there was no other way he could act. No one can ever make me believe that to be so. I do not believe it. When the time comes—and it will not be so long delayed—when I can present the arguments on the contracts, we will see whether such papers as that read today can have any weight. They are founded on inference, every item is inference, drawing conclusions from statements.

For example, a witness went on the stand in the committee and testified under oath that he had secured a position for the sister of Mr. Glover, and that he had secured an appointment for Mr. Glover's nephew, Lloyd Glover, when the truth about the matter is that the only sister Mr. Glover has is 65 years of age, never was a candidate for office, never solicited an appointment, and could not accept an appointment if she wanted to, because she would be disqualified by age. Yet it was stated that he secured a position for his sister.

It was also said that he secured an appointment for a nephew, Lloyd Glover. The fact is that there is no such person as Lloyd Glover, the nephew of Mr. Glover. It is on a par with the effort to bring Walter Brown's brother into the testimony, until it was found that a man of the same name was referred to, a man who was no relative of the Postmaster General. It is on a par with bringing Charles Francis Adams into the testimony in another body at this time, when the reference was to another Adams of the same name.

Mr. President, where are these insinuations leading us? When an effort is made to convict a public servant of a crime, it cannot be done by innuendo; it cannot be done by merely submitting circumstantial evidence that is not even an inference. Loose testimony and loose statements are not conclusive proof, and America will not stand for the effort to prove a case by such means.

Mr. President, I was not stirred in this matter until a poor miserable weakling on the witness stand testified that Mr. Brown had destroyed records—files of the Post Office Department. When I read that I was tremendously disturbed. All around me Senators, including Democratic Senators, spoke to me about it. I said: "There cannot be any truth in it. Keep your minds open. Do not make up your minds as yet."

I had hoped that the first thing the committee would do would be to call Mr. Brown, but they had started on a certain program, and that program was to bring forward adverse testimony. Any testimony that was favorable they did not want. Investigators went to different people, and when an investigator was told that a man could not testify to something that man was not wanted. I will prove that, before we get through here, and give names. When a witness went on the stand and testified to something, and then later wrote a letter saying that the testimony was not correct, and that he desired to correct it, opportunity was not given for the correction until someone else who received a copy of the letter saw that it was made a matter of record.

The plan is not for an investigation; the plan is for a prosecution, and in order to carry it forward, thousands upon thousands of dollars are expended, investigators are sent all over the country, taken from the Treasury, Post Office, and Justice Departments, and at the table where the testimony is given the witnesses are flanked on every side by such investigators, some from the Post Office Department, some from the Treasury Department, some from the Justice Department. The purpose is perfectly obvious.

I finally spoke to the Democratic leader in this body and told him about my concern regarding Mr. Brown's being called. He said to me, "There is no doubt about Mr. Brown's being called if he wants to be called." I spoke of the matter here on the floor of the Senate and was told that Mr. Brown would be given an opportunity to testify any time he wanted to, provided he would waive immunity. Every self-respecting man would resent that statement about a man such as Mr. Brown if he knew him.

The Senate and the country know what was done in order to get Mr. Brown here. He came on the 19th of February. Mr. Brown said:

Mr. Chairman, may I say that I have prepared a statement which I should like very much to present to the committee at this time?

After the statement was read, the chairman said:

Before asking any questions, a letter was read from you to Senator FESS in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In order that the record may be clear on this point, may I ask if you wrote that letter?

Mr. BROWN. I did.

The CHAIRMAN. And you appear here, after having written that letter, in accordance with the terms of the letter which you wrote to Senator FESS?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. And you are willing to answer any questions concerning the matters that the committee desires to ask you?

Mr. BROWN. Certainly; anything in the world that is pertinent to the inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask you, first, when you first came to Washington?

The letter to which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] referred was the letter of date February 10, 1934, addressed to me, in which the Postmaster General had requested that I lay before the committee a request for him to appear. In that letter Mr. Brown makes this statement:

I had ventured to hope that because of the high position in the Postal Service which I had the honor to hold for 4 years a majority of the Senate special committee might deem it fitting to invite me to testify concerning the postal matters pertinent to the committee's inquiry that were peculiarly within my own knowledge, without imposing conditions reflecting on my integrity. However, my desire to prevent, if possible, irreparable injury to an industry the uninterrupted development of which in my judgment is vital to our national security and well-being, transcends any personal consideration.

Will you be good enough, therefore, to convey to the members of the Senate special committee authorized to investigate air-mail and ocean-mail contracts, my urgent request to be heard at the earliest date convenient? In so doing you will please state for me that I will appear voluntarily, that my testimony will be given without compulsion, and that anything I may say may be used against me in any court in the land.

Mr. President, I cannot understand why the usual and proper course is not pursued. If there is any charge against these companies, or against Mr. Brown, there is an open way to pursue the charge, and that is the regular way. The courts are open for the purpose. If these men are guilty of any crime, they ought to be punished; but there is a way to find whether they are guilty, and then to punish them accordingly.

Our Bill of Rights, the first 10 amendments of the Constitution, protects any man from being found guilty without first being indicted, and then he is entitled to a trial by his peers, and not only shall have witnesses for him if he wants them but he has the force of American law to compel them to attend. The meanest culprit that ever disgraced America, if brought to the bar of justice, will be given not only a hearing, but the courts, under the law, will appoint counsel to defend him.

In contrast with that look at what has taken place in connection with the air-mail contracts, Mr. President, Mr. Brown made this statement:

The major purpose of the legislation authorizing the Postmaster General to award air-mail and ocean-mail contracts was not to transport the mails at the lowest possible cost to the Government, but to foster the maritime and aeronautical industries.

On any other basis subsidy never would be tolerated.

The title of the present ocean-mail subvention law, known as the "Jones-White Act", states its purpose to be "to further develop an American merchant marine", etc.; and the title of the present air-mail law, known as the "McNary-Watres Act", states its purpose to be "further to encourage commercial aviation", etc.

Congress declared and is solely responsible for both of these national policies. Upon the Post Office Department rests merely the responsibility of administering them.

The ultimate goal of the merchant-marine policy is to maintain under the United States flag a merchant fleet capable of carrying our foreign commerce, by paying to operators of that fleet, through the medium of mail subventions, the excess due to the higher standard of living in the United States of building and operating costs over similar costs in foreign countries.

The Postmaster General has made mention of the ocean mail because the investigating committee investigated both ocean mail and air mail.

The ultimate goal of the commercial aviation policy is to create an economically independent aeronautical industry by enabling air-transport operators to recoup in the form of mail pay their out-of-pocket losses while they are building up adequate passenger and express revenues from the public and are developing transport airplanes capable under competitive conditions of earning their costs of operation.

During my term as Postmaster General 20 ocean-mail contracts were awarded by open competitive bidding, with the formal approval of an interdepartmental committee created by President Hoover, consisting of the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of the Navy, the Chairman of the Shipping Board, and the Postmaster General. All but one of these contracts were let to the lowest responsible bidder whose proposal met the specifications. The one contract which was awarded to the high bidder was so awarded at the request of Congress set forth in a joint resolution duly adopted. By the terms of these contracts the ocean-mail contractors were compelled to expend substantially all of their mail pay on the construction of new vessels. A magnificent fleet of nearly a hundred modern ships is being completed in American shipyards, of American materials, by American labor, at an aggregate outlay of approximately $300,000,000. This fleet under the United States flag is today carrying our commerce to every port in the world and stands ready at all times to serve as a naval auxiliary in time of national emergency.

During my term as Postmaster General 3 domestic air-mail contracts were awarded out of 34 in all let by the Post Office Department: One contract covering service from Pasco, Wash., to Seattle via Portland, before the passage of the McNary-Watres Act; two contracts, covering service from Atlanta to Los Angeles via Fort Worth and El Paso; and the service from New York to Los Angeles via Pittsburgh, St. Louis, and Kansas City, after the passage of the McNary-Watres Act.

In other words, 3 contracts were let—1 before the act was passed and 2 after the act was passed.

In the letting of these contracts every requirement of law was observed, and no evidence whatever of collusion between the bidders thereon or the holders of any other air-mail contracts appeared or was ever suggested by anyone.

The two meetings of air-passenger operators and air-mail operators, held at the Post Office Department May 19 and June 4, 1930, to which attention has been directed, were called and held for a purpose entirely legal and proper, to wit: To find, if possible, some method under the provisions of the McNary-Watres Act of aiding the passenger-transport operators who had no mail contracts and whose losses were compelling them to abandon their passenger operations. There was nothing clandestine or secret about these meetings. Minutes of the proceedings were made by the superintendent of air mail and preserved in the files of the Second Assistant Postmaster General. A formal statement concerning these meetings was given to the press.

No suggestion of dividing air-mail operations among the companies represented at these meetings was ever made or contemplated, and no agreement or understanding with respect to bidding on air-mail contracts or refraining to bid on air-mail contracts by any of the operators present was made at either of those meetings or at any other time.

The tentative suggestion for the relief of passenger air-transport operators who had no mail contracts, advanced and discussed at these meetings, was rejected by me as impracticable and unsound, and many of the exclusively passenger operations were soon thereafter abandoned.

From time to time after the passage of the McNary-Watres Act various extensions of existing routes demanded by Senators, Representatives, and local civic organizations were authorized under the provisions of section 6 of that act, which reads as follows—

That section of the act reads:

The Postmaster General, in establishing air-mail routes under this act, may, when in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby—

Mr. President, mark these words—make any extensions or consolidations of routes which are now or may hereafter be established.

Mr. President, that is the law. The Postmaster General may make any extensions and consolidations of any route now existing or which may hereafter be established. Yet Mr. Brown, when he authorizes extensions, is charged with being corrupt and committing an illegal act though the language authorizing him to do that very thing could not be made broader.

Now we come to the contention of those who are disturbed for some reason about their illegitimate procedure that the difficulty was that the Postmaster General took a short air line and added a longer line to it, as if that were a crime. Let us see how he did it.

There is, let us say, an air line from New York to Chicago, traversing probably the most profitable area in all aviation because of the two great cities at the termini and the thickly populated territory in between, having a tremendously potential passenger and express business; and if the line could secure a mail contract that would represent so much more profit. It is desired to have a line from Chicago to Salt Lake City.

The distance from Chicago to Salt Lake City may be double the distance from Chicago to New York, but the line running from Chicago to Salt Lake City is a weak one; there is not much traffic there; the line carries no mail; there is little passenger and express business and the question is whether it can operate without a mail contract. Mr. Brown said, "I do not want to continue these air lines in broken links." The reason is obvious. In the case of a line starting at Washington and going to New York, the rate for carrying the mail is $3 a pound, while the rate by air from

New York to Chicago is 86 cents a pound, the lower rate being due to the tremendous volume of business. On an airline from Chicago to the West the rate is $3 a pound, then going clear to the Pacific coast the rate in that case also is $3 a pound; so that when the rates are summed up it is found that the cost to the Government for carrying a pound of mail over a route broken into four links owned by four different companies is $9.86 a pound. Mr. Brown said, "I will not stand for that."

There was another reason why he would not stand for it. Here is an air route from the East to Chicago; there is another operating from Chicago, the two being separate in ownership. The route to Chicago has to meet some very dangerous atmospheric conditions and its planes frequently are late. The line operating west from Chicago, loaded with passengers, anxious to get on the wing, so as not to be caught at night, will insist upon the plane from the East arriving on schedule time, for when the planes from the East are delayed the mail is broken, not having reached Chicago before the plane for the West must depart.

Mr. President, people unaccustomed to flying do not realize the conditions an airplane is apt to encounter. If the recital of a personal experience may be permitted, I should like to state that on one occasion, while flying from my home to Washington, with one of the most skillful Army aviators in the Service, we lost our way four times, due to a storm. Before we started from home at Wright Field the atmospheric conditions were reported to us. They indicated that there were some slight storms in the mountains but it was thought they would not be severe. So we started on the way. The first storm struck us before we got to Wheeling. The pilot told me he had three choices: He could go through the storm, which would be a rather dangerous proceeding, because his plane was not equipped for such contingencies as planes are now equipped; another choice was to go over the storm, but that, too, was dangerous for we were in a mountainous region, and if the pilot pushed his engine too heavily it might stop. The other choice was to go around the storm. The pilot chose the last course.

We were flying the National Highway, which is exceedingly well marked. I have been over it in an automobile dozens and dozens of times and am very familiar with it. I have also flown over it by air a few times. The pilot veered to the left to go around the storm, lost his way, and it was quite a little while before we got back on the trail. Before we were out of the mountains we struck another fugitive storm cloud. The pilot did not want to go through it, so again he went around it. We met four of those storm clouds in the mountains and lost our way each time. Finally the pilot found himself over some location about which he knew nothing. The rain was then falling in a drizzling shower and he was a little concerned. The plane flew over and around a little town. The pilot asked me whether I knew what the name of the town was, and I shook my head. I did not know where he was going; I was completely turned around. After he had proceeded for about 2 minutes he reversed his course and flew back over the town again almost frightening the life out of me by flying just over the tops of the houses.

When we reached Washington, I said to him, "What on earth were you doing at that town?" He said, "I had lost my way; I did not know the name of the town. I saw that a railroad ran through it, and I knew there was a depot; so I went back there and hunted the depot, and flew low enough so as to read the name of the town on the depot; that is the only way I found where I was." He said he had been flying for 11 years and that was the worst trip he had ever made.

That is one of my experiences in the air. When one starts out, even when the reports indicate that everything is all right, he cannot be absolutely sure about the weather, for it is a very uncertain element; consequently it has to be taken into consideration and an effort made to provide for it.

Mr. Brown took the view that he would not allow a contract for a route that was made up of several links which were operated and owned by different companies. If one company owned it all, and sublet it to other companies, that would be all right, but there had to be responsibility to the Government on the part of one unit. That was the demand.

Now, Mr. President, let me ask where is the basis in common sense for the claim that Mr. Brown was guilty of a wrongful act when he permitted a base route from New York to Chicago to be extended from Chicago to Salt Lake City, although the second link was longer than the first? Where is the man outside of the insane asylum who will say that that was wrong?

Take the specific case mentioned the other day by the Senator from Arkansas, the case of an extension from Minneapolis westward to Mandan. At the request not only of the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], who had spoken to the Postmaster General at different times about it, but also at the request of the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] and of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], as well as at the request of the late lamented and much beloved and most distinguished Senator from Montana, Mr. Walsh, that route was established. I know the argument the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] used. He stated to Mr. Brown, "This territory is traversed by the Great Northern Railroad, by the Northern Pacific, and by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, three great trunk lines running from east to west, with not an air-mail line in that area." It was a convincing statement, and Mr. Brown said he would establish the line. What did he propose to do? He proposed to take the line between Chicago and Minneapolis, 664 miles, and extend it west to Mandan through a territory not thickly populated as is the territory through which the base line goes. Is Mr. Brown to be condemned because, yielding not only to the wish of Senators but yielding in response to his own judgment, he extended a base line although the extension was longer than the original line?

That is a concrete example used by the Senator from Arkansas for the purpose of condemning Mr. Brown for the use of his power in the extension of airlines, which power was given him under the law. It is that character of criticism which I cannot understand. Certainly no sensible person would have said that they should use the line west as a base and use the pioneer line as the extension. Certainly if he had in mind service to the Government he would not break it into two lines with two companies when it could be handled under one management. The difficulty is that we are proceeding on the theory that in what is being done we should not take into consideration the welfare of the Government or the welfare of the public, but that we ought to respond to some complaint of somebody who could not get a contract because he should not have it.

This is the authority under which the Postmaster General operated:

The Postmaster General in establishing air-mail routes under this act may, when in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby, make any extension or consolidation of routes which are now or may hereafter be established.

The Postmaster General proceeded in his statement to the committee:

All of the extensions and consolidations authorized by me were in the public interest. Every such action resulted in improved public service and ultimately in lower flying costs which were passed on to the Government in the form of reduced mail pay. Payment for service on the extensions authorized were in every instance approved by the Comptroller General then and now in office, and the validity of such extensions was repeatedly recognized in appropriations for the air mail voted by Congress.

With the passage of the McNary-Watres Act giving the Post Office Department the requisite authority, it exerted pressure on the air-mail carriers, who with minor exceptions had theretofore been confining their operations exclusively to carrying the mail, to transport passengers and express in order to build up revenues from the public and thus lighten the burden on the Post Office Department; and it exerted every proper influence to consolidate the short, detached, and falling lines into well-financed and well-managed systems, providing three independent transcontinental operations with appropriate north and south intersecting services, believing that the pressure of competition would in time attract public patronage, reduce operating costs, and develop, if possible, a transport airplane capable, under the competitive conditions in the passenger and express transportation industry, of earning enough to pay its way without any subsidy.

Mr. President, the Postmaster General may have been given too much authority. The Postmaster General may have acted rather arbitrarily. The Postmaster General may have had a wrong view of the policy for the building up of a great aviation system. I do not think those possibilities in reality existed. They may have existed, but I do not believe they did. But suppose they did; suppose that all Mr. Farley said in his letter to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] is true, that Mr. Brown acted arbitrarily; was not he the arbiter? Did not the law give him the power? Was there any limit not written in the law? I do not know of any.

The law provided that the Postmaster General should act if he deemed it in the public interest. That does not mean in the judgment of the Presiding Officer of the Senate whether it was in the public interest. It does not mean in the judgment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] whether it was in the public interest. It does not mean in the judgment of the Senator now addressing the Senate whether it was in the public interest. It means in the judgment of the Postmaster General. He is to say whether, in his own judgment, it is in the public interest. If he says that extending lines, reducing costs, and increasing service, are in the public interest, then I have no right to say, if he is mistaken, that he is a criminal. What he did was in accordance with law. If the law had read that it should be in the public interest as Congress might see it or as somebody else might see it, then, of course, the Postmaster General might have been subject to criticism if he did not obtain their judgment as to what was in the public interest.

Here was a disjointed, irregular, illogical air map. It did not serve anybody as a system. Mr. Brown saw the possibility, first, through extensions under this power and, secondly, through subletting and through negotiations, to take those disjointed links of a broken system and build them into a complete system. He had the railroads as an example. The New York Central Lines and the Pennsylvania Lines constitute two systems. In the Pennsylvania system there are the Pennsylvania Lines, the Pennsylvania Railroad, and, I believe, the Pennsylvania Co. One runs from New York to Pittsburgh and the other is an extension from Pittsburgh to Chicago, but they are all one system. That system, which originally was rather short, has been gathering up tributaries and branches until the system represents over 200 separate rail branches. It is one system today, made up of all those tributaries and branches.

The same thing can be said of the New York Central Railroad. It is an evolution from disjointed, short, irresponsible lines into a completed, logical railroad system serving all the territory through which it goes.

We have been hoping that through some system of consolidation it might be possible to serve the whole country in air mail in some way like that. We have not been able yet to reach that consummation. With that in view, however, Mr. Brown undertook to take these disjointed links and coordinate them through the power he had—first, extensions; second, surrender of contracts for route certificates, by means of which these various changes could be made; and, third, in the case of a route across the continent, letting the contract by competitive bidding.

What has been the outcome? See how the public has been served. It has had the finest air service known to the world today; the finest air-mail service ever yet conceived; the greatest distance flown with the smallest fatalities, flying at the rate of one loss to four and a half million miles last year. Yet my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] rises here and talks about these amateur flyers, these training people, and gives the number of deaths, and then tries to laugh off the seriousness of the recent deaths in the Army Air Service, which we so much deplore and which everyone deplores.

Let me say to my friend that whatever he may say of the number of deaths, there are 11 of them amongst the Army flyers that would not need to be computed had this change not been made, and those 11 deaths cannot be laughed off.

I have read the proposed legislation presented by the distinguished Senator who occupies the chair at this moment

(Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). I think that in the main it is sound. It avoids the un-American conduct of which all of us ought to be ashamed. It opens the way for everybody to have his day in court. Nothing less than that can ever be conceded in this body.

My concern is over the fact that when the former Postmaster General took these disjointed pieces and worked them into a great system, it is charged that it was done in collusion, and the allegation of collusion is based on the fact that a meeting was held.

Let me read a statement from Mr. KELLY in regard to that meeting. Mr. KELLY, as everybody who knows him must concede, is a man who would not stand for anything that is dishonorable. He says:

Those conferences, in themselves, were not contrary to law. It was the only sensible and businesslike thing that could be done.

Then Mr. KELLY says:

General Farley himself in August last year called all the operators into conference over the division of the air-mail appropriation of $14,000,000, which had been cut down from $19,000,000.

And so forth. Then Mr. KELLY says:

It is nonsense to say that there was anything improper in the conferences in themselves. However, if at those conferences or afterward there was conspiracy or collusion as to bidding or refraining from bidding, then there was violation of law and those guilty should be punished.

I find no proof of that in the letter of the Postmaster General. If he has that proof, it is his duty to proceed to bring action.

That is what I say. The way is open. I call upon this administration to stop playing politics and proceed in the orderly way if it has any proof against these people.

Mr. KELLY further says, and it was only last month that he made these statements:

Now, the facts are these: Postmaster General Brown did assume that he had power of unlimited extension and the conference of June 4 had that assumption before it for consideration. It is my belief that this memorandum we have heard so much about was a paper containing suggestions as to extensions in case Postmaster General Brown had the power to make them. When it was shown that he had no such power, the memorandum became worthless.

At the time that conference was held there was no secrecy about it. The papers contained items dealing with the details discussed. The statement was made that great extensions were to be made so that the country could be covered with air-carrier service, covering both mail and passengers.

Then there is the further statement which I read a while ago in reference to the low bid of the Aviation Co., which was denied a contract.

Mr. Brown, in his statement before the committee, continues:

In interpreting the policy with respect to commercial aviation declared by Congress, I took it for granted that the uninterrupted development of the air transport industry, necessary to keep the aeronautical art in our country abreast that art throughout the world, was vital to our national security and that the air mail itself was performing an essential service for the business of the country.

While the air transport industry, consistently fostered by generous Government aid throughout the administrations of Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover, and supervised by governmental authority, has created the greatest system of air transport in the world, it is still dependent for its very existence upon the Air Mail Service, and will probably so continue for some time to come.

The reason why the Postmaster General has taken that view is that under his administration, looking to the formula of increasing the service without increasing the cost, but for the welfare of the public, he has this record:

In 1929 the air-mail cost had gotten down to $1.09 a pound per mile. It went on down every year from 1929 to 1933; and when Mr. Brown left the service, it had dropped from $1.09 to 42 cents. That was proof that Mr. Brown made a correct prediction when he said that with proper aid to this industry, if mail lines were required to carry passengers, and mail contracts were given to passenger lines, the point would be reached in the development of aviation where it would not cost the Government one dollar except the payment for the service for carrying the mails.

That prediction is carried out by the figures from 1929 to 1933; but he still says that without mail contracts aviation at this time could not exist.

Much progress toward the goal of economic independence has been made, however, particularly during the last few years. The revenues of air-mail carriers derived from passenger and express services have increased from practically zero in 1929 to the rate of $10,000,000 per year at the end of 1933. At the same time the compensation paid to the air-mail carriers by the Post Office Department has been reduced by successive steps from $1.09 per mile in 1929 to 42 cents per mile at the end of my administration.

Public attention has been drawn to my investment in the securities of three corporations whose business is related to transportation—the International Mercantile Marine Co., the Pennroad Co., and the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.

I desire to read this especially because a Senator said to me, "I have been somewhat disturbed over the reports in the press that Mr. Brown owned stock in certain companies." This is the statement of Mr. Brown:

During my term as Postmaster General no mail contract was awarded to the International Mercantile Marine Co. or to any other ocean carrier in which the International Mercantile Marine Co. held a financial interest. Five ocean-mail contracts were awarded by me to competitors of the International Mercantile Marine Co., 3 in the North Atlantic and 2 in the Caribbean. No mail contract was awarded to the Pennroad Co., which I am informed has never held any interest in any ocean-mail or air-mail operations.

During my term as Postmaster General no contract for carrying the mail was awarded to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., of whose stock I own 225 shares.

One hundred of these shares were acquired in the open market in 1915; 100 were acquired in the open market in 1928, about a year before I became Postmaster General; and 25 shares were acquired in 1929 by the exercise of subscription rights accruing to the 200 shares previously owned.

Sometime in 1930 Transcontinental & Western Air was incorporated and acquired the contract to operate the air-mail and passenger service from New York to Los Angeles via Pittsburgh, St. Louis, and Kansas City. Forty-seven and one half percent of Transcontinental & Western Air stock was acquired by Transcontinental Air Transport, a corporation in which the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., I am advised, owned 50,000 shares, or 6.7 percent of its capitalization. No dividends have ever been earned or paid by Transcontinental & Western Air or by Transcontinental Air Transport, and therefore no such dividends have ever been received by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. If the stock in Transcontinental & Western Air owned by Transcontinental Air Transport should be distributed to the latter corporation's stockholders and the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. should distribute the Transcontinental & Western Air stock coming to it by reason of such distribution among its stockholders, the 225 shares of Pennsylvania Railroad stock which I own would be allocated 0.3382, or slightly over one third of a single share.

Mr. President, I have been reading from the statement made by former Postmaster General Brown before the committee at the initial meeting, where he appeared, including the last part of his statement in reference to the stocks. I shall not take the time of the Senate to go into some of the testimony where I think the committee should not have entered the particular field.

I know why the committee went into the Bagley account. That was a case of the association of two friends which cost the Postmaster General nearly a half million dollars—a very sad performance, but without guilt, without a semblance of anything wrong, unless it may be said that a man should never purchase any security of any kind.

Of course, the purpose of the committee was to attempt to establish that Mr. Brown, as Postmaster General, was engaged in illegal transactions, or unethical actions, in his association with Mr. Bagley, because Mr. Bagley had had some dealings with someone connected with the Government. When all the testimony shall be brought out, there will be nothing except pity for anyone who would, unfortunately, in any venture of the kind, suffer such terrific losses.

When the committee wants the facts about the Bagley will it need only subpoena the trust officer of the company which is the coexecutor of the will, who has charge of all the details of the will. Certainly Mr. Brown, who had never seen the will until the committee's investigation, and who knew nothing of the details and has nothing whatever to do with the administration of the will, could not carry in his mind details of matters with which he was not familiar. When the committee is anxious to get all the facts, there will be one way to get them so that there will be no question about them—that is, it can subpoena the officer of the trust company that is the executor of the will, associated with Mr. Brown.

Mr. President, I do not intend to go into the evidence or suggestions which lead to personal abuse. I think some of these matters would do credit to a police court or to a divorce court. I have actually been hurt to notice how a distinguished citizen of this country has been treated by a committee which seems determined to try to find something which I assure them they are not going to find.

Mr. President, all I want to do is to refer to the testimony of Mr. Brown relating to the contracts in question. I shall proceed later along that line.

I simply desire at this time to make this statement. Mr. Brown is charged with allocating these contracts in accordance with an agreement theretofore entered into, using certain people as agents for carrying out the agreement. I do not believe there is a scintilla of evidence to establish that charge. If it is said the allocation was to companies upon the basis of equities, of rights, in all probability there is some basis for that, because Mr. Brown believed in that course. Mr. Brown took the view that if there were two companies, one of them a pioneer company and one a company which could not secure through the courts what it considered its rights, there were certain equities which any court of chancery would respect, and what he wanted was to insure that any contract made under the law should respect these equities. I speak of equities advisedly in the legal signification of the term, as distinguished from ordinary rights. Mr. Brown wanted to accomplish that end. To the limit of his ability he tried to do so. That was honorable. It sounded in justice.

Let me illustrate what this administration can do without being indicted: Mr. Farley called a meeting of the same contractors in order to allocate the $14,000,000 available, when the contracts called for an expenditure of $19,000,000. Who is it who will charge that that was an error, or that Mr. Farley should not have done it? He may have to take a whole city off an air-mail route and damage some interest, but who will criticize him for it? He will have to take the amount of money available and prorate it to the contractors in accordance with the rates fixed in the contracts, and nobody should charge that there was anything wrong.

Information came to me only yesterday that a great committee of the Congress, in dealing with the printing question, is doing the very thing for which Mr. Brown has been criticized. Let me read a release given to the press by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing:

The action taken by the committee today is not to be considered as a precedent for future awards. The awards have been made on the following basis:

1. No consideration has been given to proposals declared irregular by the committee for noncompliance with provisions of law.
2. No consideration has been given to bids for individual lots which, according to the National Recovery Act Administrator, do not comply with the provisions of the respective codes for the paper industry.
3. No awards have been made for bidders whose designated mills have not furnished part of any related group of paper on annual contracts for either of the 3 years, 1931, 1932, and 1933.

May I read that again?—

No awards have been made for bidders whose designated mills have not furnished part of any related group of paper on annual contracts for either of the 3 years 1931, 1932, and 1933.

The only exceptions to this requirement are in the few lots upon which only one bid, or low bids, have been submitted in conformity with the N.R.A. code.

Mr. President, in this case 18 companies bid identically the same figure, not only to the dollar but to the cent; and not having enough money to go around, they allocate the money. To whom? Only to those who had contracts in other years; and yet, while the committee has done that, former Postmaster General Brown is held up as a criminal for respecting what he claimed to be the equitable rights in the air-mail contracts.

Continuing the statement released through the press by the chairman of the committee:

In all cases where the bids were equal or tied, the awards made are based on the respective percentages of the total quantity of each related group of paper contracted for a designated mill during the last 3 years. The percentages were applied to the respective mills instead of the bidders to avoid possible excessive awards to any one mill represented by several bidders in the same group of paper.

The percentages were applied to the respective mills instead of to the respective bidders. I am not indicting the committee, and I see no particular objection to what it did; but in the name of honor, of ordinary, common decency, why should a committee of the Senate do precisely what an investigating committee, speaking through the leader of the Senate, indicts Mr. Brown for doing?

I suspend further discussion of this subject and will resume it at a very early time.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 3055) to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, there is now pending before the Senate the bill dealing with Philippine independence. Since the bill was reported by the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs the House has acted on an identical bill, has passed it, and that bill has been laid down by the Chair.

I ask unanimous consent, therefore—the two bills being the same—that the House bill (H.R. 8573) providing for independence for the Philippines, and so forth, be substituted for the Senate bill which is now pending before this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 8573) to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Utah if he will be in a position to go on with his amendment the first thing tomorrow?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, so far as I now know, those of us who are opposed to the bill will be ready to proceed tomorrow.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who also has a substitute, is ready.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall be ready to proceed tomorrow morning.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I see no reason why at this late hour we should enter upon the debate, because there are very few Senators present. My interrogatory was directed rather to tomorrow's business than to today's.

So far as I know, the proponents of the bill have no desire to make statements at this time, for the reason that a similar bill has already been debated in this body for about 18 months, and practically every Senator who was here before the 4th of March 1933 is familiar with its provisions, and the report describes in some detail the measure which is now pending. Therefore, unless there is some desire on the part of Members who are not familiar with this proposed legislation to have it explained, I see no reason why the proponents of the legislation should take up time in useless speeches when everyone knows what the bill contains.

I have therefore asked the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Michigan whether they would be ready to proceed tomorrow, not in an effort to embarrass them by asking them to present their substitutes before they are ready to do so but simply as a means of expediting the final consideration of this proposal. I will say to the Senator from Utah that so far as the Philippine independence bill is concerned, there is nothing more that can be done tonight.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. KING. The substitute which I shall offer consists of the bill which I have heretofore introduced, and which is now, I think, in the hands of the committee. If it may be treated as a substitute, to save a reprint, I shall not formally offer it as a substitute now in order that it may be printed, but shall offer the original bill as a substitute tomorrow when the measure shall be taken up.

Mr. TYDINGS. I see no objection to that being done.

Mr. KING. May I ask if there is any parliamentary objection to that course?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is no objection to it, if the Senator in charge of the bill does not object.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not object. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that the proponents of the bill are now ready to vote on any substitutes, and we have asked those who have substitutes to have them ready tomorrow.

The bill now pending, Mr. President, has already been referred to all the outstanding leaders of both factions in the Philippines. The old commission which was here and negotiated the first bill, headed by Speaker Roxas and floor leader Osmeña, and the new commission headed by Senator Quezon, which is now in Washington, have given their assent to this bill.

I have a telegram from the majority leader of the Philippine Senate and the speaker of the house of representatives, which reads as follows:

MANILA, March 13, 1934.

Senator TYDINGS,
Washington, D.C.:

On behalf of the majority of the senate and of the house of representatives we endorse that McDuffie-Tydings bill and request that it be passed by Congress. If said bill is enacted into law during the life of the present legislature, it will be accepted by the said legislature.

PAREDES,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
RECTOR,
Majority Floor Leader of the Senate.

In addition to that, Senator Quezon, heading the present mission, has written me a memorandum in which he has acquiesced in the passage of this bill.

I also have another telegram which I should like to read, as follows:

MANILA, February 24, 1934.

Senator TYDINGS,
Washington, D.C.:

Replying your last cablegram, I agree to extension of Hawes-Cutting law, provided same is amended according to your proposal by eliminating entirely military reservations and leaving naval reservations for settlement by agreement between United States and Philippine republic, and on your assurances to later consider sympathetically other objections to act.

SUMULONG.

I understand he is one of the prominent Filipino senators. I have a telegram from General Aguinaldo, the very popular leader of the Filipino people, which reads as follows:

MANILA, February 24, 1934.

Senator TYDINGS,
Washington, D.C.:

In reply to your cablegram and in view of your commitment therein to amend Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act, completely eliminating military reservations, leaving provisions regarding naval reservations for settlement by agreement between United States and Philippine republic, and in consideration of your promise to consider sympathetically amendments to other objectionable provisions of law, I agree with your proposition to extend time of act.

General AGUINALDO.

I also have several telegrams, which I will not read, from Senator Osmeña and from former Speaker Roxas, endorsing this bill; and I am in a position to say that if this bill is passed by the Congress without amendment, the Philippine leaders of all factions in the islands have agreed to accept it, and Philippine independence will be on its way. Furthermore, I am advised that the legislature will be called into session within 60 days after the bill shall be passed, and that within 90 days from the date of its passage the Philippine Legislature will have accepted it.

Therefore, as we have a measure on which the President of the United States, the War Department, and the Navy Department are in accord, one that has already passed the House of Representatives, and upon which all elements of the Philippine people are united, I think we ought to stick by this measure, and make an end to the talk of Philippine independence by actually putting into effect the machinery which will carry out the 33-year-old promise of several Presidents and of Congress itself.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a telegram from Senator Osmeña and Speaker Roxas to Commissioner Guevara, a further telegram from Senator Osmeña, and a letter addressed to me from the War Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegrams and letter are as follows:

MARCH 16, 1934.

Commissioner GUEVARA,
Washington, D.C.:

Kindly transmit immediately TYDINGS, McDUFFIE, and advise HAWES: "Reenactment Hawes-Cutting law highly satisfactory all groups that favored acceptance said law. We request early passage Tydings-McDuffie bill embodying President Roosevelt's recommendations. Filipino people deeply grateful to America and fully appreciate your unselfish labors in behalf their independence and welfare."

OSMEÑA.
ROXAS.

MANILA, March 16, 1934.

Senator TYDINGS,
Washington, D.C.:

Mass meeting today people Cebu ask me convey you and members Committee Territories with their greetings, their gratitude favorable action your bill extending Hawes-Cutting law until October to allow Filipino people pass on acceptance at June elections. They deeply appreciate your generous response our petitions for extension, thus reaffirming your position favorable Philippine aspirations and interest taken during consideration last Congress Hawes-Cutting bill. They also appreciate your plan extending law with military and naval reservations amendment to clarify Hawes-Cutting law and make it acceptable to practically all Philippine groups. People Cebu respectfully request Senate early approval extension bill.

OSMEÑA.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF INSULAR AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 3, 1934.

Hon. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Chairman Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: The following message for you is contained in a radiogram, dated March 3, 1934, received in this Bureau today from the Governor General of the Philippine Islands:

"Senator TYDINGS: President's message very satisfactory. We are deeply grateful to you and other friends for continued unselfish support cause our independence. We congratulate you success your efforts revive Hawes-Cutting law.

"OSMEÑA.
"ROXAS."

Very sincerely yours,

CREED F. COX, Chief of Bureau.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERTON in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BULOW, from the Committee on Civil Service, reported favorably the nomination of L. D. White, of Illinois, to be a Civil Service Commissioner, vice George R. Wales, deceased.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MARCH 20, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Breathe upon us, O Spirit of Christ; pervade us and guide us to wise decisions. Do Thou nourish us with believing hearts, together with goodness, patience, and fidelity. We pray that we may be such servants of the public that our characters shall count and tell for great moral forces. Heavenly Father, it is Thy presence that gives a new turn to our thoughts and smoothes away the care and perplexity that often sit upon troubled brows. Thou, whom we must love and obey, point out to us the supreme obligations of the twofold commandment on which hang the law and the prophets. Almighty God, Thou who art over all, do not leave our country in this hour of perilous crisis; allow it not to fall a victim to selfishness and ungoverned passions. O subdue jealousies, obstinacies, and hot-tempered natures of whatever station or rank and save the day for country, home, and peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2002. An act for the relief of R. S. Howard Co., Inc.; and

S. 2999. An act to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8134) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency be permitted to sit during sessions of the House today and tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

INVESTIGATION REGARDING RATES CHARGED FOR ELECTRICAL ENERGY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 74, authorizing necessary funds to conduct investigation regarding rates charged for electrical energy and to prepare report thereon; and move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I believe this is too important a measure to be considered under unanimous consent.

This bill provides that the Federal Trade Commission shall secure comprehensive information as to electric rates all over our country. At the present time practically every State has a public-utility commission; I feel sure the Federal Trade Commission can get this information from the State public-utility commissions.

Furthermore, what good will this information do? Public-utility rates are flexible; they are changed from time to time. Every day we hear of a rate being changed in some locality throughout the country.

This resolution does not provide that the Federal Trade Commission shall take into account production costs; it merely asks that the flat rates in every city and locality in the United States be made available.

Furthermore, it was estimated by the committee, when we considered this bill, that it would cost the Federal Government anywhere from $50,000 to $300,000 to get this information. Now, if it were something that would be of value, of importance, to the Federal Government in the study of the electric-rate question I do not think I would object; but inasmuch as the rates are flexible and being changed from time to time, and the Federal Government can now get this information from the State commissions I can see no reason why we should spend a lot of money at this time in getting these rates.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in the first place I want to say to the gentleman who raises objection to taking up this bill by unanimous consent, that I was recognized yesterday to move to suspend the rules and pass this bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] asked that it not be done because the gentleman from Ohio was not here. Now, the gentleman from Ohio evidently misunderstood my motion. I asked unanimous consent that it be taken up and I be recognized to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill. This would give 20 minutes debate to each side and would require a two-thirds vote to pass it.

Let me say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] in answer to what he said about rates, that he is entirely mistaken about our being able to obtain these rates throughout the country. This information has been asked not only by the Federal Power Commission, but also it has been asked in response to inquiries from Members of Congress, from Senators, from various State organizations, and various State commissions. Many of the States have no commissions at all.

I have here a statement regarding the public-utility interests to the effect that the utility operators themselves are interested in securing this information, which they cannot get. This is the only way to get a thorough survey of these rates. I have a letter from the Federal Power Commission in which this language is used:

Last week I had a discussion with one of the more intelligent executives of a large holding company group who told me that his organization was now engaged in a thorough study of rates charged by their operating companies with a view to further complete revision. He strongly favored the rate investigation proposed in your resolution on the ground that it would give the private companies information on the basis of which they could determine how nearly their rates were in line with rates charged in similar communities.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. It is misleading information to give to the public the rates unless consideration is given to operating costs; and the Federal Trade Commission is not going to do that.

It is not empowered to do that; and, furthermore, I do not recall any testimony before our committee when we considered this bill that the Federal Power Commission requested this investigation. Of course, it is true that every Government bureau today is reaching out for more power. They want more money to spend, and it is only natural they would not oppose an investigation of this kind, because it means spending more of the public money.

Mr. RANKIN. The Federal Power Commission makes this statement:

In view of the facts set forth regarding the inadequacy of the published information relative to rates charged for electric service and the extent of the demand for such information by Federal, State, and municipal agencies, industries and citizens, and the advantages to all parties mentioned of securing such information, it is our opinion that the investigation and report provided for in House Joint Resolution 236—

Which is the same as Senate Resolution 74—

would be of inestimable value and in the public interest.

That is the statement of the Federal Power Commission. They are very much interested; and I may say to the gentleman that to object now would only have the effect of postponing the passage of this measure for 2 weeks. The Speaker has already agreed to recognize me on the first suspension day; but if we are going to compile these rates, we would like to get started. We have been working on this proposition for several months. Time is passing, and for this reason I sincerely trust that the gentleman will not interpose an objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I call the attention of the Speaker and the House to the fact that in the third section of this resolution there should be a point of order made against providing for an appropriation in the manner it does. This states:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized to make available from the funds which have been or may be appropriated for expenditure subject to his discretion an amount which, in his judgment, is necessary for the purpose of this investigation and preparation of a report.

This is in violation of the rules of the House and the resolution should not be taken up, Mr. Speaker, under suspension of the rules, because if it is then, of course, the House has no recourse in protecting its rules in the passage of this resolution.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, that is an Executive proposition. The executive department proposes to use these funds to finance the taking of this census. As far as this being out of order is concerned, this is the first I have heard of that proposition, and the gentleman, of course, is at liberty to make his point of order when the resolution comes up for consideration, but this is in the interest of all the American people, and I sincerely trust the gentleman from Ohio will not object to its consideration.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BEEDY. We have been appropriating each year the sum of $100,000 or more to the Federal Trade Commission to investigate public utilities. As I understand it, they are now making an investigation not only of the rates but of the financial structure of all these utilities. They are going to file a report. They have been at it for 3 years in pursuance of a resolution introduced by Senator Walsh, of Montana. What is the need for this resolution?

Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] that this is not an investigation. It is a census of all the power rates throughout the country. We had this matter up awhile ago and it was proposed to have this census taken by the Bureau of the Census, but after going over the matter thoroughly the administration came to the conclusion that this should be done by the Federal Power Commission. This is not an investigation. This is merely a census to secure and compile information.

Mr. BEEDY. Is the gentleman going to object to this resolution?

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman from Ohio is going to object. The administration, through the Federal Power Commission, said that no one had asked for this investigation. They stated they could use it. Here is a municipal power company in your town that charges the consumer so much, and one in my town that charges so much. The cost to produce power is and will not be shown. What is to be gained by this knowledge, which will cost the Government from $50,000 to $300,000?

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. RANKIN. May I answer the gentleman?

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BEEDY. This is a resolution to authorize the necessary funds to conduct an investigation.

Mr. RANKIN. To gather and compile light and power rates.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to the resolution's being considered by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point and to insert certain statistics and information furnished me by the Federal Power Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to understand why the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] should so vigorously oppose this resolution. If there are two States in the Union in which the people are burdened with exorbitant light and power rates, they are Ohio and North Carolina.

This resolution is in the interest of all the American people. It is to their interest to know what rates are being charged for lights and power in other places in order that they may be able to determine whether or not their rates are reasonable. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] talks about the people already having this information. As a matter of fact, if this information were available now, nobody would be asking for this resolution.

I hold in my hand a copy of NELA, the rate book of the National Electric Light Association. It gives the electric light and power rates in only a few towns in Ohio, and they are so written that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] himself could not tell what they mean. But a thorough analysis of those rates reveals that the people in Ohio are paying about seven times as much for lights and power as is being charged under the T.V.A. yardstick in the Muscle Shoals area; or at Tacoma, Wash., where they have a municipally owned plant; or in Windsor, Winnipeg, or Ontario, Canada. The same condition prevails in North Carolina. Even though a portion of that State is in the area covered by the Tennessee Valley Authority, yet the light and power rates to the ultimate consumers average from five to seven times as much as the ultimate consumers have to pay for electric energy obtained from Muscle Shoals under the T.V.A. yardstick.

It is just as necessary to secure and compile these rates for the information of the general public as it is to take a census of industry or agriculture, or to tabulate and publish rates and charges of any other kind. Public-utilities concerns that are doing a legitimate business are interested in getting this information. The people are interested in it. Congressmen and Senators are interested in it. The administration is interested in it. The various State utilities commissions are interested in it. The officials of States, counties, and municipalities in States having no public utilities commissions are all interested in getting this information.

I serve notice now that I will call this measure up under suspension of the rules 2 weeks from today. The Speaker has already agreed to recognize me for this purpose at that time. I am sure that if every Member of the House will look into this proposition and see the importance of the passage of this resolution without delay, it will go through almost unanimously.

I insert below some memoranda furnished me by the National Power Survey of the Federal Power Commission, together with statistics on light and power rates in the State of Nebraska.

RATES CHARGED FOR ELECTRICAL ENERGY IN THE UNITED STATES—HOUSE
JOINT RESOLUTION 236

MARCH 15, 1934.

The rates charged for electrical energy in the United States have never been investigated or compiled and tabulated by any official body. Therefore, except for tabulations by an agency of the privately owned utilities, the Edison Electric Institute, and then only of the rates in the larger communities, not much is known about the rates being charged and how those in one community compare with those in another.

The necessity for making a rate survey of the electrical utilities of the entire country originates from frequent requests from Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate, as well as municipalities, State officials, private citizens, and various State public-utilities commissions for information as to rates being charged in other parts of the country for similar service in similar communities. The Federal Power Commission is now unable to supply this information except as it relates to rates charged by the comparatively small number of projects licensed under the Federal Power Act, the larger number of which are located in the Western States.

The questions asked relate not only to the average price per kilowatt-hour for the different classes of service but also to the form of rate and the amount sold under each block or step. A mere tabulation of rates in itself is not sufficient for comparison, as many rate structures cannot be compared except by scientific analysis. The average person is confused by the technological terms and the various rate forms, bonuses and penalties, charges for demands on various bases and energy charges on different bases, charges for service rendered and for "readiness to serve", "on-peak" and "off-peak" service, "night riders", "summer riders", coal clauses, power-factor clauses, and what-nots. An investigation and report on this perplexing problem of electrical rates by the Federal Power Commission is, therefore, warranted for the following reasons:

1. To enable the public-utilities commissions of the various States to study the rates charged for electrical energy in other States and to devise rates to suit the character of the service that will promote a wider and more extensive use of electricity in the home, in the factory, on the farm, and for municipal and public purposes, such as street and highway lighting, municipal waterworks, pumping, etc.

2. To enable any citizen of one community to determine what rates are being charged in another similar community, or nearby community, where conditions are approximately the same.

3. To enable industrial and commercial concerns with large power requirements to pick out suitable communities for establishing factories and industrial plants or branch establishments where the lower cost of electrical energy may be quite an important element in the selection of a suitable site. The location of branches of industries in smaller communities would be of considerable help in alleviating the distress in those communities dependent largely on agriculture.

4. To enable a farmer in any one part of the country to ascertain the cost of electric service and assist him in obtaining complete electric service on the farm, thus relieving a lot of the drudgery and hard work, and making farm life more enjoyable and comparable with that of the city or suburban dweller.

5. To enable the electrical utilities to devise more uniform and simple rate structures that will promote a wider and more extensive use of electricity, with the end in view of the complete electrification of the home, of the store and commercial establishment, of the factory, of industrial plant, and of the farm.

There are in the United States approximately 15,500 communities which are receiving electric service from privately operated companies or municipal plants. The total number of customers served at the end of 1933 was 24,295,000. Of these 20,006,000 were domestic consumers and approximately 710,000 were rural customers. There were 3,697,000 commercial customers, chiefly stores, office buildings, and small shops, and 525,000 large industrial users. This service is supplied by 1,627 privately operated companies and 1,824 publicly operated plants.

The only published information regarding rates charged from electricity in all sections of the United States is that contained in the rate book of the Edison Electric Institute. This compilation covers, however, only 473 cities having a population of 20,000 or over. This is only 3 percent of the communities which receive electric service.

The inadequacy of the information published in the Edison Institute rate book is further indicated by consideration of the communities reported upon in the several States. For example, the rate book covers only 1 community in Delaware and Idaho; 2 in Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, and South Dakota; 3 in Nebraska, Utah, Vermont, and Wyoming; and 4 in Arizona, Colorado, Maryland, Mississippi, and South Carolina.

Only the rates charged by private companies are given in the Edison Institute rate book. No rates are quoted for any municipal or publicly operated plant.

The most serious deficiency, however, is the fact that no published information whatever is available with respect to rates charged for electric service in the 15,000 communities which have a population of less than 20,000 or in the rural sections of the country. Generally speaking, it is the people who live in these smaller towns and on the farms who pay the highest rates for electricity.

To illustrate the complexity of certain of these rates, it is necessary only to quote the condensed rate schedule for general lighting and power of the Rochester Gas & Electric Corporation as set forth in the rate book of the Edison Electric Institute:

AVAILABILITY ALTERNATING AND DIRECT CURRENT SERVICE FOR ALL PURPOSES

Rate, three part. 1. Alternating current: Customer charge, $3. Demand charge: Peak, $1.70; off-peak, $1.80 per kilowatt first 25 kilowatts of demand; peak, $1.35; off-peak, $1.40 per kilowatt next 50 kilowatts of demand; peak, 50 cents; off-peak 50 cents per kilowatt excess. Energy charge, 1.3 cents kilowatt-hour first 200 hours use of actual off-peak demand (not as calculated under power factor); 0.65 cent kilowatt-hour excess.

2. Direct current: Customer charge, $3. Demand charge: Peak, $1.85; off-peak, $2 per kilowatt first 25 kilowatts of demand; peak, $1.45; off-peak, $1.60 per kilowatt next 50 kilowatts of demand; peak, 55 cents; off-peak, 60 cents per kilowatt excess. Energy charge, 1.45 cents kilowatt-hour first 200 hours use of off-peak demand; 0.8 cent kilowatt-hour excess.

Delayed payment charge, 10 days, 10 percent on first $5; 2 percent on excess.

Primary discount: 1. Five percent from total net bill where energy is purchased at 4,150 volts and customer furnishes any transformers required. 2. Six percent from total net bill where energy is purchased at 11,000 volts and customer furnishes any transformers required.

Determination of demand, by measurement, 30-minute interval, as follows:

Peak demand: In each of the 4 peak months is highest demand determined in the month. In each of the other 8 months is average of the peak demands in the 4 peak months. (Where customer starts service in a month other than a peak month, his peak demand for each month up to first peak month is estimated and bills are adjusted at end of the 4 peak months on basis of average of peak demands determined in the 4 peak months.)

Off-peak demand: In each month is highest demand determined in the month.

Power factor: For 60 cycles, alternating-current service, where customer has a demand for 150 kilowatts or over, the off-peak demand for billing purposes is taken as 80 percent of the off-peak demand in kilovoltage. Total kilowatt-hours to be taken in no case at less than 50 percent of the kilovoltage-hour during that month.

Peak months: November to February, both inclusive.

Minimum charge: Customer charge plus peak demand and off-peak demand charges for 20 percent of service capacity contracted for.

Coal clause (applicable to both direct and alternating current): When the number of kilowatt-hours generated by steam during the month does not exceed 20 percent of total kilowatt-hours generated and purchased, the energy charge is increased 0.02 cent per kilowatt-hour for each 40-cent increase above $5 per short ton of bituminous coal, f.o.b. cars, Rochester, N.Y.

For each 10-percent increase in the percentage of steam generation over 20 percent, the adjustment in the energy charge is increased 0.01 cent per kilowatt-hour over the 20 percent basis of 0.02 cent per kilowatt-hour.

THOMAS R. TATE,
Director National Power Survey,
Federal Power Commission.

ELECTRIC LIGHT RATE SCHEDULES—S.J.RES. 74

A tabulation of residence lighting rates will not necessarily show the comparison between rates in similar communities. An outstanding example of this is indicated in the attached tabulation of electric light rate schedules, as of June 20, 1927, for privately operated electric light and power systems of the State of Nebraska, which was compiled by V. L. Hollister from answers to a questionnaire. This tabulation does not indicate either the average rate per kilowatt-hour or the comparison of average monthly bills for different consumptions. It does, however, show some outstanding differences in rates in some of the smaller communities in the State. In many cases a service charge is added for

In Thedford, a town of 260 inhabitants, there is no service charge, but the first kilowatt-hour is sold at 25 cents and the excess at 15 cents, the minimum monthly bill being $2.50. In some of the smaller communities like Alda, a town of 250 inhabitants, all electricity is sold at 11 cents per kilowatt-hour. At Amherst, with 259 population, all electricity is sold at 15 cents per kilowatt-hour. Bellevue, with a population of 695, has a flat rate of only 8 cents per kilowatt-hour. Hayes Center, with a population of 265, has a flat rate, but the rate per kilowatt-hour is not shown. In Odessa, a town of only 55 inhabitants, the first 50 kilowatt-hours are sold at 6 cents, the next 100 kilowatt-hours at 5 cents, and the excess above 150 kilowatt-hours at 4 cents. In Weeping Water, a town with a population of 1,084, the first 48 kilowatt-hours are sold at 7 cents and the excess at 4 cents, but in addition there is a service charge of $1, for which the customer receives no electricity.

Step rates, indicated with an asterisk, are shown for the following towns: Harvard, population 991; Holdrege, population 3,108; Howe, population 200; Oak, population 201; Oconto, population 250; St. Edward, population 1,002; and Valentine, population 1,596.

A tabulation of rates for residence service, like the one attached, is a very simple matter but, as pointed out, it does not offer a comparison of rates in similar communities and is difficult to understand without scientific analysis. When rates for commercial lighting and power and general light and power and for industrial use are considered, it is almost impossible to prepare any adequate comparison without graphical analysis, and detailed studies of the respective rate structures and of the load characteristics of different industries, commercial establishments, and power users.

INCREASE OF THE NAVY

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight to file a conference report on the bill H.R. 6604, to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

LIQUOR LAWS OF HAWAII

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2728) to repeal Federal liquor prohibition laws to the extent they are in force in the Territory of Hawaii. Later I shall make a similar request with respect to Alaska.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman how much time he is going to consume on this matter?

Mr. McDUFFIE. None whatsoever, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall want 5 minutes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I shall be pleased to yield the gentleman 5 minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman whether there is a law in Hawaii which would require this matter to be submitted to a referendum.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Not that I know of, sir.

Mr. McFADDEN. It is my understanding there is such a law, and the Delegate from Hawaii can perhaps tell us definitely about that.

Mr. McCANDLESS. There is no such law, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. STRONG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am a member of the Committee on the Territories. These two bills were presented to the committee, and I filed a minority report objecting to them. I am still very much opposed to either one of these bills being passed, but I realize I can only prevent the consideration of this bill for a few days, because both of these bills can be brought before the House in the regular course of procedure. Therefore, I shall not object, but will ask for some time on the bill when it is taken up by the House.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, S. 2728, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to prohibit the sale, manufacture, and importation of intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Hawaii during the period of the war, except as herein-after provided", approved May 23, 1918 (U.S.C., title 48, sec. 520), is repealed.

SEC. 2. Title II of the National Prohibition Act, as amended and supplemented, and the act entitled "An act to provide revenue by the taxation of certain nonintoxicating liquor, and for other purposes", approved March 22, 1933, except such provisions of such title and of such act of March 22, 1933, as are in force and effect in the States, are repealed to the extent such title and such act of March 22, 1933, are in force and effect in the Territory of Hawaii.

Sec. 3. Section 13 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 1, sec. 29) shall not apply with respect to any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under any provision repealed by this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 3, strike out the word "are" and insert in lieu thereof the words "shall be retained."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with my promise, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, my unalterable position against liquor saloons is well known to every Member of this Congress. I have been, and I am now, and I always will be against the legalized liquor traffic and open saloons.

There is no way of stopping this measure. If we objected to its coming up by unanimous consent, the Committee on Rules would promptly grant a special rule providing for its prompt consideration. An objection now would merely delay it a few hours. Therefore, I am not wasting the time of this House with any futile objection. I accept the inevitable. The present Membership of this House believes in liquor and is going to provide means of getting it. There is no parliamentary way to stop them.

I am of the opinion that the best and surest and quickest way to bring about a sane reaction against intoxicating liquors and open saloons is to let our wet friends run rampant for a while; let them run wide open; let them play deuces wild; let them have it around every corner, at every crossroads, close to every schoolhouse, just outside every church portal, contiguous to every home. Then fathers and mothers will awake. Then ministers will again be courageous. Then protection of the home will again be important. The safety of the family will become paramount. Love of wife and husband, daughter and son, will be placed above sordid gain and unrestrained appetite.

I feel impelled to use my time this morning to speak on the unpopular side of another question. I feel that somebody should denounce the deliberate attempt on the part of the American Federation of Labor to involve this Nation in a strike that is inexcusable, is unpatriotic, and is unthinkable. It is almost criminal to persuade and influence 250,000 well-paid, well-cared-for, satisfied heads of families to leave their jobs, stir up strife and animosity, and bring suffering on their wives and little children.

This is no time for strikes. This is no time for trouble makers. This is no time for agitators and walking delegates. This is no time for selfish groups to ignore and disregard the Nation's welfare and the best interests of the American people as a whole.

The President of the United States has done much for labor. In the interest of men who work, our President has disorganized every business in the United States and taken same from the private conduct and control of owners and reorganized same along national lines to benefit labor. Every business in the United States has made sacrifices. These sacrifices were to benefit labor. It was a costly change for business. Labor was the beneficiary. Has it no gratitude? Does not labor appreciate what the President has done for it? Does it now want to harrass the President? Is the American Federation of Labor willing to throw monkey wrenches into the Nation's machinery? Is it willing to clog everything up? Is it willing to be disloyal?

This Congress has appropriated billions of dollars to help labor. It has fed the unemployed. Congress has housed millions of laborers without jobs. Congress has clothed the wives and children of laborers who could not find work. Congress has created work that laborers should not be idle.

Is not the American Federation of Labor grateful? Has it not any appreciation? Does it not realize that it owes something to society? Is it altogether selfish? Just why is it not willing to go along with the President, and lend him a helping hand?

LXXVIII—312

The press this morning brings us the almost unbelievable information that all of these 250,000 workers are well paid, with their wages increased more than 50 percent during the last year, and in many cases higher than they were in 1929, that their hours have been shortened to an annual average of 36 hours per week, and that practically all these 250,000 workers are well satisfied, yet that the American Federation of Labor is seeking to make a card from one of its unions the sole condition of employment, and insisting that it shall receive about $6,000,000 in union dues taken out of the employees' salaries, and paid direct to unions by employers.

I believe in organization. I believe that every worker has the right to join a union. I believe that union workers have the right of collective bargaining. I am sympathetic with all the trials and troubles of men who labor. I want to see their conditions bettered in every possible way.

At the same time, I believe that workers who do not want to join a union have the inherent right not to join. And I believe that an American business man has the right to run his business ununionized if he wants to, and to employ men who are not unionized, if he can find them, and if they are satisfied to work for him. And I do not believe that the American Federation of Labor has any right whatever to interfere and to break up a friendly business relation existing between employer and employees when all are perfectly satisfied and content.

Stirring up strife and trouble now is disloyal to the President. It is disloyal to the Nation. It is putting the selfishness of a group above the interest of the Nation. It is letting the tail wag the dog. It is saying that less than 5,000,000 organized into a group are more important than the unorganized 115,000,000 people of the United States.

It is the duty of the American Federation of Labor to work in harmony with the President. It is its duty to show some gratitude. It is its duty to show some appreciation. It is its duty to put country above group. It is its duty to abandon greed and selfishness. It is its duty to go along with the Government in its efforts to bring about a recovery, and bring about better conditions, and I am not in sympathy with this selfish stand taken by the American Federation of Labor.

The American Federation of Labor ought to call off this strike. They ought to admonish these men that this is no time to strike; that this is no time to take men out of good employment and put them on the streets. This is a time to uplift rather than break down; this is a time to back the President; this is a time to back the Congress; this is a time to stand firm for the Government and show loyalty to the Commander in Chief of this Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Does not the gentleman think the American Federation of Labor is trying to have the principles outlined in the N.R.A. enforced?

Mr. BLANTON. It is not the N.R.A. enforcer. Let the President handle that. The President started this N.R.A. The President knows more about it than the American Federation of Labor. The American people are represented by the President. The President is representing the 120,000,000 people as a whole, while the American Federation of Labor is representing one little group of less than 5,000,000 men. Every single act of the American Federation of Labor just now is an action selfishly taken for a little group of citizens, while every heartbeat of the President is a beat for the 120,000,000 people of this Nation. [Applause.]

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LIQUOR LAWS OF ALASKA

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill, S. 2729, to repeal an act of Congress entitled "An act to prohibit the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes", approved February 14, 1917.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act to prohibit the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes", approved February 14, 1917, contained in United States Statutes at Large, volume 39, Public Laws, pages 903 to 909, and the act of Congress approved October 28, 1919, commonly called the "National Prohibition Act", and all acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, insofar as they apply to the Territory of Alaska, be, and the same hereby are, repealed: Provided, That the Governor of the Territory of Alaska, from and after the passage and approval of this act, shall have the power and authority to grant pardons to persons theretofore convicted of violations of the aforesaid act of February 14, 1917.

SEC. 2. That notwithstanding the repeal of the said acts no spirituous or intoxicating liquors shall be manufactured or sold in the Territory of Alaska, except under such regulations and restrictions as the Territorial legislature shall prescribe, and the legislative power and authority conferred upon the legislative assembly of the Territory of Alaska by the act of Congress entitled "An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes", approved August 24, 1912, shall be, and hereby is, extended to include any legislation pertaining to the manufacture or sale of spirituous or intoxicating liquor within the said Territory and any provision contained in the said act of August 24, 1912, in conflict herewith, is hereby expressly repealed: Provided, however, That the legislature of the Territory of Alaska shall have full power and authority to delegate the powers hereby conferred to any board or commission designated or created by the legislature for such purpose, which powers shall include the power to make rules and regulations governing the manufacture, barter, sale, or possession of spirituous or intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Alaska, to prescribe the qualifications of those who are to engage in the manufacture, barter, sale, or possession of intoxicating liquors in the said Territory, and to prescribe license fees and excise taxes therefor: Provided, That nothing in this act shall in any way repeal, conflict, or interfere with the public general laws of the United States imposing taxes on the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for the purpose of revenue and known as the "internal-revenue laws."

SEC. 3. That the act of the Territorial Legislature of Alaska entitled "An act to create the board of liquor control and prescribe its powers and duties", approved May 4, 1933, contained in the Session Laws of Alaska, 1933, being chapter 109 thereof, at pages 193-194, be, and the same hereby is, ratified and approved, and the board thereby created shall have the powers and the authority conferred upon it by the said act. And any person, firm, or corporation who shall violate any of the rules or regulations prescribed by the said board governing the manufacture, sale, barter, and possession of intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Alaska, or the qualifications of those engaging in the manufacture, sale, barter, and possession of such liquors in the said Territory, or the payment of license fees and excise taxes, therefor, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished as provided in section 2072 of the Compiled Laws of Alaska.

SEC. 4. That sections 462 to 478, both inclusive, of act of Congress entitled "An act to define and punish crime in the district of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said district", approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stat.L. 1337-1341), as amended by the act of June 6, 1900 (31 Stat.L. 332), and by the act of February 6, 1909 (35 Stat.L. 601-603), be, and the same hereby are, repealed.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, strike all of said line after the figures "909"; strike all of lines 8, 9, and 10; and strike all of line 1, on page 2, down to and including the word "repealed", and insert in lieu thereof the following: "is repealed. Title II of the National Prohibition Act, as amended and supplemented, and the act entitled "An act to provide revenue by the taxation of certain nonintoxicating liquor, and for other purposes", approved March 22, 1933, except such provisions of such title and of such act of March 22, 1933, as shall be retained in force and effect in the States, are repealed to the extent such title and such act of March 22, 1933, are in force and effect in the Territory of Alaska."

Page 4, line 13, add a new section to be known as "section 5", reading as follows:

"SEC. 5. Section 13 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 1, sec. 29) shall not apply with respect to any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under any provision repealed by this act."

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas, a member of the committee, who has definite objections to the sale of liquor anywhere in the world.

Mr. STRONG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I feel that I have imposed on the time of this body very little. I have tried to be modest in all my actions. I am a member of the Committee on the Territories. As I said a while ago, I filed a minority report from that committee against this bill. One of the members of the committee, a Delegate from Alaska, came to me last night and asked me to please not object to the unanimous consent in calling this bill up. I said to Mr. DIMOND, "If you will name one good thing that the liquor traffic has performed in this Nation of ours, I will not object to your unanimous-consent request to consider the bill tomorrow morning." He frankly admitted that he could not do it.

I realize that to object to the unanimous-consent request to take up this bill would only delay the matter a few days, because he could bring the bill before the House in the regular order, and there is no question but that it would pass the House overwhelmingly. Therefore, I raise no objection to the consideration of this bill at this time.

One of the members of the committee asked me why I objected to this bill. "Well", I said, "I would not go into an argument, but I will say this to you: I am in favor of the home, the school, and the church—three great institutions established by the Supreme Ruler of this universe, and these great institutions must exist and prosper if we are to have a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people. I ask any Member of this House to stand up and deny that the liquor traffic has not destroyed homes, cheated children of the opportunity of an education, and retarded the growth of the church ever since it was established on this earth for the salvation of the people. Now, if you can stand up and deny that the liquor traffic has not ruined, as far as it could, these three great institutions, I will not bring in a minority report on this bill."

I am opposed to this bill. The gentleman from Alaska says that the people there are largely in favor of the bill. I say: "You are here as the representative of your people, to render them all the service you can; but if this bill could be defeated before this House, it would be the greatest service that has ever been rendered to the people of Alaska." [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, am I in control of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I want to yield 2 minutes to the gentlemen from New York [Mr. CELLER], who has promised that he would confine his remarks to this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is not this bill being considered by unanimous consent, and is it not in order to move to strike out the last word?

The SPEAKER. It is being considered in the House, not in Committee of the Whole, and it is not in order to move to strike out the last word.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak briefly in connection with the Federal Alcohol Control Administration, which, with the passage of this bill, has control over the sale of alcoholic liquor in the Territory of Alaska, as it has practically over the sale of all liquor in the United States. This F.A.C.A. is a sort of fungus growth. It grows larger and is expanding in all directions. It has seized upon functions belonging primarily to the Bureau of Internal Revenue, Bureau of Customs, and the Department of Agriculture. It grows by what it feeds on. We should look to the House and the appropriate committees for constructive and appropriate legislation in respect to liquor and its control and the future status of the F.A.C.A. This F.A.C.A. was supposed to be an interim bureau. The industry has now grown to large proportions and there is no necessity for an interim bureau at the present time. Our Democratic platform said that the liquor traffic and the control thereof should be relegated to the States. We have set up a bureau which gives this Federal Government a strangle hold on the wine and liquor industries, which is preventing its proper and normal growth, and these undue restrictions coming out in the form of regulations from day to day are giving aid and comfort to the bootleggers and racketeers over all the country. Later I shall put into the Record specific and detailed proof with reference thereto. It suffices to say that most, if not all, of the regulations cannot be enforced. There is no basis in law for them. There are no—cannot be any—appropriations.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact that before the repeal of prohibition we could get cheaper and better liquor from the racketeers than we are today getting from the legitimate dealers?

Mr. CELLER. I have no quarrel with anyone connected with the F.A.C.A. I believe them honest and faithful servants. However, I also believe them enthusiastically misguided. The greater and more rigid the regulations the F.A.C.A. put forth the more romantic they make liquor—the more tempting—the nearer they approach prohibition and all its evils.

With repeal we thought we had rid ourselves of Federal control—bureaucratic control—of liquor. The F.A.C.A., with its elaborate system of permits and strict regulations, fastens Federal bureaucratic control upon liquor.

I am for the little fellow—the independent liquor merchant. The F.A.C.A. has lent every aid to the large distillers and industrialists as against the small man. For example, in its allotment of Scotch whisky, over 50 percent of all importations went to the English Whisky Trust, called the Distillers Corporation, Ltd.

It issued a regulation limiting the bottling of straight whisky to distillers, thereby feathering the nests of distillers, to the detriment of small rectifiers and wholesalers.

Constructive legislation is absolutely essential to set the F.A.C.A. on the right track.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] to speak on this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], who has just taken his seat. He wants to destroy the Federal Alcohol Control Administration. This is a new organization, and probably it has not functioned as it should, but it has power, and I want to see that Administration exercise its power.

I am unwilling to do anything for those who control the domestic supply of liquor in this country at the present time. It is the organized group that controls the whisky that wants this Government agency abolished. Why should we do anything for this class that is gouging the public by charging unheard-of prices for whisky and who by maintaining such prices perpetuate the bootlegger. Speaking of the bootlegger, one of the arguments the gentleman from New York and I used time and time again on this floor in advocating the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, was that we wanted to get rid of the bootlegger and the racketeer. Have we done it? Who is the man or woman who will rise on this floor and tell you that the bootlegger is gone. Instead of getting him out of the picture those who would destroy the F.A.C.A., the same men, who refuse to sell the whisky they hold at a reasonable figure, not only are keeping him in the picture but also have enlarged the bootlegger's market until now he is more active than he was prior to prohibition; and this condition will remain until we get the price of whisky down to where it belongs.

I do not charge that the gentleman from New York desires to destroy this agency because it has the power to lower the price of whisky, but it seems to me that would be the motive of those who control our domestic liquor supply. The Federal Alcohol Control Administration has the power under the code to reduce the price of whisky if it finds that the price charged is so high that it causes the public to patronize the bootlegger. That is not generally known, but it is a fact. Last week I talked with officials of the F.A.C.A. about this very matter, and they told me they were now investigating the price of liquor and its effect on the bootlegger.

Insisting that the administration should exercise its powers now, I told the officials if something were not done, Congress, sooner or later, would step in and set up an organization that would do something.

The people of this country are not going to stand for making a few multimillionaires overnight. Good whisky is being sold at a profit of over 200 percent at the present time. The whisky that was in control of the same people last June, selling through the drug stores for $32 a case, is now being sold to the retailer for $68 and $70 a case. The F.A.C.A. needs no additional evidence under the code to require these same people to reduce their prices. It can be done; they have the power, for it was the officials of the F.A.C.A. that told me they had the power. Why they do not exercise that power is beyond me to understand. I do not have at the moment the code they showed me, but I read it and I know what I am talking about.

The President should step in and see that something is done; not next week or next month, but now. No legislation is needed.

It is a proper charge upon the administration as well as the Congress to protect the public from the outrageous prices being charged, which automatically reap a harvest equal to the old days for the manufacturers of illicit liquor.

I suggested that it might be well to place a tax of $100 a case on all liquor sold above a certain price. I did not press this, because I was informed that if this were done the order would go out to use all good whisky in bond for blending purposes and good whisky would not be available.

Four years ago last month the Bureau of Industrial Alcohol permitted the distillers to manufacture 2,500,000 gallons of whisky to fill up the hole made by the withdrawal of whisky for medicinal purposes. That whisky is now becoming 4 years old. Its cost at time of manufacture was not more than 40 cents a gallon. It is now being withdrawn, but try and buy this 4-year-old whisky for less than $60 a case or $20 a gallon. You just cannot do it. Look at the millions that will be made from this 2,500,000 gallons if the Government does not step in.

I insist that it would be solely in the interests of those who are in control of this whisky to destroy the F.A.C.A. as the gentleman from New York suggests.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. No; I refuse to yield. The gentleman expressed himself. I want to reiterate as strongly as I can that something must be done to destroy this clique, or gang, or whatever you want to call them, who are in control of whisky today and if it is not done then just look upon the bootlegger as a permanent fixture. Many citizens who clamored for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment are thoroughly disgusted, and if they had it to do over again they would not spend their time and money because they realize that they simply have made a small group rich overnight. Can you blame them for being disgusted when they have to pay more for good whisky than they did before the eighteenth amendment was repealed?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How about taking the duty off all foreign liquors and letting it come in here free and in that way drive out the racketeer?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is not necessary if the administration enforces the code it has the power to enforce. We should have that tax, but if that is the only way to get the price down then I say I will join the gentleman in advocating the repeal of the tariff on distilled spirits imported into this country.

My objective is to get the price of liquor down where the ordinary individual can buy it and you then will automatically drive out the bootlegger and racketeer. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the House amendments.

The amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday, tomorrow, be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NAZI PROPAGANDA

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 198, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 198

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a special committee to be composed of seven members for the purpose of conducting an investigation of (1) the extent, character, and objects of Nazi propaganda activities in the United States, (2) the diffusion within the United States of subversive propaganda that is instigated from foreign countries and attacks the principle of the form of government as guaranteed by our Constitution, and (3) all other questions in relation thereto that would aid Congress in any necessary remedial legislation.

That said special committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, by subpoena or otherwise and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman and shall be served by any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half hour to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY], to be yielded as he sees fit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for one-half hour.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, this resolution authorizes the setting up of a committee of seven, to be appointed by the Speaker, to investigate subversive foreign propaganda in this country. The Chairman of the Committee on Immigration, Mr. DICKSTEIN, is the author of the resolution. His committee or a subcommittee of his committee has given a great deal of time to the gathering of information bearing upon the subject. The Rules Committee proceeded cautiously in the consideration of the resolution. Prior to any consideration whatever upon the part of the Rules Committee this matter was submitted to the Democratic steering committee of the House. That committee held hearings and finally voted favorably on the adoption of the resolution. I mention that simply by way of calling attention to the fact that the Rules Committee was not hasty in voting out the resolution. There were two or more sessions of the Rules Committee at which witnesses testifying upon this question were heard. After the hearing was completed the Rules Committee was unanimous in the granting of a rule for the consideration of this measure.

There is nothing in the resolution that is intended as an unfriendly attitude toward any foreign country. The committee, hearing gentlemen urging the adoption of the resolution, were impressed with the importance of the proposal; and so that you may understand something of the wide interest of the country in the subject matter, I call attention to the fact that the American Federation of Labor has endorsed the resolution and is urging Congress to adopt it. I read now an excerpt from a letter of March 14 addressed to Mr. DICKSTEIN, the Chairman of the Committee on Immigration, by the chairman of the legislative committee of the Federation of Labor, in which he says:

I can assure you that the resolution is heartily favored. President Green has repeatedly criticized the methods urged by the Nazi government to destroy trade unions and persecute persons on account of race.

I ask unanimous consent that I may insert the entire letter in the RECORD as a part of my remarks and couple with it a brief speech made by Mr. Green, president of the Federation of Labor, on February 15, unless it already appears in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object, but reserve the right to object, merely to ask some questions, so that it will not be taken out of the gentleman's time. I want to ask these questions under my reservation of objection. It is admitted that this resolution will cost at least $25,000. The whole hour has been divided between those who are heartily in favor of this bill. While I heartily sympathize with the sentiment that has caused the resolution to be reported, I do think that the money will be wasted and accomplish nothing. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] has promised to give me a little time.

Mr. COX. I will take but a few more minutes, and then I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman ought to yield us generous time to discuss the question of futility and waste, especially when both sides in control of time are heartily in favor of all features of the bill. I have one very serious objection to one paragraph of this bill, although I expect to vote for the bill.

Mr. COX. I shall yield to the gentleman as liberally as I am able to.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, were these letters pertinent to the bill?

Mr. COX. Yes, sir; they are pertinent to the bill.

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I should like to be given assurance that I may have a few minutes' time, by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Let me say to the gentleman I have only two requests, aside from the request by the gentleman from Texas, and I will undertake to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TRUAX. Then I may be assured of having some time?

Mr. COX. I assure the gentleman within the limits of my ability to yield.

Mr. TRUAX. The reason I am asking the gentleman from Georgia for time is because there are two resolutions before the Committee on Rules which vitally affect every real estate owner in this country of ours, and I, for one, fail to see the imperativeness of considering this resolution before we consider the one that will relieve the landowners of this country who are being sold out day by day.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Ohio has liberty to object to the introduction of the letter from the American Federation of Labor if he sees fit.

Mr. TRUAX. I am not going to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox]?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D.C., March 14, 1934.

Hon. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN,

House of Representatives, House Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: You ask the attitude of the American Federation of Labor on House Resolution 198, which provides for an investigation of the extent, character, and object of Nazi propaganda in the United States.

I can assure you that the resolution is heartily favored. President Green has repeatedly criticized the methods urged by the Nazi government to destroy trade unions and persecute persons on account of race.

The charges of the tactics in the United States of the Nazi government demands investigation. I am enclosing an address delivered by President Green before the Aldine Club, New York City, February 14, which will give you definite reasons why an investigation should be made.

Very truly yours,

W. C. ROBERTS,
Chairman Legislative Committee
American Federation of Labor.

Enclosure.

(Address delivered by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, Wednesday evening, Feb. 14, at 8 p.m., at the Aldine Club, 200 Fifth Avenue, New York City, under the auspices of the Nonsectarian Anti-Nazi League to Champion Human Rights)

People of every age have been compelled to sacrifice, struggle, and fight for the preservation of human rights and the exercise of freedom. They lose sometimes when through political manipulation despotic appeals are made to passion, feeling, and racial sentiment. It is when these uncertain and dangerous characteristics of mankind are mobilized that tyrants win and, as a result, exercise autocratic control through the power of government.

In these modern days the hope of oppressed people, in a state where a tyrant rules, lies in the development of an aroused, keen, sensitive international conscience. When the public opinion of mankind becomes aroused in opposition to intolerance and injustice, the victims of misrule become encouraged to fight for the enjoyment of their individual rights and for the recognition of the broad principle of human brotherhood.

The masses of the people have ever cherished the principles of democracy, freedom, and justice as a priceless heritage. They do not wish nor do they ever expect to enjoy special privileges. Their economic, industrial, and social salvation lies in the enjoyment of free and unrestricted opportunity to organize for self-helpfulness, to participate in the civic and political affairs of the Nation, and to use freely their political and economic power so that they may establish a social and political order which makes for human betterment.

It is because of the devotion of working people to the doctrine of human rights and human freedom that they were shocked when they learned of the atrocious treatment which, under the Hitler regime, has been accorded working people and the Jewish residents of Germany. The aroused feeling which was created in the minds of working people throughout the world was reflected in the action taken by the British Trade-Union Congress, the trade-union organizations of Holland, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Switzerland, Spain, France, the International Federation of Trade Unions, and the American Federation of Labor, representing the working people of the United States and Canada. These trade-union organizations are the accredited instrumentalities through which the voice of labor, in the countries named, is given expression. Their feelings were aroused, their sensibilities shocked, when they learned that through a seizure of political power in Germany the Hitler regime had launched a campaign of brutal persecution against the Jewish people and had destroyed the democratic trade unions of Germany, imprisoned the officers of these trade unions, confiscated their property, and raided their offices and headquarters.

It was because of this inhuman and indefensible action practiced by the Hitler administration that these trade-union organizations, most all of them, declared in favor of an economic boycott upon German goods and German service. Every man and woman who loves liberty and who places human rights above and beyond material rights will approve and applaud the action which these economic, democratic organizations, representing the working people of so many nations throughout the world, have taken.

The indictment against the Hitler regime in Germany is direct and amazing. The facts justify the charge that defenseless, law-abiding, upright Jewish citizens of Germany were subjected to most cruel persecution because they were Jews—and for no other reason. The working people of Germany who had built up their trade unions and had acquired trade-union property were forced to witness the destruction of their trade-union institutions while their leaders were thrown into prison, not because they had committed any crime but merely because they had been identified with the bona fide trade-union movement of Germany.

Under this policy of ruthless extermination directed against trade unions, 86 buildings serving as headquarters of the national trade unions, 233 local peoples' houses, directly or indirectly connected with the German trade-union movement, 16 health centers with more than 2,000 beds, and 4 trade-union schools were confiscated by the Government. These 329 buildings represented a monetary value of 260,000,000 marks or $100,000,000.

The German Labor Bank, with 240 branches, representing a total value of 80,000,000 marks, was forcibly taken over by Nazi storm troopers. The confiscatory policy of the Government did not stop there. The German Consumers Society, which had established 46 cooperative factories, composed of 4,000,000 members, and which had acquired property and a treasury amounting to 240,000,000 marks, or nearly $100,000,000, was seized by the Government. One hundred and twenty-six newspaper dailies and 84 printing establishments, belonging to the Social-Democratic Party, representing a value of 80,000,000 marks, were taken by the Government. Added to this was the labor, sport, and culture movement with its numerous institutions, homes, and theaters, which had been built up and established as a paralleling activity of the trade-union movement.

The accumulated property of the German labor movement, which amounted to 700,000,000 marks or $270,000,000, was forcibly seized under the pretense of coordination. Reliable information shows that a great part of this property has been totally destroyed. The "peoples' houses" in Leipzig, Breslau, and Nuremberg, furnishings, libraries, and other valuables were thrown into the streets and publicly burned. Safes, belonging to the trade unions, were opened and robbed of their contents.

Recently a so-called "new German labor code" entitled "The Law for the Organization of National Labor" was promulgated. The Hitler administration, through the operation of this law, undertakes to create a relationship between employer and employee based upon the complete domination and control of industrial ownership and industrial management.

This so-called "labor code" is revolutionary and reactionary. It completely annihilates labor unions, prohibits strikes, and terminates collective bargaining, as well as the right to organize.

The new set-up created by this labor code provides for a system of shop councils which it is intended will function under the supervision of governmental labor trustees. Subject to certain exceptions, the employer is clothed with authority to fix wages and working conditions upon his own initiative although the workers are accorded the nominal but meaningless right to appeal to the State.

The structure of trade unionism erected in Germany upon the initiative of the workers and which always was regarded as the bulwark of the liberties of the German workers has been completely destroyed. A new industrial and economic order which, in operation, subjects the worker to industrial-management control reduces the worker to an industrial status approximating slavery. Not only have the German workers suffered the loss of millions in money but they have been robbed of their economic power and influence, the only weapon which free labor can use in establishing decent wages and humane conditions of employment.

While giving consideration to these facts we must bear in mind that in Germany, as in the United States, Great Britain, and other countries, large numbers of Jewish people are members of trade unions, and for that reason it is reasonable to conclude that they suffered double persecution—the persecution which was directed against them because they were Jews and that which was directed against them because they were members of trade unions. Because of the cultural and social inclination of the Jewish race the Jewish workers found an opportunity, as members of trade unions, to give expression to their idealism and pursue their quest for education. They appreciated fully the value of association with the cooperative societies, the trade-union schools, and the health centers. Through the complete annihilation of these educational and cultural instrumentalities set up by the trade-union movement of Germany many Jewish working people have been denied the only opportunities which were available for self-advancement and for the promotion of the common good.

It appears, from authentic reports received, that all the fury of racial hate toward the Jewish population of Germany reached a climax when the election of Hitler became an assured fact. Immediately there followed a campaign of persecution against Jewish people residing in Germany which, when the true record is written, will stand as a blot of shame against Hitler and those associated with him in control of the German Government. Hitler, through his campaign addresses, campaign literature, and public manifestoes, is largely responsible for the persecution which has been visited upon the Jewish people in Germany. He came into power singing his song of hate. Its refrain was echoed by those whose feelings and passion had been aroused against a race which has given to the world men of mighty intellect and genius.

The annihilation of trade unions and the persecution of the Jewish people will be regarded by all liberty-loving people as the transcendent sin committed by the Hitler administration.

The working people of our own country recognize and support the right of the citizens of Germany, as well as of all other nations, to establish their own form of government and to formulate their own political and governmental policies. It should be respected by all those who claim it as a right for themselves. In voicing a protest, therefore, against the ill treatment of the trade unions and Jewish people of Germany, labor entertains no thought of interference in the political structure or the political policies of the German Nation. Science, invention, and improved methods of transportation and communication have brought the nations of the world into closer contact and closer relationship. The people of one nation are more nearly the neighbors of another now than ever before. Our concern, therefore, in the indefensible action taken against trade unions and the Jewish race by the Hitler government is that of a neighbor who insists that if neighborly relationship and neighborly intercourse are to be maintained the Hitler government must observe those standards of national ethics due neighbor nations.

It is the apparent purpose of the Hitler regime to drive the Jewish people out of Germany through the application of economic and discriminatory pressure. One may well inquire why such a policy is pursued by those in charge of a government made up of people who have prided themselves upon their culture. Why should the Jewish people, who belong to a race which has made a record in the contribution it has made to science, education, literature, and art, be subjected to cruel, indefensible treatment in the homeland where they had cast their fortunes and where they had served their Government in a distinguished way both in peace and in war? They constituted a small minority of the German population. Their conduct had been above reproach. They were law-abiding citizens, respecting the authority of the state. They constituted no menace to the existing order. Their helpless condition at this time appeals to the sentiments and sympathies of all people who are influenced by sentiments of humanity.

The answer to it all is this: They are persecuted only because they are Jews, just as working people in Germany are persecuted because they are trade-unionists.

The working people throughout the world responded in accordance with the lofty ideals and fine traditions of trade-unionism and the trade-union movement. These organizations of labor are founded upon the broad principle of brotherhood and fraternity. They will not tolerate or countenance those primitive instincts of racial hate which consign a man or woman to punishment of the most distressing kind merely because he belongs to some other race, speaks a different language, or embraces a different creed. It is fundamental with the trade-unionists throughout the world that there shall be no discrimination against any one because of race or creed. This is a cardinal principle of the American Federation of Labor. The question of race or creed has no place in the policies, principles, or membership of this great economic institution.

Moved by the highest motives of human welfare and international good will, the American Federation of Labor expressed its opposition to the policy of persecution directed against the members of trade unions and the Jewish people of Germany. It could not remain silent and be true to its own traditions, principles, and policies. The men and women of labor who attended this convention realized that merely voicing a protest would not, of itself, be sufficient. The action of the central figure, who shaped and directed the destinies of the German Government, made it clear that any appeal to his heart, conscience, and judgment would have no effect. The opinion of labor must, of necessity, be brought home to him in some more definite and convincing way. For this reason the American Federation of Labor decided by unanimous vote that, "the American Federation of Labor join with other public-spirited organizations in our own country in officially adopting a boycott against German-made goods and German service, this boycott to continue until the German Government recognizes the right of the working people of Germany to organize into bona fide, independent trade unions of their own choosing, and until Germany ceases its oppressive policy of persecution of Jewish people."

In placing this boycott upon German goods and German service labor disavows any disposition or intention of interfering in the internal affairs of the German Government but will call upon working people and their friends, at home and abroad, to apply it until the working people of Germany are made free to organize into their own trade unions, and until the Jewish people residing in Germany are accorded the equal right, with other German citizens, to enjoy all the rights and privileges to which they are morally, legally, and politically entitled.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the American Legion is supporting this resolution and urging its adoption. I hold in my hand, Mr. Speaker, a communication dated March 19, addressed to Mr. DICKSTEIN, bearing upon the same subject matter, which I ask unanimous consent to have inserted as a part of my remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. It is signed by whom?

Mr. COX. Signed by John Thomas Taylor, vice chairman national legislative committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox]?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE,
Washington, D.C., March 19, 1934.

Hon. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN,
Chairman Immigration and Naturalization Committee,
446 Old House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have noted that House Resolution 198 is on the House Calendar and will shortly be called up for consideration by the House. The purpose of the resolution is directed at the diffusion of subversive propaganda in our country.

I desire to call to your attention the following resolution, adopted at our national convention in Chicago, October 2-5, 1933:

"Now, therefore, be it resolved by the American Legion in national convention assembled at Chicago, October 2 to 5, 1933, that it vigorously oppose the actions and teachings of all radical pacifist societies, clergymen, college and school professors who advise and urge the youth of our country to refuse to serve our country in time of war.

"Whereas the Constitution of our country protects and preserves the rights of minorities; and

"Whereas one of the basic principles for which the allied nations entered into and fought the World War was to protect minority groups from tyranny and oppression; and

"Whereas there have been attempts made to organize groups holding allegiance to a foreign government with the openly avowed purpose of furthering the principles of the Hitler government of Germany, and with the publicly announced intent to create class dissension and ill-feeling among our people; and

"Whereas such a group has actually been formed in the city of Los Angeles, Calif.: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the American Legion, in national convention duly assembled, repeats and reiterates its condemnation heretofore expressed of the formation in this country of groups holding their primary allegiance to foreign governments, and whose idea is to introduce into this Nation intolerance and bigotry, and we hereby request all proper governmental authorities to take prompt and efficient steps to prevent such attempts to undermine the principles of our free and democratic form of government."

House Resolution 198 carries out the purposes of the above resolution. I will appreciate it very much if you will call this action taken by the American Legion to the attention of the Members of the House, as we are desirous that House Resolution 198 receive House approval.

Very truly yours,

JOHN THOMAS TAYLOR,
Vice Chairman National Legislative Committee.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the Veterans of Foreign Wars are likewise urging the adoption of the resolution. In a letter of March 20, addressed to Mr. DICKSTEIN, by the commander in chief, the following statement appears:

I cannot too strongly urge the passage of necessary legislation to do away with the insidious and devastating practice of the foreign groups which are attacking our Nation. Their ramifications are so extensive that we must have congressional action to protect the fine American ideals which we all love.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the entire letter may likewise be inserted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS
OF THE UNITED STATES,
Kansas City, Mo., March 20, 1934.

Hon. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have noted with a great deal of interest your activities in behalf of the perpetuation of our American ideals through your fight against the "isms" which threaten the very foundation of this Nation.

Our organization, composed of nearly one half a million men who saw service on foreign soil or in hostile waters in time of actual war, believe that we understand what love of country really means. We have watched our comrades of all creeds and nationalities face a common foe and die for the ideals and traditions of this country.

I cannot too strongly urge the passage of necessary legislation to do away with the insidious and devastating practice of the foreign groups which are attacking our Nation. Their ramifications are so extensive that we must have congressional action to protect the fine American ideals which we all love.

Yours truly,

JAMES E. VAN ZANDT,
Commander in Chief.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I notice in this resolution the committee is authorized to sit and conduct hearings anywhere in the United States. There is no limitation on the expense. I have discussed that shortly with the author of the resolution, and he assured me it would not cost over $25,000. Has the gentleman any objection to putting a limitation in the bill that it shall not exceed $25,000 expense?

Mr. COX. That is an important proposal. This investigation is important. I would think that a full and complete investigation might be had within the limitations of the expenditure of $25,000.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course, this committee cannot get any money until it comes to the Committee on Accounts, and the Committee on Accounts brings in a resolution authorizing and fixing the amount.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; but if this resolution fixes the amount, it binds the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. COX. Upon reflection, is the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] not willing to wait—

Mr. BUCHANAN. All I want is to have the House understand that this committee can travel all over the United States and conduct hearings at the expense of the taxpayers, with an unlimited amount to draw upon.

Mr. COX. May I say to the gentleman that the Speaker, who is charged with the responsibility of setting up this committee, will, of course, exercise caution and care in the naming of his committee. Can we not well afford to depend upon the proper exercise of that discretion on the part of the Speaker?

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Regardless of whom the Speaker appoints on the committee, if the committee does what they are directed to do under this resolution, it will cost nearer fifty or a hundred thousand dollars than it will $25,000. This House might just as well understand it before they adopt this resolution.

Mr. COX. Of course, that is the view of the gentleman. He may be correct. I hope not. I should hope the investigation could be concluded with an expenditure of not more than $25,000.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. This resolution neither authorizes the expenditure of money, nor does it authorize activities which call for the expenditure of any money. Otherwise a point of order would lie against the resolution.

If, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas, a limitation on expenditure is put in this resolution in so many words, by implication, it would authorize some expenditure and render the resolution subject to a point of order. This matter can be handled by the House; it is absolutely within the control of the House when such activities are authorized and when the matter comes before the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I possibly have as little direct interest in the matter with which we are dealing as any Member of the House. Personally, I would have no objection to the limitation, but I trust the gentleman from Texas will not press it at this time, leaving it for determination at a later time.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes; briefly.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I understand from the argument so far that this investigation is going to cost between $25,000 and $50,000. I should appreciate the gentleman's explaining for my benefit what it is expected will be accomplished through this investigation.

Mr. COX. I trust the gentleman will relieve me of answering his question, because my answer would be substantially in the language of the resolution itself. I shall try to accommodate him later.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The Rules Committee must have had some reason for reporting it out, and some idea as to what it was going to accomplish.

Mr. COX. We hope it will bring an end to the character of propaganda that is complained of in the resolution. Probably there has been no investigation by any committee of this House more fruitful than that investigation conducted a couple of years ago by the committee headed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. O'MALLEY. That was an absolute waste of the taxpayers' money to support a pet hobby of his.

Mr. COX. The gentleman is in error, because it virtually brought to an end the character of propaganda that was then being carried on in the country.

Mr. O'MALLEY. We recognized Russia as a result of that investigation.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. This resolution not only authorizes an investigation of Nazi propaganda but also takes in the same subject matter covered by the Fish investigation.

Mr. COX. Of course, it must be realized that the committee will use discretion and not duplicate what has already been done.

Mr. BOILEAU. I hope the gentleman will advance some argument or present some information to justify the expenditure of this money for, so far as I am concerned, I do not know of any.

Mr. COX. The gentleman, of course, is aware there can be no fruitful investigation without the expenditure of some money.

Mr. BOILEAU. I think the House should be given some information relative to the necessity for this investigation.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from the Disabled American Veterans of the World War which likewise supports this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate this letter in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR,
Washington, March 17, 1934.

HON. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN,
Chairman Immigration Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: One of the items on the nine-point legislative program adopted by the D.A.V. in national convention at Cincinnati last June, calls for our cooperation with other patriotic groups in opposing subversive movements in America.

As you are aware, there is now before the Congress a proposal for investigation of Nazi activities in the United States, and we are further informed that the Immigration Committee unanimously favors this resolution.

From various parts of the country this office has received communications from our units and members protesting against the Nazi movement here and urging that we aggressively support the resolution to which I have referred. Therefore, it is desired to place the organized disabled squarely behind this resolution and earnestly urge that the matter be brought to a vote in both branches of the Congress as soon as practicable.

Cordially yours,

THOMAS KIRBY,
National Legislative Chairman.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, it is my view that the resolution should be adopted.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, as the ranking minority member of the committee that reported House Resolution No. 198, I desire to give same my earnest and enthusiastic endorsement.

Under the able leadership of our distinguished chairman, Judge DICKSTEIN, of New York, sufficient evidence has already been adduced to show the imperative importance of a thorough investigation into the activities of the Nazi movement in the United States.

Up to the accession of the present regime in Germany, the adherents of Herr Hitler in the United States called themselves Nazis. During that period these activities were confined to German aliens in America of the Hitler persuasion. But with the ascension of Hitler to power, to sugarcoat and camouflage the movement in the United States, as directed from Berlin, they changed their name from Nazis to the Friends of the New Germany. And according to the evidence already compiled by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, they expanded their field of operation to include not only alien Germans but native-born and naturalized Americans as well. Evidence has already been compiled by our committee showing that these activities, in direct contravention and subversion of our system of government, have already penetrated every section of our country where there is any considerable element of German population. Every conceivable artifice has been employed to introduce and dispense Nazi propaganda in the United States with a view to ultimately convert the United States to the Nazi doctrine and overthrow our form of government. In addition to the numerous Friends of New Germany organization throughout the United States actively spreading Nazi propaganda, there are a number of publications in our country, some of which have been given second-class mailing privileges, openly preaching the gospel of Nazi-ism.

Mr. Speaker, Nazi-ism is just as antagonistic and deleterious to the spirit of our American institutions as socialism, communism, or anarchy. In fact, in my opinion it is worse, because Nazi-ism contains all of the evils of communism, plus bigotry and superstition. Intolerance and superstition have been the arch enemies of civilization in every period of the world's history, and they attained their sublimest quintessence and ultimate Thule in Hitlerism.

I am not arguing Nazi-ism particularly from the standpoint of its treatment of the Hebrews, yet my friends, the ruthless butchery of the Jews by the Hitler government of itself alone ought to be sufficient to awaken every red-blooded American to the dangers of Nazi-ism. Thousands of Jews, men, women, and little children, have been tortured and murdered in cold blood to appease this brutal spirit of intolerance and bigotry, and thousands of others have been bereft of their property and driven into exile.

Herr Hitler and his satellites may say it is none of the world's business what treatment Germany accords to its Hebrew inhabitants. If they are indifferent to the world's opinion that is their misfortune, and I predict that they will reap the reward of their folly, as has every other nation that has pursued a similar course of persecution. Maybe it is no business of ours, but it ought to be sufficient warning to us to cause us to treat this Nazi menace as it deserves by immediately proceeding to destroy every vestige of this hydra-headed monster.

I hold no particular brief for the Jews; no more than I do for the Irish, the Germans, the Italians, or any other component part of our nationality. There are bad Jews just as there are bad Irish, bad Germans, bad Italians, or even bad Americans. There are black sheep in every flock. But my observation has been that the Jews on the whole make just as good Americans as any other nationals. They have contributed materially to the development of this great Nation of ours. Some of our greatest statesmen, scientists, artists, and what not have been of the tribe of Moses and Abraham. They are members of the great human family and to persecute them on account of their race or religion is an act of barbarism that no Christian nation or individual can condone.

I do not know just how many Jews we have in this country, but I do know that more than 300,000 Jews in the United States rallied to the colors in 1917 and 1918, and on every battle front exhibited the same quality of fortitude and heroism as their American comrades. The relatives of many of these brave boys are being subjected to terrible torture, death, and indignity in Germany today, notwithstanding the Versailles Treaty guaranteed to them and other minorities equal protection as other nations.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot assume an indifferent attitude to this hideous menace. In the name of liberty, civilization, and Christianity we must strike now, and the adoption of this resolution will be notice to Hitlerism that its cruel and inhuman practices will not be given favor or sanctuary on American soil.

As heretofore stated, this measure has been endorsed by the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the American Federation of Labor, and by many patriotic societies. It should be adopted by unanimous vote. [Applause.]

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is it the purpose of this resolution to investigate the treatment of Jews in Germany by the German Government?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I think not. The purpose of the German Government, of course, is to extend that sort of treatment and opposition to the Hebrew race in the United States.

Mr. BOILEAU. If this were a resolution to investigate the persecution of the Jews, that would be one thing. I should like to know whether that is the purpose of this resolution or whether the purpose of the resolution is to investigate anybody who might have some different idea of government.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Its purpose is to investigate the activities of the Nazis in the United States.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. What is my colleague's attitude with reference to kidnappings and lynchings in this country?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am just as much opposed to them as I am to Hitlerism.

Mr. KNUTSON. What has the gentleman done to curb them?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. We have passed laws to curb them.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Early in the gentleman's remarks he stated he had a lot of information. Would the gentleman give it to the House if he has sufficient time remaining?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I have already given some information.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. So far the gentleman has talked in generalities only.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I may remind the gentleman that the hearings are on file and may be consulted by the gentleman from Oklahoma if he is interested.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN].

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of that part of this resolution which applies to an investigation of the foreign propaganda activities in the United States. I am heartily in favor of knowing what is going on here in the United States in this respect.

I have been calling the attention of the House for some time past to our constitutional form of government and the need of its continuance in the United States. If there is any movement initiated from abroad or within the United States which has for its purpose the destruction of our present form of government it should be investigated and dealt with summarily. I am opposed to the setting up in the United States of any form of government other than constitutional form of government.

I am interested in the purpose of this investigation, that it is to proceed, not only with propaganda which emanates from abroad, but also with that which is already within our own borders and much of which is now in the various departments of the Government. Those teachings of subversive ideas which are having for their purpose the destruction of our form of government should be investigated and stopped. This committee should be authorized to look into that as well as into foreign activities.

I want to ask the chairman of the committee, fearing the possibility of the diversion of this investigation to the investigation of the German Government or the so-called "persecution" of the Jews in Germany, or those that may be coming from Germany, or of the boycott of German goods, and so forth, whether or not these activities are connected with your proposal of investigation, carried in this resolution.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. This committee has nothing to do with the affairs being conducted in Germany. We are interested, as an American proposition, in matters that are going on in the United States which are subversive to our Government. We are not interested in what happens over in Germany.

Mr. McFADDEN. The only reason I suggested that and asked the question is due to the criticism which was leveled at the gentleman when he was conducting an investigation last fall in reference to those activities of the boycott of German goods which activities have for their purpose the destruction of the present German Government.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have taken no part in that and neither has the committee. We are investigating these things as Americans, as Members of Congress, and we feel that these subversive activities of foreign governments, sending spies and agents to this country, are absolutely against our form of government.

Mr. McFADDEN. I agree with the gentleman in such a purpose.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is all I am interested in.

Mr. McFADDEN. I wanted to make sure that the question of boycotting and bringing in the so-called "persecution" of the Jews in Germany is not involved in this study.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Absolutely not.

Mr. McFADDEN. I have asked these questions of the chairman of the committee, Mr. DICKSTEIN, because of the operation of an organization in the United States at the present time under the name of "Nonsectarian and Anti-Nazi League to Champion Human Rights", whose headquarters are 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City, the president of which is Samuel Untermyer. This is the office also of the American League for Defense of Jewish Rights. Mr. Untermyer is also chairman of an international group having for its purpose a boycott, not only in the United States but throughout the world, on German goods. Sometime ago this group announced that they were raising a fund of $500,000 for the purpose of carrying on this boycott of German goods. One of the leaders of this organization has made it clear to the American public that the purpose of this boycott was the destruction of the present German Government. This Anti-Nazi League has just begun the publication of an "economic bulletin" which seems to be the official organ of this group and of the boycott movement. Such a movement is un-American, and any movement of its character having for its purpose the overthrow of the government of any foreign nation should absolutely be prohibited in the United States.

This movement is closely tied in with that other Jewish movement, authorized through a committee of the League of Nations, of which James G. McDonald, formerly head of the Foreign Policy Association of New York, is the international head.

As I have already stated, the reason for my questions to the chairman of this committee is to make sure that the committee authorized under this resolution are not going to be involved in these particular movements that I am outlining, and I am glad to have the assurance of the chairman of this committee to this effect.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of debate on this resolution be extended 30 minutes, and that at the end of that time the previous question will be considered as ordered.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, is that time to be equally divided between the two sides?

Mr. COX. Divided equally, of course.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have never had any patience with either racial or religious intolerance. No country has any right to persecute any race of people. The Hitler government has no right to persecute the Jews. It has no right to persecute Masons. It has no right to persecute anybody. Yet we have no right to interfere with its internal affairs. We cannot dictate its governmental policies. We can denounce its acts with which we do not agree. But we cannot tell it what it can do and what it cannot do, as that is its own business.

Throughout my life I have been friendly with the Jewish race. We played together as boys. We fraternized together as college men. Some of my closest friends in life have been Jews. In every place in Texas where I have lived there has been no discrimination whatever against Jews.

There is no persecution of Jews in the United States that is influenced by Germany. They are shown every consideration in the world. They hold some of the highest key positions in this administration. They have membership on our Supreme Court. They hold advantageous high positions in this House of Representatives. They are our friends and neighbors. Here we find no caste between the Jew and gentile. We sit here and fraternize together; so why bring forth a resolution like this?

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLOOM. I know the gentleman is friendly to all, including the Jews, but may I state that the resolution has no reference to the Jews or anyone else?

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman say that Hitlerism in Germany is not in any way connected with this resolution? If it is not, why does the resolution carry the word "Nazi"?

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield in connection with that statement?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will yield me some more time. All the time has been taken up by the proponents of this resolution.

Mr. COX. Probably I can accommodate the gentleman's wishes.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry. I must use the 5 minutes allotted me.

Mr. COX. I yield the gentleman a half minute to answer a question.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman for half a minute, but not over that.

Mr. COX. If the word "Nazi" is stricken out of the resolution and the word "foreign" substituted, will that satisfy the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. My objection is the futility of the resolution and the enormous sum of money that will be wasted with nothing accomplished. Would the gentleman put in a sane maximum limitation as to expense, so that not over a certain specified sum could be expended?

Mr. COX. I may say that at the end of the debate I propose to offer an amendment asking that the word "Nazi" in the fifth line of the resolution be stricken.

Mr. BLANTON. The important thing to be done is for the gentleman to limit the expense.

They say this is as bad as communism. Everyone knows that I have fought communism ever since I have been in this Congress. But spending money on investigations has not stopped communism. When our colleague from New York [Mr. FISH] had his special committee created and asked for money to investigate, I told him then that he would develop only what every posted person on the subject already knew, and that the money would be wasted and nothing accomplished. His committee spent over $19,000 of the people's tax money in investigating, and large volumes of hearings were printed and few people have ever read them, and nothing has been done to stop communism.

We saw a bunch of them right here in this Capitol last Saturday, when 20 or 25 colored students from Howard University marched on this Capitol in a body, insisting on violating the rules and regulations, attacked our good friend Harry, who, though a colored man, has the respect, high esteem, and warm friendship of every man who has been in Congress for the past 20 years, and exemplified the teachings of Mordecai Johnson, the president of Howard University, who has preached communism on several occasions. The New York Age, in its issue of Saturday, May 27, 1933, under the large headlines, "Dr. Mordecai Johnson Defends Communism", quoted him as saying that communism is a religion. And this New York Age, which is a national Negro weekly, and whose slogan is "Accurate and dependable news", stated that a western daily newspaper once referred to Mordecai Johnson as "more dangerous than Marcus Garvey and more radical than W. E. B. DuBois." This New York Age said that Mordecai Johnson seemed to be in hearty accord with the practice of the Soviet Union of putting all women to work, declaring that women are still the slaves of men, and that the franchise does not make them free. This paper further quoted this Howard University President as saying that he did not mind being called a Communist, as he said the day would soon come when being called a Communist will be the highest honor that can be paid an individual.

The Chicago Defender, in its issue of Saturday, June 10, 1933, stated that in his baccalaureate sermon Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University, "endorses communism, urges seniors to adopt new plans", and quoted him as saying that the people are becoming cynical about the beliefs in God and about the power of God to intervene in modern city affairs; that there is a confusion and chaos among the churches; and that he said that the new religion is called "communism"; and that after describing the workings of communism in Russia and Hitlerism in Germany, Dr. Johnson stated to the seniors of Howard University that it is manifest in the United States that "we shall not be able to resist the powerful impact of these new religions."

I am glad to know that our colleague from Illinois once took this floor and denounced Mordecai Johnson for his communistic tendencies, and I am glad that he in the press publicly denounced the communistic acts of these students last Saturday. They ought to be kicked out of Howard University. Dr. Mordecai Johnson ought to be kicked out with them. And unless we can weed communism out of that institution we ought to close it up and not give it further sanction and support by this Government.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] and his committee are already familiar with the machinations and activities of Nazi propagandists in the United States. Why did we not pass legislation that will put them out of business? Why spend a tremendous sum of money to investigate and develop facts which we already know? We know that there are Nazi propagandists here. We know all about it. The evidence has been placed before the Rules Committee. It would be easy to frame and pass legislation that would put them out of business. Why delay it? Why look up more facts? Do we not know enough already?

I am reminded that on March 9, 1933, I introduced the bill H.R. 109, providing that for a period of 10 years the immigration of all aliens into the United States is prohibited. This bill was on that date referred to the committee, of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is chairman. I am also reminded that on March 23, 1933, my colleague from Texas [Mr. DIES] introduced his joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 119, to restrict immigration into the United States, and on that date it went to the committee of our friend from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

We have been clamoring for a hearing, both in the last session and also in this session. We finally got a hearing about 10 days ago. We showed the urgent necessity to stop immigration. We showed that undesirables were constantly coming into this country from all foreign countries. We showed that smuggling takes place constantly, with foreigners coming across both the Canadian and Mexican borders. Yet when his committee tried to favorably report the Dies bill, and there was a tie vote, the gentleman from New York voted against reporting the bill, and by his vote kept the bill from being reported. So he is responsible for aliens coming here. He is responsible for foreigners coming here to take the jobs of Americans. He is responsible for these propagandists getting in here to preach their Nazi poison. He could stop it by reporting one of these bills before his committee. But he voted against reporting same.

I want to give notice to our colleagues that I have this day signed a motion to discharge his committee from further consideration of H.R. 109 to suspend all immigration, and this motion is now on the Clerk's desk here in this House, and if 144 of you Members will sign it, we will take that bill up and pass it, and stop foreigners from coming here. We will stop these Nazi propagandists. We will preserve American jobs for Americans. I hope that you will sign it promptly.

In the letter from Mr. W. C. Roberts, of the American Federation of Labor, read here, he stated: "President Green has repeatedly criticized the methods urged by the Nazi government to destroy trade unions and persecute persons on account of race", showing that he and the American Federation of Labor expects Congress to take some action that would stop the Nazi government from doing those things.

We can pass a law here today, if you are willing, to stop Nazi propagandists from operating in this country, but we cannot interfere with internal affairs in Germany.

When our friend from Missouri asked to be allowed to investigate government in business and asked to spend money, I told him then that we already knew all the facts he would develop, and asked him to pass legislation to stop it and save the money he would spend investigating; but he got the money and he spent it, and we already knew all he developed, and nothing has been done and the money was wasted, just as the $19,000 was wasted on the Fish investigation.

And there will be at least $25,000 wasted on this investigation; and, as said before, we know now just about all that will be developed on the investigation; and nothing will be accomplished; and there could be $50,000 or $75,000 or even $100,000 spent on this investigation unless we limit it. It ought to be limited.

You will remember that $600,000 was spent on the coal investigation and absolutely nothing was accomplished. Let us put some sane limitation in this bill as to the maximum that can be spent.

We are not going to stop Nazi propagandists by spending $25,000 investigating. It takes legislation with teeth in it. It is going to be a waste of public money, just like you wasted $19,000 on the Fish committee. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield another minute and a half to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. COX. I yield the gentleman from Texas 1½ additional minutes.

Mr. BLOOM. May I inform the gentleman of one particular thing? I see the gentleman is wearing a Masonic button.

Mr. BLANTON. And so is the gentleman. We are brothers.

Mr. BLOOM. Yes. Let me say to the gentleman that the Nazi government in Germany is just as much opposed to the Masonic order and the Masons of Germany as they are to the Jews. I should like to have the gentleman remember that one point.

Mr. BLANTON. But that does not interfere with the relations between the gentleman and myself in the United States. That concerns affairs in Germany. We deplore and denounce such persecutions.

Mr. BLOOM. This bill does not mention anything of that kind. It does not say anything about Masonry, Jews, or anything else.

Mr. BLANTON. It does not say it, but that is what it means. We cannot stop them from doing anything over in Germany without going over there with our Army and Navy. Surely no one here is in favor of that.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of this resolution of the gentleman from New York, Judge DICKSTEIN. Every citizen of the United States must approve of it. I am sure that every loyal German disapproves very strongly of anything being done in this country to undermine the Government of the United States. From evidence that is being presented to me, and I know an enormous amount of similar evidence has been presented to the author of this resolution and to the Rules Committee, it is indicated that there is an effort by the Nazi to undermine our Government institutions.

I cannot see how anyone can possibly object to this resolution. This serves as a warning to every country not to bring insidious propaganda to the United States. We all want to keep America for Americans. We want to stop anything that is an attack, no matter how covert, upon our country, no matter by what country. I spoke last year of my very great distress at the treatment of the Jewish people in Germany by Hitler. I understand that condition still exists. What is going on in this country goes very much further than that, because they are trying, according to testimony, to undermine the principles of Government of the United States. I will give me great pleasure to vote for this resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER].

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, there have been a great many remarks made here with respect to the Jew. I am of German descent. I come from a German family, my father was a Civil War veteran. I grew up amongst Jewish people and I have never found anything about the Jew in this country that was hostile to the German or to the American or to the Irish or any other race or nationality. They have always been our friends and we have been their friends, but here is a situation that has grown up in Germany and extended to this country. Today, in Los Angeles, and in southern California, which by the way, in my opinion, is a hotbed for putting out propaganda of this kind, there is being broadcast on the streets throughout southern California a newspaper called the Silver Ranger. This newspaper is condemning our present President. It is condemning every official in the Federal administration. It is condemning Congress and will condemn everything that goes to preserve the rights of our American people and this Government.

I understand this investigation is sought more on the part of the German American people than it is by the Jewish American. This investigation will not be extended beyond the borders of the United States. We have no interest as to how the foreign nations conduct their own government or what their inner troubles might be, but we are deeply and earnestly concerned about the safety and welfare of our own Government and the American people; we must insist that they be protected against the invasion of any foreign propagandists. To that end I am in favor of this investigation.

As a member of the Immigration Committee where this investigation originated, I desire to say that the entire committee voted in favor of this resolution. Subsequently it was voted unanimously out of the Steering Committee and the Committee on Rules.

The investigations that have been carried on thus far in Los Angeles and in the eastern cities, have overwhelmingly convinced every member of these various committees that the investigation is well warranted and that no time should be lost in carrying on a most thorough "fine-tooth-comb" investigation of all this propaganda, and it should be started immediately. We cannot afford to let a serious and important matter of this kind get a start in this country. We have a fine Nation, a loyal administration, and a marvelous President, and we must keep them so.

We all know it is most vital that we protect our Nation against propagandists of this kind. Have any of you gentlemen read copies of the paper entitled "The Silver Ranger"? If so, you know that these propagandists are doing everything possible to corrupt our President and this administration. One article after another shows decided mockery directed toward our form of government and our administration. The entire silver Nazi-Hitler organizations aim directly at our Constitution and our form of government, to the extent that, through their commander in chief, they are attempting to reorganize our entire democratic form of government.

I wish at this time to commend the American press, and especially the Hearst newspapers, for the splendid cooperation they have given in unearthing much of the valuable information we have secured. They have cooperated 100 percent, which has been very helpful to the committee and others carrying on this investigation.

As my friend from Texas said a few moments ago, he does not want to go over to Germany and fight the hell out of them, but we must stop this before it goes too far or they will be over here fighting the hell out of us. Now is the time to strike at this effort.

I have received from the Disabled American Veterans of the World War a telegram in which they advise me of a proceeding that has been tried in Los Angeles in our superior court involving two factions that are trying to ascertain which of the two is entitled to a sum of approximately $100,000 which was sent over here from Germany to promote this propaganda. The decision of the court has not yet been rendered, but the telegram which I shall read into the Record indicates the form of undermining propaganda that has been brought out in this trial antagonistic to our Government.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein the telegram from the Disabled Veterans which I have referred to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The telegram referred to follows:

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., February 28, 1934.

HON. CHARLES KRAMER,

Member of Congress, House Office Building,

Washington, D.C.:

Evidence in recent case in Los Angeles Superior Court proves strenuous efforts by foreign propagandists and others to corrupt the morale of Disabled American Veterans. Subversive groups apparently, well provided with funds, are preaching anti-American doctrines to veterans, who they say have been abused and who they believe are sufficiently disgruntled to be easily incited to direct rebellious action. This, of course, is a gross insult to the great mass of veterans who are unwavering in their loyalty to American institutions. Your attention also directed to page 37 of summary of proceedings Fifteenth National Convention of American Legion containing resolution reciting work of subversive groups in Los Angeles and requesting "all proper governmental authorities to take prompt and efficient steps to prevent such attempts to undermine the principles of our free and democratic form of government." Since above resolution adopted last October these subversive activities are spreading all over the west coast and becoming more bold. Resolution for investigation of these pernicious attacks on Americanism is now pending in Congress. Please give it your support and urge support of Congressmen from other sections.

AMERICANISM COMMITTEE OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY COUNCIL, DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS OF WORLD WAR.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, both on the floor here and as evidenced by questions there has been expressed the idea that this resolution just aims at general propaganda trying to develop sentiment or using arts of persuasion. If this were the case, I would have hesitated very much to vote out this resolution.

I voted for this resolution because there was shown to the Committee on Rules evidence of two concrete activities which I believe are inimical to the welfare of this country. The first is that an organization, growing by leaps and bounds and now numbering hundreds of thousands of people, has as its basic principle the subversion of constitutional government in the United States. We had before us evidence that this organization, in part, at least, is furnished with German Government money. We also had evidence that agents of this organization, carrying credentials from Nazi agents in the United States, went to Berlin in order to refinance this movement. This is a proposition that is not general, but quite concrete, and deserves investigation.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. In regard to the gentleman's statement that these organizations are subverting constitutional government, I recall one of the Members on the gentleman's side charged that to the Democrats just a few days ago. Does the gentleman think we ought to investigate the Democrats?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Why does the gentleman tell me that? I probably heard it myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MALLEY. I wanted to remind the gentleman of that fact.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Would the gentleman mind naming the organization he has referred to?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Certainly I do not mind naming the organization—the "Silver Shirts."

Evidence of another proposition was laid before our committee to the effect that efforts were being made to persuade citizens of German birth or German extraction in the United States to agree to the proposition that the allegiance of blood which they owed to the fatherland was higher than the allegiance of the oath of citizenship to the United States, which they took when they became naturalized American citizens.

If they fell for that, they were sworn in as members of the German League. Both of these propositions are financed abroad. Agencies for that kind of activity are known to those who have investigated it. I do not mind giving their names. They are the North German Lloyd and the Hamburg-American Steamship Co. Those are the facts that impelled the committee to report out this resolution. As to the proposition to substitute "foreign" for "Nazi" in the resolution, I want to say to my colleagues that I am not going to cast aspersions on every foreign government. If you mean "Nazi", why not say "Nazi"? [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I am in agreement with the last statement made by the gentleman who just preceded me. Persecution of the Jews and propaganda against the Jews in this country by the Hitler-Nazi regime is an affront to liberty-loving people everywhere. Persecution of the Jewish people and propaganda against them tramples underfoot racial, religious, and economic liberties for which our forefathers fought.

Our Government, founded by people in search for religious liberty, should still fight on for a principle so dear to all lovers of liberty.

But there is a second proposition. In this resolution that goes further than an investigation of Nazi propaganda; that calling for investigation of propaganda from foreign countries.

My friends, we should never take action which will infringe upon the inherent and fundamental right of freedom of speech and freedom of the press.

We should bear in mind that the patriots who builded this country instigated subversive propaganda against the Crown and laid the foundations of our free institutions.

The word "radical" is derived from the Greek word meaning root. A real radical goes to the root of a thing. The most dangerous citizens in this country were not the Communists, who polled only 102,000 in 1932 throughout the entire country—that is but negligible.

The most dangerous citizens of this country were the selfish financiers, the big city bankers, who objected strenuously to direct relief for the unemployed, but kept their own hands in the Public Treasury and took out money for their own selfish uses and purposes.

The radicals have always been the beacon lights of history. They came from the high, they came from the low. Look at the Declaration of Independence, and you will see an illustrious roll of radicals on that immortal scroll.

The greatest Radical of all was born in a manger and crucified between two thieves. So while we are voting to investigate Nazi propaganda in this country, I do object to the second part, I do object to spending American money in America in a way or a manner that might tend to suppress freedom of speech and the freedom of the press in this country. A man has a right to entertain any political belief he wants to so long as he does not advocate the destruction and overturn of our Government by force. [Applause.]

I apprehend that if there is anything at all in the Darwinian theory of the origin of species, then the first monkey who slid down the trunk of a tree was the first radical; and why? Because he upset the established and ordained order of things. The conservative monkeys looked at him and shrieked at him from the tree tops. The tail hold that was good enough for their fathers was good enough for them, and the conservative monkeys called him a radical, a communist, an anarchist, and a fool, but the radical monkey lifted up his face in hope to heaven, stood erect and walked, and in the lapse of ages the radical became a man and the conservative has remained a monkey. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD].

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization I strongly favor the passage of this resolution. I rise today particularly to speak in behalf of a colleague who represents the Twenty-sixth District of New York State, I being his neighbor on the south, representing the Twenty-fifth District. Mr. FISH would be here today to speak for himself in favor of this resolution were he not making a speech at a luncheon of the National Republican Club in New York City. Mr. FISH has been charged by Communists with being in favor of the Nazi movement. Some such person testified before the Dickstein Committee. Mr. FISH denied that, and I shall now read, with the permission of the House, into the RECORD a letter which he gave me this morning before he left for New York which will briefly state his views. The letter is addressed to the chairman of the committee, Mr. DICKSTEIN, and is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D.C., March 19, 1934.

Hon. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN,
Chairman Committee on Immigration and Naturalization,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I regret exceedingly that I will be unable to be present on Tuesday when the Nazi investigation resolution will be considered under a special rule, as I am constrained to keep a long-standing engagement to speak at the National Republican Club in New York City on the same day.

I favor the adoption of your resolution and a thorough investigation of Nazi propaganda and activities in the United States. There is no more room for Hitlerism in our American Republic than there is for communism. Both of these foreign forms of dictatorship, one representing the right and the other the left, constitute a complete repudiation of our free institutions and our republican form of government guaranteed to each State by the Federal Constitution.

Furthermore, the American people are opposed to the injection of racial and religious issues, which are contrary to the spirit of our institutions and violate the guaranties of civil liberties contained in the Constitution. What we need in the United States is more tolerance, not less, more civil liberties, not less, and more insistence on freedom of speech, which tends to dissipate both racial and religious bigotry.

I hope your committee will nip in the bud any indication of Nazi propaganda and activities from alien and foreign sources in the United States. It is, however, of utmost importance in any investigation such as is proposed that no interference be permitted with the rights of American citizens to express their own views in writing or in public speech, favorable or unfavorable to any form of government, unless carried to the extreme of urging the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence.

There was never a time in the history of our country when it was more necessary to stand firmly behind our Federal Constitution, which is the rock upon which our constitutional liberties are founded and our republican form of government maintained.

Let me conclude by using that old, hackneyed phrase, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." Let us reaffirm our belief in the immortal enunciation of Abraham Lincoln, that a government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from this earth.

Wishing you every success in your efforts to stamp out the seeds of foreign propaganda in our country, I am,

Sincerely yours,

HAMILTON FISH, JR.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Why would it not be better to have the Department of Justice conduct this investigation? Congress is not the proper body to do that. Bring in a resolution here directing the Department of Justice to make the investigation. This resolution merely provides for a grand junketing tour all over the United States.

Mr. MILLARD. That is not so, and this committee is the proper committee.

Mr. COX rose.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Of course, Congress has its own responsibility to meet, and it feels that in this particular it is meeting it in a fair and candid and honest fashion.

Mr. KNUTSON. Why is not the matter turned over to the Department of Justice?

Mr. COX. I have no information about what the Department of Justice is doing.

Mr. KNUTSON. If there are any organizations seeking to undermine this Government, the Department of Justice should be directed to make an examination and an investigation.

Mr. MILLARD. Your committee has already started the investigation.

Mr. COX. The committee is making the investigation.

Mr. KNUTSON. This is just a proposition to take a lot of Congressmen around the country at the taxpayers' expense.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, it seems clear to me from the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] as well as from those of the two gentlemen from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN and Mr. BLOOM] that this resolution is in no way connected with the alleged persecution of the Jews in Germany. I believe we must come to that conclusion, from the remarks of these gentlemen. Therefore, I feel that I can vote on this subject without having any fear that my vote against this resolution might be misinterpreted as a vote against the Jews.

Mr. COX. The gentleman is accurate in that statement.

Mr. BOILEAU. I appreciate that, and for that reason I feel free to vote against this resolution. I am not in the least prejudiced against the Jew. Many Jews are among my most intimate friends. I would gladly give my life, if need be, to protect the Jews or any other class of people from persecution. This is not a question of Jewish persecution. On the other hand, I do not believe that we in the House of Representatives of the United States should adopt such a resolution as this, which will give to a committee the right to investigate and make reports and recommend legislation upon a subject matter so general as that defined in the resolution. This committee will have the responsibility of determining what is subversive propaganda against our constitutional form of government. I am not ready, and I hope the Members of the House are not ready, to delegate to any committee the power to determine what is subversive propaganda.

According to the terms of this resolution, if the committee should be so included, it could investigate communism in all its phases and in all places. They could draw a red herring across the entire United States and get the people further aroused on that subject. They might go a step further and say they believe that those people who advocate any change in our Constitution are recommending legislation that is subversive to our best interests. They could go ahead and investigate the so-called "brain trust"; and if we are to heed the advice of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. EAGLE] given on the floor the other day, or the advice of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], and if those two gentlemen should be placed on this committee, that is probably the first place that they would start the investigation. I do not share their fears. I am inclined to believe that the freer discussion we have with reference to government the better government we will have. Because some gentlemen express fear of communism is no reason that we are actually in danger of changing our form of government.

I believe that our constitutional form of government is so dear to a vast majority of the people of this country that there is not the remotest possibility of that form of government being overthrown.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I cannot yield. I have one other matter I want to present.

Remarks have been made about propaganda being disseminated among the German people of this country. I am not, myself, of German extraction. I live in a community, however, that has a preponderance of German people. I say to you that those who are of German extraction have as great love for this country as any man or woman in this House. As a class they are loyal American citizens and need no defense from me. I, for one, want to say that there is no cause for alarm with reference to any propaganda that may be disseminated among that group of people. Their minds are not open to any suggestions with reference to the overthrow of this Government. They love this country. They fought for this country. They are willing to die, if need be, to preserve this constitutional form of government. I believe in freedom of speech and of the press, and I must oppose this resolution, as I believe it is directed against those in this country who exercise their constitutional right to express minority views and will result in persecuting minority groups that happen to express views that may not be in accord with the views of a few superpatriots who are unwilling to listen to anyone who advocates a change in the established order.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CARPENTER].

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I think I can radiate some of the sentiment of truly German people, because I come from a State that has 750,000 Germans. So far, the proponents of this bill have been confined principally to so-called "Jewish" people, probably like Mr. DICKSTEIN and Mr. SABATH, who are trying to represent the views of the German people. The German people in my State are of the opinion that Hitler has done a great amount of good for the people of Germany, and when the time comes to change their form of Nazi government they can do it without the help of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. What have we to do with Hitler in this country? I am not interested in Germany at all.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. That is what I say. I say that when the time comes, if 51 percent of the American people want a Hitler form of government, that is what we ought to have.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. In this country?

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. In this country.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I hope the time does not come.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. So do I, but if 51 percent of our people say they want it, who are you and I to say that they should not have it?

I think this investigation is an affront upon the dignity of the German people of my State and should not be passed. I represent the German people, and they are in entire sympathy and accord with the form of government that now prevails in Germany, and as I understand it, it is a great improvement over what they did have. If this condition is so bad as some of the men from New York say it is, I think it is purely a matter for the Department of Justice to handle and, if they cannot do it, the gentleman from New York certainly cannot. This is not being proposed from the standpoint of doing justice as much as it is to make some sort of a political issue for the Jewish gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. I yield.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman think that the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Federation of Labor are interested in making politics of this question?

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. I do not know that those organizations are interested in this matter, and do not think they are. The German people of the State of Nebraska feel that this resolution directly impeaches the honesty and integrity of the German race and is unfair and unjust to them and will accomplish no good to anyone but will promote racial differences that we of this country can at this time do nothing about. Let the present German Government alone—we in this country have all we can handle ourselves without trying to take on any more. No one can question the patriotic and sincere feeling that the people of German extraction have toward the flag of this country. Let us leave well enough alone.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY].

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I am going to take issue with the gentleman from Nebraska who just addressed you, because I believe the German people of this country, if they were to issue a mandate to you today, would say, "Pass this resolution." We have nothing to hide. If there is Hitler propaganda here, dig it up, throw it out into the open. I know there are grounds for this resolution. I have seen the early reports filed by the Dickstein committee. I am happy now to know the committee has stricken out the word "Nazi", and are now going to investigate all foreign propaganda. Investigate the enemies of this man here, this colored gentleman over here. Investigate the Silver Shirts to determine if the rumor be true or false that they are alined with a so-called "Hitler propaganda."

We have read about different mass meetings all through the country. Thousands of our people have gathered in public halls and protested against the atrocities of the Hitlerism movement. There must have been some ground for it. In New York City they had riots because of the spread of propaganda which incited people to the pitch where they went out and struck each other down. Old men and women were persecuted and injured. What harm can there be to investigating anybody? I voted to investigate Herbert Hoover. I was one of the few Members of this House who did it, and for that vote I make no apology. I think we should pass this resolution, and again I say, my friends, the German people invite this sort of an investigation. There are Germans in my district, and I have spoken to many of them. They say let us investigate. They fraternize with their Jewish brethren because they are all liberty-loving Americans.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. The only Germans I spoke for were the 750,000 in the State of Nebraska; not for your Germans.

Mr. SWEENEY. I am talking of the German people in general. Mr. DICKSTEIN's committee has labored hard on this matter. Leaders of German-American societies have appeared and written in behalf of this resolution.

There should be no room for intolerance in this great Republic. I come from a race of people who have felt the lash of religious and political persecution in Europe and in the early days of this country. I should be the last man in this House to encourage intolerance. On the contrary, let me make this statement: In the city of Cleveland we have a cosmopolitan population, people of every race and origin on this earth reside in the metropolis of Ohio. There never has been, and I pray there never will be, any religious or racial warfare in my native city.

In my community I was one of a group of Cleveland citizens who helped to organize the American Equality League, which is composed of representatives of 32 nationality groups, and has for its objective the promotion of racial, religious, and political freedom.

The philosophy of Hitlerism has been discussed at length on this floor today. Frankly, it is no concern of ours what sort of government the people of Germany desire, but it is the concern of every citizen when human beings are subjected to physical torture and punishment, simply because they happen to be of a different race or religious belief than those who predominate in the country in which they reside.

If there is foreign propaganda in the United States which if unchecked would excite the passions of our people to the point where they would engage in physical combat with one another, then I think it is the prerogative and the duty of the Congress of the United States to run down such propaganda. If no such propaganda exists, then no harm can come from the investigation which this resolution contemplates.

Prior to our entering into the World War many of us remember the vicious propaganda spread throughout the Nation by the subsidized press at the expense of the late Lord Northcliffe, who spent his money freely to excite our patriotic fervor and insure a hatred against the Central Powers. Our German-American citizens were the victims of this cruel propaganda, and in many places throughout the country riots and bloodshed ensued as a result. During those troublesome days leaders of the Jewish element in America condemned this propaganda and the treatment of their fellow German Americans.

Together with other racial groups, the hardy German American, who pioneered in this country and subsequently were followed by great numbers of Jewish immigrants, made splendid contributions to the upbuilding and welfare of our country. We are equally proud of General Von Steuben and Carl Surz as we are of the liberal judges of the Supreme Court Brandeis and Cardozo, the Governor of the great Empire State, and others too numerous to mention, all striving toward one common end—the interest and welfare of the United States now in travail in experiencing a radical change in our social and economic life. Intolerance anywhere eventually insures the doctrine that we are "our brother's keeper." While we take keen pride in the literature, art, and culture of our respective racial backgrounds, we should ever keep in mind that the composite America is made up of all the nationality groups who have sworn allegiance to defend the country in which they were born or in which they sought asylum.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to support this resolution. I feel that if these propaganda activities are allowed to go on unchecked, containing, as they do, the gospel of intolerance, it is bound to foment ill feeling and prejudice and cause unrest among our people. I feel that the investigation is urgently necessary in the interest of humanity and for the preservation of our own institutions.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY].

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that Members have stood in the well here today and said they represented people of German descent or Jewish or other descendants from some European race. When I look up at that American flag that hangs behind me, I am happy to go back only so far as my forbears have been American. I do not want to go any further back than that, because only what happens in America means anything to me.

I am not in sympathy with investigating what happens in other countries. I have always felt that Americans have erroneously believed they had some divine right to tell other countries how to manage their affairs. Had we been extraordinarily successful in the last four years in managing our own affairs, we might then possibly feel we had a right to tell other peoples how best to manage their internal conditions. As it is, we need to concentrate our efforts and our money on improving conditions of our citizens right here at home.

There are things a great deal more important to be investigated than any foreign propaganda that may come to this country. I refuse to believe that the American citizens of my district are considered to be so unintelligent and weak-minded that the Congress has to spend what may amount to $50,000 to protect them from propaganda that may come from abroad.

As far as I know, American citizens of all races of descent are loyal Americans and they do not have to be protected against foreign propaganda by any superpatriots who make mountains out of molehills. For a hundred and fifty years we have educated our people to democratic government. They support this form of government; they intensely and lovingly believe in it; and they do not need any self-appointed 100-percent Americans from anywhere to tell them they ought to avoid being influenced by any foreigners who want them to destroy our country.

I think the Department of Justice can investigate anything that is subversive to the welfare of this country and this form of government. If they are not doing it, then Congress ought to remedy the situation by getting a different group in the Department of Justice.

I do not think an investigation such as this is justified, with its possible enormous expense of $50,000, when so many wrongs that take bread from the hungry, roofs from the poor in this country, still cry to heaven for correction by we elected Representatives.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SHOEMAKER].

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Speaker, the only reason I support this resolution is because I am interested in the problem of persecution. I do not care who is being persecuted, I am against persecution, regardless of race, color, or creed.

I happened to have had in my own family just a little Nazi experience. This past summer my boy, a college student, was in Germany. Inadvertently, he took a few pictures of a big demonstration over there. He was immediately pounced upon; practically all his clothes were torn off; his camera was smashed and wrecked; and they probably would have placed him under the guillotine if he had not been able to show that he was an American citizen. That is what is transpiring in Germany. It is not the Jews only who are being persecuted, but practically everybody who has an idea opposed to the Nazi. When they hold an election in Germany they place one candidate in the field, Hitler; and if you do not vote for him you are going to be persecuted.

I know several cases now of university professors who came from Germany as exchange professors to teach a number of years. They have been here several years. They wrote letters back to their people in Europe that were somewhat opposed to the Nazi idea of government. This mail was intercepted and their relatives in Germany were hounded and driven out of the government positions they had held for many, many years. This is what is transpiring in Germany.

The German people are the predominating people in the State of Minnesota; my State. The German people of my State, and I am one of them, never thought that that highly cultured country with all its education and scientific knowledge would ever go back to the days of the guillotine and the torture post. Many of the Germans in this country left Germany years ago to escape militarism and dictatorship, and the forced military service of the German Army. My people came to this country for these reasons. I know they are not in sympathy with Hitler regardless of whom he may persecute or prosecute. I know further that right here in this country the Hitler government is using every means possible to get the Germans now in this country back into Germany so they can be persecuted over there. One case of which I know is that of a university professor at Swathmore College, just a little ways from here. They are trying to extradite him and to get him back to Germany where they can persecute him. This man speaks 17 languages and has taught in universities all over the world, including China and Turkey where he taught in the languages of those countries. This is the kind of subversive propaganda that is going on here.

I am not afraid of the radical who talks on the street corner, or the Communist, or the Socialist; but I am afraid of this underhanded, undermining secret process of spending money and using the subversive measures used by this contemptible gang that have robbed Germany of everything that is high and holy.

If you want to do something against Nazi propaganda, vote for this resolution and also tip over the Versailles Treaty, which is the father of this deplorable condition that exists in Europe.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I yield.

Mr. HOEPEL. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he has signed the De Priest resolution to eliminate racial discrimination in America and in this Congress?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I have.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BRUNNER].

Mr. BRUNNER. Mr. Speaker, I occupy perhaps the same position as my colleague from California [Mr. KRAMER]. My father and mother were born in Germany and emigrated to this country and I am naturally of German descent. My father and mother have always prided themselves on the fact that they came to the United States and became members of that group of emigrants who availed themselves of the privilege to become citizens at the first opportunity. They, like other Germans, have become some of our most respected American citizens.

As I understand this resolution, it proposes to investigate all foreign propaganda in the United States, and the committee will be just as diligent in investigating propaganda arising from all foreign countries as well as those of Germany, and for that reason I am going to vote for this resolution. I do not propose to permit any foreign group to in any way interfere with our Constitution.

I received much comfort from the statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] to the effect that he was going to take the word "Nazi" out of this resolution and substitute therefor the word "foreign", because I think the intent of the resolution has been misunderstood by many of the German people. They think their loyalty and citizenship in the United States are being questioned because of the fact that they or their ancestors originated in Germany.

There is much opposition to this resolution from some of the German societies. I have before me copies of letters and telegrams from the national council of the Steuben Society of American to Speaker RAINEY and Congressman DICKSTEIN protesting against it, and I think principally so because they think the resolution proposes to cast aspersions on the German race.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Why should any German society be afraid of an investigation of foreign activities in the United States?

Mr. BRUNNER. I cannot answer for them.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Why should any American organization be afraid of an investigation of foreigners who come in and spread propaganda which is subversive to our form of government?

Mr. BRUNNER. As stated previously, that is a question for them to answer.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN].

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Jewish people or their descendants in the United States require any laudation at our hands. They have performed services that have characterized them as being not only liberty-loving citizens of our country, but loyal and devoted in every sphere and field of human activity, that would add to our Nation's glory. Many of the gentlemen whom I have listened to this morning, I fear, have not read the resolution. I listened with great attention to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] who addressed you. He is a man of superior intelligence, he is keen, he is patriotic, and I do not believe we have a more devoted friend of the Constitution in the entire Chamber than he, but I fear he did not read the resolution, particularly the second part of it. I also differ with gentlemen who come here on this floor and state that they represent many hundred thousands of people of German extraction in the United States. I do not believe they have been designated by any means or method to especially represent these people on this question. The city of New York, on account of its greatness, its vastness, and its liberal line of thought is the haven and refuge for all races from every clime. We are indeed proud of them. No discord arises between them on account of racial lines.

Many of our citizens of German birth or extraction are in disagreement with many of the present policies of the German Government. We want none of these objectionable practices to take root in our land. The way to prevent this is to act now.

Therefore, I take great pleasure in supporting the resolution proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, to begin with, I am in favor of this resolution. What we are confronted with is the necessity of investigating a philosophy that is slowly and insidiously and with malice aforethought and malicious intent being disseminated in this country by a foreign power.

The Nazi movement in the United States is a very dangerous one. I think it can be very accurately described as subversive propaganda that seeks to arouse in the hearts of one group of our people hatred, contempt, and prejudice against another group of our people. May I say that these propagandists are not all Germans. There are a great many Americans who are subscribing to this philosophy of hate, and the activities of those who are engaged in this work is being so directed that it is gradually poisoning the minds of others against that portion of our population who are of Jewish extraction. Out in my part of the country we have thousands and thousands of both Germans and Jews. I suppose as individuals they are just as friendly as you and I, but when this group, financed from Germany by the Hitler government, engages in vicious propaganda against the law-abiding and liberty-loving Jew, I am ready to have Congress take prompt and vigorous action. Through the spread of this vicious propaganda the people are aroused, and they begin to hate one another. This is a philosophy of hate, a philosophy of narrow, bigoted prejudice; a philosophy that has no place in America and should be stamped out. If such a philosophy is permitted to spread, it would lead to an appalling situation. I hope the resolution carries and that the committee will investigate the matter thoroughly and suggest legislation that will effectively expose and suppress the operations of this propaganda group, whose activities are subversive to and actually endanger the peace and safety of our whole people. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, may I assure my colleagues here, and also all the fine German-American citizens of this country, that this resolution is not to be interpreted and it is not intended to be an attack upon any society composed of people of German birth or upon any other group of people who are Americans. This whole investigation has been conducted by my committee without appropriation. Witnesses of German birth volunteered and begged to come before the committee and expose the Hitler foreign movement in the United States, which I say is subversive to our form of government. The gentlemen who say we do not need this investigation have not read the record.

Mr. Speaker, there are those who believe that the Department of Justice can handle this situation. Suppose I say that the Hitler Government about 8 months ago sent a man by the name of Heinz Spanknoebel under the guise of a minister of the Gospel to this country. He is one of the greatest German spies. Mr. Spanknoebel, the minister, came into this country, and what was his message? His purpose was to break into these German-American societies in order to carry on the Hitler program in the United States. Suppose I tell you that Mr. Spanknoebel was indicted as a spy under the war act and is now a fugitive from justice? Do you want to be a friend of Spanknoebel? We have dozens of spies coming in on German boats.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN. I have been informed that German organizations have requested this investigation.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Positively. Every honest American German is anti-Hitler and anti-Nazi. [Applause.]

May I tell you further that German ships are smuggling in arms, and I have samples in my room. Suppose I tell you that some of these German spies and spies from other foreign governments have maps of our National Guard armories, arsenals, showing locations of our forts, and know how much ammunition we have in this country. Suppose I tell you that Spanknoebel had sent out a million applications for membership in his organization, known as "the Friends of New Germany", to every man and woman with a German name demanding that they join the Friends of New Germany and demanding payment of $12 as a fee plus $2 for a fighting fund. Suppose I tell you that every German ship brings in, on the average, scores of men under the guise of seamen who are nothing but spies and who have spread this propaganda to 22 States of this Union of ours.

Suppose I tell you that millions of German marks were sent into this country for propaganda, to incite the Jew and the gentile to fight each other and advocate that Hitler should reign supreme amongst our people in this country. Suppose I tell you that they are organized in 22 States into local groups or organizations in this country, which are composed, 98 percent, of foreign aliens smuggled in on German boats.

Now, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I desire to make a statement which will clearly convince each of you that this formal and official investigation is absolutely necessary. After I have completed my statement I will leave the question to you to decide. I do not think you will vote against the adoption of this resolution.

This special investigating committee should seek to accomplish three primary objects: First, ascertain the facts about methods of introduction into this country of destructive, subversive propaganda originating from foreign countries; second, ascertain facts about organizations in this country that seem to be cooperating to spread this alien propaganda through their membership in this country; third, study and recommend to the House appropriate legislation which may correct existing facts and tend to prevent the recurrence of a similar condition in the future.

The informal and unofficial investigation conducted by a Subcommittee of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization brought to the surface many features of importance about the spreading of subversive propaganda and about how that propaganda material gets here from abroad.

Without authority or funds to subpoena witnesses, to take testimony from witnesses under oath, or to pay necessary expenses to properly ferret out all of the facts, the subcommittee secured by voluntary testimony from witnesses willing to testify enough material to engage the serious attention of the special committee authorized by House Resolution 198 for some time.

Among the more important of the alleged facts developed by the informal investigation, I invite your attention to the following:

First. That a large fund set aside by the official German Government for use in advocating abroad, in America and elsewhere, the principles of the National Socialist Party of Germany, popularly known as the "Nazi", principles.

Second. That from Germany propaganda material is being brought into the United States with official sanction of the German Government by German ships, being landed, smuggled in here by seamen and others from German and other ships.

Third. That seamen on German ships are expected to leave or desert their ships upon arrival in the United States for the purpose of and under directions regarding the distribution in the United States of German propaganda which is subversive to the United States form of government.

Fourth. That students and professors are being sent from Germany for the purpose of teaching the principles of the Nazi Government through the schools and colleges and churches of the United States in a subtle campaign very subversive to a friendly nation.

Fifth. That the Nazi chieftains in Germany have in the United States their own system of secret police for the purpose of intimidating persons in the United States who have relatives in Germany through fear of bodily harm to relatives in Germany unless persons in the United States join and cooperate with organizations in the United States established here to promote the Nazi ideas of government.

Sixth. That the whole Nazi German program seeks to use the idea of race, religious, or pure-blood prejudices as the initial step in the United States toward the establishment here of the Nazi principles of government in exactly the same way that these prejudices were used in Germany as the first steps toward the establishment in Germany of their Nazi form of government.

Seventh. That there are several organizations now operating in the United States which seem to be coordinating their own operations to the plan of operations directed from Germany and spreading the idea of race, religious, and pure-blood prejudices among their membership in the United States.

Eighth. That there is a linking of the financial support giving aid and assistance from Germany to both American organizations and alien organizations which seem to be following the identical program of subversive propaganda against the present form of United States government.

Ninth. That German agents and their friends here seek to break up and control old-established organizations of United States citizens who are of German origin for the purpose of using these organizations for spreading and endorsing of the Nazi subversive program in this country.

Tenth. That armed aliens from Germany in Nazi uniform conduct drills on United States soil in military style and that German agents have gotten facts regarding armories and ammunition through unsuspecting members of the National Guard in several of the States of the Union.

Eleventh. That organizations in the United States and German agents have taken advantage of certain weaknesses in our postal laws and have sent through the United States mail the most subversive and destructive propaganda documents, pamphlets, and other material in technical violation of our laws.

Twelfth. That German agents of German steamship lines use their position and their offices in the United States as contact points for distribution of instructions to propaganda agents here and as pay-off places for distribution of German funds from Germany to their agents in this country and to United States organizations cooperating, under directions from abroad, in the spread of this subversive Nazi principle of government.

Thirteenth. That our customs laws, our postal laws, our immigration laws, our naturalization laws, and our hospitality are being violated in their desire to attain their own ends.

Fourteenth. That the ultimate objective of all this subversive propaganda is the overthrow of the form of government guaranteed here under our Constitution and the substitution of a new form of government.

Fifteenth. That different factions operating this subversive propaganda apparently seek different roads toward this end—some appear to be driving toward a dictatorship similar to the Nazi dictatorship of Hitler, and others seem to be driving toward what they choose to call the "Christ Democracy", and others toward some other goal.

Sixteenth. That Nazi agents from Germany seek to dominate and control the editorial policy of our German-American press, both printed in English and in German, and have established several newspapers and magazines. All of which operate under the cloak of our ideas of free press to spread the most malicious, subversive propaganda which passes through our post offices under the second-class mail privileges.

Seventeenth. That there has been and there is now paid agents of other foreign governments in this country who seek to spread propaganda here in their effort to spread their own form of governmental principles.

Eighteenth. That our own laws are weak in spots when an effort is made to check this nefarious-propaganda practice or to stop its spread in this country.

Nineteenth. That our immigration personnel, our Secret Service personnel, and other investigative personnel in our executive departments may need strengthening and enlarging and improvement to combat this growing tendency to use the United States as an active field for every kind of subversive propaganda originating in foreign countries.

Twentieth. That certain American business and industrial firms and American banking firms have contributed to "Hitler's propaganda fund" and certain American banking firms hold checking accounts from which money is drawn to pay off propaganda agents in the United States who are operating by direction of and with the support of the Hitler government and party.

While the information investigation was being conducted some things happened which are worthy of special notice in conclusion.

A New York grand jury in Federal district court brought in a true bill of indictment against an agent of the German Government charging him with representing a foreign government in the United States without giving notice of his status to the United States Department at Washington, D.C. This man—Heinz Spanknoebel—is now a fugitive from justice, and the best information available is that he has fled from the United States and is now again in Germany.

Clear across the continent, in Los Angeles, Calif., the local control of the Nazi organization, known as the "Friends of New Germany" became a matter of dispute and different factions within the organization before a superior court presided over by Judge Bush. When the factions became too boisterous in court, and after the judge had been threatened unless his decision was in favor of one of the factions, the judge ordered the court adjourned, and again he ordered everyone to remain in court while photographs were taken in order to prove or disprove that witnesses when taking the oath on the witness stand were giving the Nazi salute instead of a bona fide uplifted right hand usually prescribed for oath taking.

Finally, in this California case, some very important evidence was secured under oath. The most startling, perhaps, may be the following, which I quote.

One key witness stated, among other things, the following:

Question (to witness). What did he say about having been a member of the National Guard?

Answer. He said he had enlisted in the California National Guard at San Francisco—the One Hundred and Fifty-ninth Infantry.

Question. Did he say anything about what he had heard during his stay with the National Guard?

Answer. He said he had the plans of the armory at San Francisco, the location of the ammunition, and the location of the guns and pistols, rifles, and equipment.

Another key witness testified under oath in part as follows:

Question. Did you ever learn from Captain ——— himself, or any of those other gentlemen referred to, as to the official post occupied by Captain ——— with the Friends of New Germany?

Answer. Yes; Captain ——— himself told me.

Question. What did he tell you?

Answer. He told me that he—that he held the office as leader of the local group and that he was appointed by Heinz Spanknoebel, commander in chief of the Nazis in the United States, who had the sanction for his appointment from Dr. Goebels, chief of propaganda.

Question. Did he tell you who Dr. Goebels was?

Answer. I know that; I know through my contact job that Dr. Goebels was chief of propaganda for the Nazi administration in Germany.

At another time a witness under oath said in part:

Question. Did Captain ——— ever tell you the purpose of his activities concerning the spreading of propaganda in this country in behalf of the German Government?

Answer. He told me that it was for the purpose of driving out the Catholics and Jews out of the Government of the United States—not only to drive them out but to Germanize the United States of America.

At another time a witness stated:

Question. Relate to the court what he told you in that regard.

Answer. He said that the purpose of his organization and its members was to foment an uprising in this country, and that the sooner the Communists gained control in this country the sooner the people of the United States would wake up. * * * And then it would be time for the veterans to step in and take over the control of the Government by legal means or by putting in people of their own selection; that it should be done by the "Friends of New Germany."

Elsewhere in the testimony of witnesses under oath during that trial in California will be found statements that the impression left on a witness by a certain captain in the organization was that a man could come from Germany to the United States for the purpose of spreading propaganda, may take the oath of allegiance to the United States for the purpose of protection by United States citizenship. Then, after the completion of his propaganda work, go back to Germany, regain his German citizenship, and be rewarded in Germany for his work in the United States.

At another place a witness swore to the effect that he had been told by that same certain captain in the organization that "he had plenty of storm troops and plenty of armed ammunition on that ship to start, any time, anything he wished in the United States of America."

Now, in closing, I wish to thank the members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and its subcommittee for the splendid cooperation they have given in the conduct of the informal investigation recently completed. I want to thank the members of the Democratic Steering Committee and the Committee on Rules for their action in permitting this present resolution to come up for consideration on the floor of this House this afternoon. I want to thank each Member of this House who is supporting this resolution. This investigation is an American effort to get at the bottom of this destructive propaganda, and all of you will come to realize that you are voting today upon one of the important self-protective measures before this Congress. Every one of you supporting the adoption of this resolution is to be congratulated, and I only hope that those who oppose its passage today will come to see the error of their vote and that they will repent of their error sometime.

I thank you, and I feel sure your constituents back home will thank you for adopting this important measure today.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut makes the point of order there is not a quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-one Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifty-two Members have answered to their names, a quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, we have but one more speech. Can the gentleman from Pennsylvania accommodate me by yielding me 2 minutes?

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I gladly yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Cox.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, this gives me 5 minutes, which I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], and with his speech the debate on the resolution will close.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I assure you that the roll was not called at my request or even with my knowledge. I did not intend to speak on this matter, but was requested to say a few words in order to emphasize the position which the Rules Committee took on this subject.

In the city of New York, strange as it may seem, I imagine I have more people of German extraction in my district than any other district, and at the same time I have very few Jews in my district on the east side of New York City, strange as that may seem.

The Rules Committee held hearings for several days on the resolution and then, after the most careful consideration in executive session, unanimously reported this Resolution 198, which had previously been unanimously reported by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. The Rules Committee was particular to consider the advisability of bringing in this resolution solely from the standpoint of the interest of protecting our Government. The Rules Committee was not primarily concerned with anything pertaining to attacks on people of any race or religion, and especially such attacks as were alleged to have been committed in a foreign country. Before the Rules Committee there was presented conclusive evidence that there is extensive propaganda going on in this country that is subversive of our Government. Though I received the impression that well-known organizations in this country, such as the Steuben Society of America, which is composed of American citizens only, favored this resolution, I have been reliably informed that as to the latter such is not the case; that in fact it is opposed to it. Among the reasons given is its conviction that the investigation will in fact be directed against one foreign government only—an invidious distinction.

There were exhibited in the Rules Committee photographs of men under military drill in this country in Nazi uniforms. These were exhibited to us as examples of firearms shipped into this country. These formidable weapons were shown to the committee. Confidential letters taken from people who had dealings with the subject matter of the letters, here and abroad, were shown to us, evidencing that agents were sent from Germany to this country and from here to Germany with instruction from Nazi agents to buy 1,000,000 arms for shipment into this country, and to do other acts here and abroad subversive of our Government and our peace and security.

This evidence presented to us had nothing to do with attacks on any race or religion. That such attacks have been made are not denied by the government in question.

There was also presented to us propaganda issued in Germany and smuggled on ships into this country insulting our President in a most scurrilous way, insulting Congress and individual Members there, insulting our Government, and containing boasts that Hitler would take over our Government and add it to his present government. Much of this propaganda and many of these insults were disseminated by the comparatively new organization in this country known as "the Silver Shirts."

There was documentary evidence submitted to the Rules Committee that the German Government had sent money to this country to spread this propaganda, and we were faced with the sole proposition of whether there was such propaganda being spread in this country which might do some injury to our Government—not to any individual, not to any race, not to any creed. We were not concerned with what the Germans were doing in Germany. We were only concerned with what they were doing in this country. We had the evidence before us that there was an attempt to compel the swearing of allegiance by every person with a drop of German blood in his veins, first, to Germany and, second, to the United States. If they did not subscribe to such an oath and had any relatives in Germany, it was made apparent to them that something would happen to these relatives; why, Mr. Speaker, let me give you a little personal touch, personal to this House. A lovable Member of this House came to me today and said to me, "Do you know, John, what will happen to me if I vote for this resolution? I have three brothers in Germany, and before the sun goes down tomorrow night they will be thrown into one of these camps with a million or more men, women, and children now held incommunicado."

Mr. Speaker, this is a patriotic resolution designed to protect our own Government against the outside influence of any nation that seeks to come here and attempt to undermine our Government. I most earnestly submit that anybody loving his government, irrespective of any question of race or religion, will support this resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be amended by striking out the word "Nazi", in the fifth line of the first page, and inserting therefor the word "foreign."

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I object to any amendment being made in that respect.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "Nazi" and insert the word "foreign."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. KRAMER. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Georgia in control of the bill can offer an amendment if he wishes to without first obtaining unanimous consent.

Mr. KRAMER. I object to it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to offer the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 16, after the word "States", add the following: "The expenses of conducting this investigation shall not exceed $25,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WARREN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Georgia what is the use of putting something in the bill which is utterly useless?

Mr. COX. Personally, I did not think the language necessary, but there was a feeling on the part of some Members of the House that it would improve the legislation, and in deference to them I offered the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. That does not bind the House in any way.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the resolution. There is nothing about expenditures in the resolution.

Mr. COX. In the interest of making friends to the bill, will not the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Georgia has the inherent right to offer the amendment without asking unanimous consent.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I have made a point of order that there is nothing in the resolution that authorizes any expenditure; and if there were, the resolution would be out of order in itself. Consequently the amendment is out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were—168 ayes and 31 noes.

So the resolution was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider by Mr. Cox was laid on the table.

BONUS

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, when the bonus bill was up for consideration last session of Congress, I voted for same, believing that $2,200,000,000 due ex-service men, in that they actually hold notes against our Government, which would have to be paid in 1945, would do as much or more to restore the purchasing power and revive business as anything we could do, if paid at that time.

Some days ago I voted for the Patman bill, H.R. 1, believing more strongly than ever that not only would it be in line with the President's policy—various relief bills, for instance, the C.W.A.—but, also, in turning loose this money we would be satisfying a debt due ex-service men by the Government. In other words, we would be paying now, as a part of the relief program, rather than waiting until 1945, maturity date of the debt. Please remember the millions that are being spent by the Government under the C.W.A. and other relief measures are new obligations on the part of the Government which future generations will be taxed to pay. While these relief measures have done worlds of good we all know that graft, unwise expenditure, and unfair and discriminatory methods have been used in administering same.

Since March 4, 1933, during the extra session as well as in the present session, at the request of the President we have voted millions and millions of guaranteed tax-exempt bonds, all of which are being bought largely by the rich. This, however, does not bring actual cash into the hands of the purchasing classes of this country. A great many Members have been talking long and loud about printing additional money. The thing that has concerned me has been how will my people get any of this new money, if issued, in that it will be owned by the Government? Certainly no man should expect the Government to distribute this money through the Red Cross, as was the case with the flour and cotton garments. The only way that my people would get any of this money would be either in the way of an increase in wages or a higher price for cotton and any other things we have to sell.

Paying the bonus will not only cancel a Government debt but, as stated, it will also put the actual cash into the hands of ex-service men who live in every nook and corner of the country. This money will go into the crossroad stores, into the hands of small-town merchants, from these merchants to wholesalers and factories, and from them to farmers for raw material, and to employees in every line of business.

The question as to whether or not these ex-service men are entitled to this bonus was settled when Congress agreed that the Government owed this money to these soldiers when an adjustment of accounts was made after the war. However, Congress, after considering the matter, said to these ex-service men: "We owe you, but, having obligated the taxpayers of this country to the payment of billions of dollars for the purpose of prosecuting the World War, we will pay you in 1945." If it was a just obligation, and it must have been or Congress would not have granted same, the ex-service men were very liberal to Uncle Sam by not demanding cash.

We find that, in adjusting accounts with the railroads, war-time contractors, unreasonable sugar claims after the war, all of such claims being presented by the rich, the cash, millions and millions, was paid by the Government in settling these claims.

If the bonus bill passes the Senate, having already passed the House, and if it is signed by the President, it will put into South Carolina the following amount:

Counties in the Second Congressional District:

Aiken	$582, 108. 84
Bamberg	238, 354. 80
Barnwell	260, 593. 88
Calhoun	205, 161. 96
Lexington	448, 146. 32

Counties in the Second Congressional District—Con.

Orangeburg	$784, 249. 92
Richland	1, 076, 550. 76
Sumter	563, 676. 56

Total..... 4, 158, 843. 04

And, a total for all counties of the State amounting to $21,352,034.20.

Everyone knows that the amount of actual cash in circulation is far below even the period during President Hoover's administration. To bear out this statement, I desire to place in the RECORD the following figures:

SEVEN BILLION CIRCULATION

When Mr. Hoover was President we had at one time a circulating currency of around $7,000,000,000. We had a gold reserve at the most of something around $4,000,000,000 as against that circulating currency of seven billion. We have in gold in the United States Treasury today $7,654,000,000, and we have outstanding as against that only $5,000,000,000 of currency. If the bonus should cost the estimated amount of around $2,000,000,000, or the high figure which was given of $2,400,000,000, we should have a circulating currency of only approximately $7,000,000,000, the same amount of currency we had when Mr. Hoover was President, whereas we should have in gold to back up the same amount of currency something around $4,000,000,000.

Will anyone deny that this amount of actual cash will not mean much in helping to bring back normal prosperity to the State? Inasmuch as South Carolina is a very small Federal tax-paying State, around 80 percent of this $21,352,034.20 will be paid in the way of taxation in the years to come by the taxpayers of the richer States. This being true, certainly the payment of the bonus in cash at this time would appear to me to be a very meritorious transaction so far as our State is concerned.

For the past 50 or 60 years, South Carolina has been paying her portion of Federal tax, in line with her ability to pay, for pensions to Union soldiers. For over 100 years, we have been robbed by, in a great many instances, States that have been collecting tariff duties from our people while our State has not been receiving any of these benefits, or practically none. How any man or woman in South Carolina can object to any honest Government money coming into South Carolina, under the circumstances, is beyond me. I can understand why Wall Street and the United States Chamber of Commerce and the Economy League can object to the payment of the bonus.

Do you know that because of the financial condition and the actual need of cash to carry on, to buy food and clothes, thousands of ex-service men borrowed, some two years ago, 50 percent of the value of their bonus certificates, pledging these certificates to the Government, paying 6-percent interest thereon? Because of the financial condition of our soldiers in South Carolina, practically every one of them borrowed this money. Now, let us see what will happen to these ex-service men who borrowed on their certificates if they have to wait until 1945, maturity date of the certificates. Let us take for example, a soldier holding a certificate amounting to $1,200. He borrowed $600. If he waits until 1945, the Government will owe him $1.20, the 6-percent interest on the loan amounting to the balance of the certificate. On the other hand, the soldiers who were able to carry their certificates, without borrowing, will get the full amount of cash, face value of the certificates, as in the case referred to, $1,200.

When you hear an ex-service man stating that the bonus should not be paid now, ask him if he had to borrow on his certificate. You might, also, ask him if he is one of those who came under that class of soldiers drawing from $100 to $400 per month; or, perhaps, if he is holding a good job with the Government, as well as drawing compensation.

As stated, we have been very free to issue tax-exempt bonds. However, in every instance, especially during the present administration, we have done so at the request of the President. According to the record, bond profits of the last 90 days, in the hands of the rich, would pay the whole cost of the bonus. Wall Street's unearned gain would pay the debt to veterans and still leave coupon cutters $240,000,000. Factory payrolls have been falling since Christmas, but there's no weeping among the bondholders.

In the last 3 months the market values of bonds, listed on the New York Stock Exchange, have gone soaring.

Roughly, the value of these bonds has risen about 10 times as much as payrolls have declined.

For instance, the value of these bonds jumped $597,554,613 in February, according to the New York Times.

In January the value of these bonds jumped $1,402,708,943. In December they jumped $681,154,991.

This makes an aggregate increase of $2,663,418,470 since the 1st of December.

This profit, which has come to the coupon-cutters of Wall Street without need for them to risk a dime in anything but the soundest securities, would be sufficient to pay the soldiers' bonus to every man who offered his life as a sacrifice and still leave $243,418,470 to spare.

FEDERAL PAY ISSUE SHOULD BE ENDED

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, in his recent message to the N.R.A. code authorities, President Roosevelt clearly stated in one of the most vital sentences in his address that he had been led to the inescapable conclusion that we must now consider immediate cooperation to secure increased wages and shorter hours.

Congress cannot side-step the clear-cut duty imposed upon it by the Government's program in regard to private industry.

That duty compels immediate and complete restoration of the salaries of the thousands of men and women who carry on the functions of the Federal service. There are many men and women employees of our Government who have given many years of arduous service to their work. The men and women who really perform the work, as every Member of Congress knows if he has been in close touch with departmental matters, are not the Cabinet members, or the chiefs of the departments. The people that do the actual service, the detailed work that carries on the affairs of the Government, are these men and women behind the desks, the carriers in the mail service and those serving a rural route out in the country, who draw the inadequate salaries. Most anyone who has the physical strength can do manual labor, but it takes a higher grade of intelligence to serve the public efficiently and acceptably; and that service demands a higher rate of pay.

I attended a hearing before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads the other day at which time H.R. 8097 was being considered to adjust the salaries of rural letter carriers.

One would assume from the title of the bill that these rural carriers were to receive an increase and that they would at least be put on a par with other postal employees.

Mr. Speaker, it is a positive fact that their salaries, which have been reduced by 15 percent, have ceased to be a livable wage, and will be further reduced, if this bill is to be passed, to such an extent that just merely existing would not even paint a true picture.

Certainly, this type of legislation cannot be classed as that which could improve the Rural Mail Service. Equipment-cost surveys show that it costs the carrier from 6½ cents per mile for October and November to an average cost of 8 cents a mile when carriers are experiencing a hard winter as they have this year. But still they are expected to carry on for 1 cent a mile. It certainly is unfair and unjust to expect rural carriers to feel satisfied under these drastic cuts.

I have somewhat deviated from my subject, but I wanted to remind the Members of Congress of conditions existing in one particular branch of the Government service with which I am familiar.

The Federal Government has said to business and industry "The only way out of this depression is to put more persons to work. We must spread employment, reduce hours, and improve purchasing power by raising wages."

The administration is doing just the opposite of what it is advising. It is urging employers to increase wages. But as the employer of thousands of persons in the Post Office Department it is reducing wages by requiring these employees to take a 1-day payless furlough every month for the next 4 months.

It is preaching increase of purchasing power. In this order of the Postmaster General it is practicing reduction of purchasing power.

Which course does it expect other employers to take—the one it advises or the one it follows?

Never in the history of our country has the work of the Federal employee demanded as much of them as now, and no matter how well qualified they might be now, they cannot remain so for long without continued study because of the rapid developments in the technique of Federal administration. Obviously the Federal employees are required to constantly train themselves through special courses offered by colleges and universities designed to give them a practical knowledge of problems involved in various fields. This special training is costly, and in addition to that there is an implied contract in the relationship between the Federal employee and the Government. A great many Federal employees have had opportunities to leave the Federal service and go into private business and industry at a substantially greater rate of pay.

In most cases Federal employees have weighed this increased wage scale against the value of the implied contract with the Government—a contract which gave assurance of permanent occupation, for efficiency, at a meager but, nevertheless, fixed rate of pay.

On the basis of this implied contract, Federal employees have taken over certain obligations. They began the purchase of small homes. They have endeavored to provide life insurance for the protection of their families, for even under normal conditions Government pay is such that the building of an estate for one's dependents is a virtual impossibility by any other means.

These are fixed charges. Other fixed charges are such items as light and fuel costs, transportation costs, and the like.

Although Federal employees have suffered reductions in pay ranging from 15 to 50 percent, rates of interest on mortgages have not declined. Insurance premiums in many instances have actually increased. Transportation, fuel, light, and other charges either have remained stationary or have increased.

Because of the smallness of Federal pay, employees never have had much leeway. Now, with pyramiding pay cuts and furloughs and immovable or increased fixed charges to meet, conditions have become well-nigh unbearable.

The Federal Government has a responsibility here which it cannot evade. It has a responsibility to cease its repudiation of a contract. It has a responsibility to deal fairly with thousands of employees who, on the basis of a stated set of conditions, placed their careers at the disposal of the Government. Beyond that the Government has a responsibility to end a situation which is so completely out of harmony with the principles it has set up as models for private business and industry.

The time is at hand for the Federal Government to deal fairly and squarely with its own workers. Further delay is indefensible.

Rising living costs in recent months have made more intolerable a reduction in income which Congress ordered as an economy measure, but which has produced far more in the way of suffering and hardship than it has in the way of retrenchment. I repeat what I have said before.

"Unless the Government lacks the faith which it seeks to inspire in others, it will restore the full purchasing power to its own employees. Not to do so would be a confession of skepticism."

The Government owes it to itself, it owes it to its employees, to make the impending restoration full and complete.

Federal salaries were never high. They would not be high if the whole 15-percent cut were restored.

It is to be hoped that the Congress will restore the pay of all Federal employees, civil and military, throughout the Nation, and that no mere half-way measure will be adopted.

The sentiment of the country is overwhelmingly for it.

The Government worker, just as any other worker, is entitled to an honest day's pay for an honest day's work.

That is all he is asking of Congress.

That honest day's pay, however, cannot be determined by a jumble of statistics covering what it might have cost somebody to live sometime in the past.

Eventually the appropriation bill will reach the floor of this House.

Then will the Membership of this body have an opportunity to stand and be counted.

By that vote the American people will be able to determine which of their Representatives want to abandon the Government program of recovery and which are willing to give it the support which it deserves.

PROPOSED PROGRAM OFFERED BY TERRY CARPENTER, MEMBER OF CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF NEBRASKA, AS A SETTLEMENT OF THE WATER CONTROVERSY BETWEEN THE STATES OF COLORADO, WYOMING, AND NEBRASKA, AND THE VARIOUS ELEMENTS OF PROTEST BY THE VARIOUS POWER AND IRRIGATION DISTRICTS WITHIN THE STATE OF NEBRASKA

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, it appears that from a practical, feasible, and financial standpoint that Colorado cannot build a diversion canal and tunnel to bring the water from the North Platte River or North Park area into the Casa la Poudre.

A more practical plan would be to divert water to be used for the same purpose across the mountains from the upper Colorado River in the Grand Lake area; such water could be tunneled to the Big Thompson River, which flows into the South Platte River, and at the Big Thompson Canyon a power plant could be built to furnish electricity to northern Colorado. It would be quite apparent that such a plan would receive the opposition of the Public Service Co. of Colorado, but such objection should be easily surmounted by public opinion at the present time. Already the counties of Larimer, Weld, Logan, and Sedgwick in Colorado have expended $5,000 in having this survey made. It is my understanding that various Colorado State officials believe that it is a better plan from practically every standpoint than to try to attempt a diversion of water from the North Platte River Basin through the Casa la Poudre.

Colorado owns some 7,000,000 acre-feet in the Colorado River, and would divert around 225,000 acre-feet to the South Platte River Basin by way of the Big Thompson. This should give Colorado all the water it needs for irrigation in the sugar-beet area, at an estimated cost of $14,000,000.

It would seem to me that this would be the logical way for the three States of Colorado, Wyoming, and Nebraska to settle their differences and enter into a water compromise that would solve this difficulty for all time.

I, for one, representing the district most vitally interested in the allocation of water in the North Platte Valley and believing that I speak the sentiment of the Nebraska delegation, would say that we, representing Nebraska, would be willing to support such a plan and to give to Colorado our earnest and willing congressional support. I believe also that Wyoming would add her support in trying to have an allocation of public funds given to the State of Colorado in order that the Big Thompson outlet for the Colorado River and the power plant which would undoubtedly make the project self-supporting and self-liquidating, could be built.

The plan has a great deal of merit and the only apparent one that, to me at least, would solve the difficult situation in which we of the three States find ourselves on this problem. It would give the North Platte River in Wyoming and Nebraska the regular, normal flow and all the storage water. We of Nebraska and Wyoming would be more than pleased with that arrangement and would no longer have the cry that Colorado is trying to divert water from one watershed into the other. The additional 225,000 acre-feet in the South Platte will provide seepage for the Nebraska portion of that river. It should satisfy and relieve any objection from the various elements in the State of Nebraska toward the allocation of water to the various projects within our State. It would relieve the objection of certain people in western Nebraska toward the approval of the so-called "tricity power and irrigation district" in central Nebraska. It seems to me with that objection eliminated, there certainly should be some basis of compromise between the people of Hall County and the proponents of the tricity projects.

I am interested in seeing that all of these projects are authorized and completed. I am interested that the officials of Nebraska give proper cooperation with the Federal Government in seeing that these projects are authorized and completed and not left to die through the apparent objection of the power companies, who are so vitally interested in their effort to continue to rob the people of our great State in the assessing of unfair and unreasonable rates for power, and through the apparent lack of willingness of our present Governor in even attempting to show any friendly inclination to the Sutherland and Columbus projects.

The attitude of Secretary Ickes is very plainly shown in the following telegram sent to Governor Bryan:

My patience is about exhausted. Unless satisfactory terms can be reached at once I shall be compelled to rescind these allotments as well as stop study on all other Nebraska power or irrigation projects, which would also be useless under same conditions as you are imposing. Funds so released will be employed elsewhere.

This also verifies my recent public statement issued some time ago that there was a great possibility of the State of Nebraska losing these allocations through the lack of cooperation of Governor Bryan.

The entire State of Nebraska, regardless of which side of the river they are located, is bound to benefit tremendously from such great expansion and development of the natural resources of our State.

I believe Colorado will relinquish its claims to rights in the Laramie River (except the diversion now established) and the North Platte River and Arickaree Creek, in eastern Colorado, if Wyoming and Nebraska will get back of the plan to support the Colorado River diversion into the Big Thompson.

I take this opportunity of offering the support of that part of the State of Nebraska that I represent, and wish to reiterate my statement that I believe all power projects and irrigation projects in the State of Nebraska have a great deal of merit. In addition to the Sutherland and Columbus projects which have been allocated and which are being held up by the apparent dilatory action of our Governor. The Tri-County, Loup River projects, the Blue Creek projects, and all others that have been submitted should have the united support of everyone within the State of Nebraska, with the possible exception of the power interests and the Governor.

It is apparent that through the development and completion of these projects that a tremendous amount of surplus power will be available, and at the present rate structure that is maintained by private power utilities the people of Nebraska cannot absorb this surplus, unless there is a tremendous revision downward of rates so that the power will be available to the people at a rate that from an economic standpoint will make this power available to everyone, both urban and rural. If the proper rate structure is given to the people, there will be no surplus of power upon the completion of these projects.

As you no doubt know, I have filed for Governor of the State of Nebraska, and if elected, I promise my utmost effort in seeing that this rate structure is revised downward to such an extent that the above results will be accomplished.

OUR WEAK SCHOOLS MUST HAVE RELIEF OF THE EDUCATION OF MILLIONS OF OUR YOUNGER GENERATION WILL BE INTERRUPTED AND NEGLECTED AT A CRITICAL PERIOD IN THEIR LIVES

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced H.R. 7873, which I wish at this time to call to the attention of the House, because I feel that it concerns one of the most vital problems now confronting the American people—the problem of education. So far as our schools are concerned, we are dealing with an emergency of a critical nature that affects the lives of all of our citizens, whether they have children or not. We can delay some things, but not education. The opportunity for education is very limited as far as the average citizen is concerned. The average youth has little opportunity for schooling after he reaches maturity. If we neglect their education now, precious time has been lost—time that can never be regained by legislation, resolutions, or all of the human effort in the world.

We can neglect our roads and improve them tomorrow, but every day that we permit a school to be closed robs innocent boys and girls of precious, vital time.

The Federal Emergency Relief Administration has allocated funds to pay teachers' salaries in weak rural schools and in towns under 5,000 population throughout the country. This has been of incalculable value to many of the weak schools in Oklahoma, especially in districts where from 20 to 75 percent of the property is nontaxable Indian land. In such districts it is humanly impossible to maintain an 8- or 9-month school. In many other districts that were reasonably wealthy a few years ago the valuations have fallen so low that it will be impossible to maintain more than a 4- or 5-month school next year. This means that unless the Federal Government assumes some responsibility for the education of the boys and girls of the land, that hundreds of thousands of them will be deprived of an opportunity to go to school next year.

I have conferred with the Chairman of the Committee on Education [Mr. DOUGLAS], as well as several members of his committee, concerning the need of this important legislation. I have called attention of the committee to my bill that proposes that the Congress of the United States shall adopt a permanent policy with reference to education.

For the information of the Members, and the country, I desire to insert in the RECORD at this point my bill, which was referred to and is now being considered by the Committee on Education.

A bill to provide for the cooperation of the Federal Government with the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia in maintaining the public-school system, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the Congress hereby declares that the cooperation of the Federal Government with the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia is necessary to prevent the premature closing of elementary and common schools in many communities, thereby resulting in widespread unemployment of teachers and depriving millions of children of those educational opportunities necessary for the training of citizens in a democratic government.

SEC. 2. There is authorized and directed to be made available, out of funds appropriated for the Federal Emergency Relief Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, such funds as will enable the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia to maintain their regular school terms as maintained during the school year of 1931 and previous years.

SEC. 3. (a) Funds made available in section 2 of this act shall be disbursed in accordance with such rules as may be made by the administrator of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

(b) For the further cooperation of the Federal Government in maintaining the public educational system, the President of the United States is authorized and empowered to include, in the annual Budget, estimates for an appropriation equal to not less than $2 per enumerated school child in the elementary and secondary schools.

(c) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to not less than $2 per enumerated school child, to be immediately available for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior, such amounts to be allocated to each county treasurer in each State for the use of the schools.

(d) No school shall receive any such aid unless such school is unable by taxation, or otherwise, to maintain its school term as it was maintained for the school year 1931-32 and previous years.

(e) No department of Government shall exercise any control, authority, or supervision over the curriculum or management of any of said schools receiving aid under the terms of this act and no regulations concerning the curriculum or management of any school shall be prescribed in administering this act.

SEC. 4. After the passage and approval of this act all school warrants for payments of teachers' salaries or other employees in the public schools of the United States, regularly issued by the proper officials, and unpayable for the reason that necessary taxes, assessments, or other revenues have not been collected, shall be eligible, when properly endorsed by the payee, for purchase or loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Loans on all such warrants shall be made at their face value at a rate not to exceed 1 percent per annum.

It might be of interest to Members to know this bill has the endorsement of educators throughout the country, especially in the State of Oklahoma. Following are excerpts from statements by several of the leading educators in Oklahoma, all of whom I know personally. It is a genuine pleasure for me to quote from these superintendents, teachers, and others, and I feel that their suggestions are very valuable.

Hon. Joe Story, county superintendent of Jefferson County and one of the outstanding schoolmen in Oklahoma, states:

I endorse your bill as a great step toward the relief of weak and inadequately financed school districts. I believe this bill should meet the hearty approval of all school-minded people.

Hon. E. T. Harned, well-known educator and superintendent of schools for several years at Devol, Cotton County, Okla., says:

I have read your bill carefully and enthusiastically approve it to the letter.

Supt. N. L. George, of the Geary city schools, another very successful superintendent, says:

I was elated to read your bill. It is exactly what we need.

Supt. H. E. Wrinkle, of the El Reno city schools, one of the outstanding and successful educators in Oklahoma, says:

I think your bill is the best one that has been introduced, and I am encouraging our teachers and patrons to get behind it.

Miss Rose Witcher, principal for many years of the El Reno High School, says:

I hope that the Committee on Education will see fit to recommend your bill to Congress. Our civilization is founded on education, and the children of America cannot await until the next generation to be educated.

Hon. James F. Hatcher, prominent Chickasha attorney and member of the State board of education, himself a former teacher, strongly endorses the bill and states that the Grady County superintendent, Hon. Elmer Martin, says it is exactly what is needed.

Another strong endorsement comes from Clyde A. Noel, superintendent of schools at Hydro, who states:

We have been needing this legislation for a long time.

One of the finest endorsements comes from an old boyhood chum in Cotton County, Hon. Dee E. Park, now the successful superintendent at Addington, Okla. Mr. Park has recently made a very exhaustive survey of conditions, especially in Jefferson and Cotton counties, and states that the need for Federal aid for weak schools is imperative.

Supt. R. L. Hazlet, of Chattanooga, says:

You are offering a real service to the people of the Nation in sponsoring the educational program outlined in your bill.

Supt. Alton Ellis, of Randlett, endorses the bill in no uncertain terms. He says:

The school board members and patrons to whom I have shown your bill seem elated that the Congressman from their district should introduce a bill that will aid in the salvation of our schools.

The following excerpt is taken from a recent letter from Supt. E. E. Geeslin, of Rush Springs:

I heartily approve the proposed bill on education and wish to commend you for the interest you are taking. Unless something is done, we shall face the same situation year after year.

Hon. D. E. Phillips, superintendent of schools in Waurika, states:

I am heartily in accord with the content of your bill. The section providing that the Federal Government allot $2 per each enumerated child in the various districts will do much toward extending the terms of schools in this section of the State.

Hon. Jesse A. Owensby, superintendent of schools at Comanche, where, incidentally, I attended my first school in Oklahoma, says:

House bill 7873 receives the support of my faculty, school board, and patrons. Push this bill with all your might.

A. Leslie Chambers, one of the most progressive young educators in Oklahoma, now superintendent of schools at Watonga, states several of his classes studying history and government are interested in this legislation, as well as patrons of the school. He adds:

It is the best bill that has been introduced insofar as the public schools are concerned.

John Fisher, of Marlow, another outstanding superintendent, says:

Personally, I think the bill is one of the best introduced in Congress for the betterment of our schools.

Earl Inman, popular superintendent of schools at Sterling, says:

Let me express my sincere appreciation for your interest in the educational field. Everyone with whom I have discussed this bill has expressed whole-hearted approval.

Here is a statement signed by Wennell Ferguson, of El Reno:

We, the students of El Reno High School, wish to express our sincere thanks to you for introducing in Congress your bill for the relief of our schools.

Supt. J. E. Rogers, of Ryan High School, writes:

Your bill will have a far-reaching effect on the so-called "weaker schools" of this State. If passed, it will enable many schools to keep open their doors for a standard-length term. A great amount of Indian land in Jefferson County is nontaxable and the need for this legislation is urgent.

P. A. Becker, superintendent of schools at Elgin, writes:

Your bill will tend to equalize educational opportunities. It meets with my hearty approval.

Supt. E. H. Bingham, of Amber, president of the Grady County Schoolmasters' Club, and a member of the State board of education, states:

You have a good bill. I sincerely hope you are successful in getting it passed.

Supt. B. C. Swinney, of Lawton, wires:

Your bill would fill an imperative need in financing public schools.

Kenneth M. Harrel, superintendent of Fletcher Public Schools, states:

These trying times demand just such a bill. My school and my people feel that you have a solution to our problem.

Supt. E. C. Hall, of Friend High School, Grady County, says:

Your bill is unquestionably the type that should gain approval and support of every public-spirited citizen in the country.

J. E. Ruggles, superintendent at Cyril, writes:

The citizens of this section are indeed grateful to you for your interest in trying to solve the question of financing our public schools.

Miss Ina Lane of Anadarko, teacher in the schools at El Reno, says:

Our people are showing much interest in your bill and believe it to be a permanent solution of our school problem.

States D. M. Spann, county superintendent of Caddo County:

Please accept my hearty congratulations as well as congratulations of all friends of education in Caddo County for your untiring efforts to secure Federal aid for our needy schools. I am sure that this measure will meet with almost unanimous approval of the people of this county.

Supt. Chester P. Davis, of Duncan, writes:

I appreciate very much your interest in the great cause of education. In my judgment next year will be the most difficult one for us here in Duncan, and I hope that it will be possible for Federal funds to supplement our local budget.

Other leading school men have this to say:

J. E. Peery, superintendent of schools at Minco, says:

I am in hearty approval of section 3 (e), which entirely eliminates the Government from control in public education, but would give to each school child $2 to be expended without Federal control. More power to you, Jed.

Supt. R. R. Russell, Kingfisher, writes:

Even before the depression the schoolmaster was the "forgotten man", but not until the last 2 or 3 years has it reflected upon our youth. The street sweeper in Kingfisher has a larger annual income than any classroom teacher in our system.

Henry W. Downs, Hinton, Okla., states:

I endorse your educational bill in full. I am convinced that you know your business.

J. R. King, superintendent at Apache, states:

I don't know how a more complete or consistent bill could be drafted. Our people are indebted to you for efforts you are putting forth in our behalf.

P. M. Friesen, superintendent at Alden, says:

I agree with George Hann that yours is by far the best bill proposed to aid the present school emergency.

May I add in conclusion that I am receiving many letters daily from educators, school board members, farmers, and taxpayers enthusiastically and wholeheartedly supporting this legislation. It is impossible for me to quote from all of the splendid endorsements I have received. It is my sincere hope that Congress will meet this emergency in helping to finance our weak schools and, during the present session, pass either this or a similar bill as a permanent solution for this perplexing problem.

I submit that this is a national problem. It is as much a national problem as the construction of highways, and this Congress long ago adopted a sound and sensible policy of assistance in the construction of roads. What we are asking for here will represent only a fraction of the sum now being spent annually by the Federal Government on State-aid road construction. The people of the Nation will undoubtedly support a policy of Federal aid for our public schools, just as our people have very wisely supported a policy of Federal aid for roads and highways throughout the land.

THE HOME OWNERS' LOAN ACT OF 1933—THE NEED FOR ITS AMENDMENT AND FOR IMPROVEMENT OF ITS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to speak on the important phases of one of the gravest and most far-reaching problems confronting the United States today.

Perhaps so much as 75 percent of the mortgages against the homes of the United States are in default. Between one third and one half of the home owners are faced with foreclosure and dispossession.

To whom can these home owners turn for relief? What has the Federal Government done to relieve their distress? How much did the Home Owners' Loan Corporation accomplish? Is Federal relief to home owners a mere hope or a reality? What changes should be made in the law by Congress? These and other problems will be discussed by me.

HEAVY MORTGAGE INDEBTEDNESS IN THE UNITED STATES

The indebtedness in the form of mortgages outstanding against the homes of the United States is colossal.

The mortgages due on the homes occupied by their owners amount to at least $15,000,000,000, according to my calculations. If delinquent taxes and judgments are added, the indebtedness against these homes is at least $17,000,000,000. Homes which are rented are not eligible for Home Owners' Loan Corporation loans, and therefore are not considered here.

Most mortgages, except those given to building and loan associations, are for from 1 to 3 years. There has been practically no mortgage money available since 1931, so that almost all of these mortgages are overdue today. The short-term mortgages and also the long-term mortgages given to building and loan associations provide that if there is a default in the payment of taxes, the mortgage shall become due and payable at once. Due to this acceleration clause, it is no exaggeration to say that 75 percent of the mortgages against the homes of this country are past due. Of course, not all mortgages which are due are in distress, but it is safe to assume that from one third to one half of the home indebtedness is in distress and ready for foreclosure.

Now let us see what this means. It means that out of 10,503,000 home owners of the United States who live in their own homes, over two and one fourth millions are faced with foreclosure and dispossession. It means that over $12,000,000,000 of home indebtedness is in default and that between six and eight and one half billions are in distress, faced with foreclosure.

GRAVE SITUATION IN PENNSYLVANIA

Let us digress for a moment from the Nation and look at a State like Pennsylvania. In Pennsylvania there are 1,198,000 home owners who live in their own homes. There are not accurate estimates available on the mortgage indebtedness outstanding against these homes. But if we add delinquent taxes, judgments, and so forth, it is safe to estimate that the indebtedness against these homes is nearly $2,000,000,000.

Pennsylvania has about 400,000 mortgages in default. About 250,000 home owners are faced with loss of their homes by sheriff sale.

Now let us return to the United States as a whole and see what has been done to save the homes of our citizens from being sold out by auction. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation was a great measure, which will stand out in the legislative program presented by President Roosevelt. It is important that it be administered so as to realize its full potentialities. Let us see if that has been done.

When the Congress passed and the President signed the Federal act for the relief of distressed homes millions of our best citizens breathed a sigh of relief. They told themselves that their homes were safe. At least that much was sure.

That was in June 1933. Since then 9 months have passed. The time has come when we must know exactly how much the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has accomplished. We must determine what changes must be made in the law and in its administration.

LATEST HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION FIGURES

The last figures available are before me. They are as of the close of business March 9, 1934.

One million thirty-one thousand three hundred and forty-nine applications are now pending in the various offices of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. They total $3,203,794,222. These applications, let me emphasize, are still pending. One hundred fourteen thousand six hundred and seventy-eight loans totaling $325,151,720 have actually been closed throughout the United States. Only $325,000,000 of loans closed out of a total of from 6 to 8½ billions which are eligible. It is, of course, more just to compare the total number of loans closed with the total of applications pending, but even here the result is quite disappointing.

However, we must remember that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation did not in reality start to function until about the middle of October 1933. In the first 3 months of its operation only 369 loans were closed, totaling a little more than $1,000,000. By October 21, about 4 months after it started operations, 1,761 loans totaling $5,103,000 had been closed.

It took about 4 months to set up an organization in most parts of the country and to get it going. That would not be unreasonable, but let us see what the progress has been since. In the 4-week period subsequent to October 21, 7,052 loans were closed, totaling $20,704,000. At the present time the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is so geared that in a 4-week period it closes about 40,000 loans, totaling over $110,000,000, but this is still utterly inadequate. At this rate, it would take the Home Owners' Loan Corporation 4 years to relieve the distress of the two and one-half million home owners who need the Corporation's aid, if all should apply, which is not to be expected.

It is clear to me, as it must be to every student of the problem, that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, while its operations have been speeded up tremendously, is still disappointingly slow. Its speed must be doubled at the very least.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION IN PENNSYLVANIA

Now, let us look at Pennsylvania—what has been done by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation there, and how does it compare with other States? The various branches of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in Pennsylvania, as of March 9, had received 48,843 applications, totaling $154,320,269. Pennsylvania has closed 5,197 loans, totaling $14,736,412, slightly less than 10 percent of the applications received.

Another comparison: Pennsylvania today is far behind Ohio, Michigan, California, and Massachusetts. Here are the figures:

State	Number of loans closed	Amount of loans	Population (1930 census)
Ohio.....	20,181	$62,161,000	6,647,000
Michigan.....	9,725	27,822,000	4,842,000
California.....	6,725	18,965,000	5,677,000
Massachusetts.....	3,963	17,017,000	4,249,000
Pennsylvania.....	5,197	14,736,000	9,631,000

This comparison is not favorable to Pennsylvania. Ohio, with a population of only two thirds of that of Pennsylvania, has four times as many loans closed. Michigan, with a population of one half of that of Pennsylvania, has nearly twice as many loans closed.

I have examined the statistics which are available of the total mortgage indebtedness of these States and have compared them with Pennsylvania's. I can find no justification in these figures for the slowness of Pennsylvania. The operations leading to a home loan are extremely complicated. We hope they will be simplified so that the closing of loans may be speeded up.

Pennsylvanians have been patient. They have filed their applications and are now awaiting results. The time has come when they are entitled to them. The officials of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation throughout Pennsylvania are now speeding up their operations, and we sincerely hope they will give us these results.

Up to this point I have stated the gigantic problem of home relief confronting the United States. One hundred and fifteen thousand families in the United States have had their homes saved. But that is not enough. The process has been slow—painfully slow. Quicker action is necessary in Pennsylvania and throughout this country.

EXPANSION OF HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION ACTIVITIES NEEDED

In dealing with this aspect of the problem, I want to call attention to one figure which is especially significant. I have said that the applications already filed with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation total more than $3,200,000,000.

Keep this in mind, and compare it with another fact—the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 authorizes the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to issue a maximum of $2,000,000,000 of bonds. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation Board now considering legislation to amend the 1933 act, does not intend to increase the bond authorization, with the minor exception that the loans already made by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation will not be debited against the two billions authorized.

What does this mean? It means that no provision is made for almost $1,000,000,000 of home applications already filed with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. That is only the most obvious danger in the contemplated policy. What of the additional three to four and one-half billions of dollars of distressed homes? What of unencumbered homes, whose owners wish to borrow on them for repairs, or for other useful purposes? What of the million and more homes which can be built in this country in the next 2 years, if financing is made available?

I shall now discuss these needs more fully, and at the same time explain the measures which I have introduced in Congress to meet them.

A few days after Congress convened I introduced a bill providing for the guaranty of the principal of the bonds, and I shall first deal with that feature of the law.

SET-UP OF HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation is a corporation created in June 1933 by an act of Congress.

Although its entire capital stock of $200,000,000 is owned by the Federal Government, the corporation is a separate and distinct entity and not a part of the Government.

Under the present law, the Federal Government guarantees the interest of the Corporation's bonds but does not guarantee the principal. This has caused no end of difficulties in administering the law. Mortgage owners, particularly insurance companies, banks, and building and loan associations, were reluctant to accept these bonds and in many cases determined not to do so.

GUARANTY OF THE BONDS

It became clear very soon after the act had been passed that the lack of guaranty of the principal of the bonds by the Federal Government presented a serious difficulty.

In a message sent to Congress by President Roosevelt on February 28, 1934, the President expressed the view that since the Government was responsible for the creation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and had repeatedly appealed to the people of the United States to accept the bonds in exchange for home-loan mortgages, there was a definite moral obligation on the Federal Government to see that the principal amount of the bonds was paid. Therefore he recommended the guaranty of the principal of the bonds by the Federal Government.

There is no opposition to this proposal, so it may be stated with much confidence that it will shortly become the law of the land—it has already been passed by the Senate.

The present law provides that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation shall have the power to issue bonds not exceeding $2,000,000,000. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation is sponsoring a bill which would retain this provision, with an amendment to the effect that bonds already issued or agreed to be issued by the Corporation shall not be included in the total of $2,000,000,000.

The bill which I have introduced provides that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation shall have the power to issue bonds up to $5,000,000,000. Why?

INCREASE IN THE AMOUNT OF BONDS

As of March 9, 1934, 1,031,349 applications had been received by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation totaling $3,203,794,222. It is clear that a limit of $2,000,000,000 is utterly insufficient to take care of the applications which have already been filed, and which will be filed in the future, with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

In fact, it would seem to be dangerous to maintain that provision in the law, because it might induce the officials of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation either to stop the receipt of further applications or to eliminate thousands of applications already received, to prevent the total of applications from exceeding the limit of $2,000,000,000.

In considering amendments and changes of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 we are faced with making a decision on a problem of fundamental policy.

The Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 was passed to relieve distress among home owners and save them from foreclosure. But many of my colleagues, including myself, feel that the time has come now to extend the function of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and to make it not merely an agency for relief of distress but an instrument for active and vigorous promotion of recovery.

EXPANDING THE SCOPE OF THE HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

I feel that now is the time for the Federal Government to lend its aid to the stimulation of the construction industry by giving the Home Owners' Loan Corporation power to provide funds for extensive repairs to homes and for the construction of new homes.

NEED FOR NEW HOME CONSTRUCTION

The building industry is probably in worse condition than any other in the United States. Normally it employs directly and indirectly four and one half million men. Of these, about 75 percent are out of employment today.

For the years 1923 to 1926 the yearly average for new home construction in 257 cities was $2,200,000,000. In 1932 we spent in these same cities only $103,500,000, and in 1933 it is estimated that the total was only $101,000,000. It is almost unbelievable that during the last 2 years only 5 percent of the money previously employed for that purpose was used for the construction of new homes in the cities of the United States.

Twenty-four governmental agencies in Washington have collected statistics on the need for the construction of new homes. Their estimates vary, but they all agree that for the next few years we need between 500,000 and 800,000 new homes in the United States.

There can be no relief in the United States until we stimulate the construction industry. At present that industry furnishes the highest number of unemployed in proportion to other industries. These men must be fed, clothed, and sheltered. The question is, Shall we put these men on relief rolls or on pay rolls?

I have therefore proposed in my bills that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation be given the power to expend one and one half billion dollars in bonds for the construction of new homes and repair and modernization of existing homes. When we consider the need for modernization and the construction of new homes, we must keep in mind that at present between one third and 40 percent of the population of the United States live in substandard quarters.

I have also proposed that a home owner whose home is free and clear of mortgages be permitted to obtain the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in exchange for a first mortgage to be given to that Corporation up to 60 percent of the value of the home. The home owner could use the funds thus obtained for the repair and modernization of his home or in his business.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION DOES NOT AFFECT UNITED STATES BUDGET

It should be remarked before we go any further that these changes in the Home Owners' Loan Act would in no way affect the Budget, nor would they necessitate the borrowing of a single dollar by the Government or the levying of any additional taxes. The funds for these purposes would be provided by the issuance of bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Since these bonds are guaranteed both as to principal and interest, there would, of course, be a contingent liability on the Government; but if the Corporation is prudently and efficiently managed and if adequate security is taken for all loans made, there should be no loss at all to the Government.

There is one further proposal which I have made in my bills and which is of much importance to the country. After the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation are guaranteed by the Federal Government they will be, in effect, Government obligations. They should therefore have all the privileges attached to Government obligations.

CIRCULATING PRIVILEGE FOR HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION BONDS

Under the present law, which was just a few weeks ago extended by Congress, Federal Reserve banks and national banks have the right to obtain circulating Federal Reserve notes and national bank notes on the security of direct obligations of the Government. I have proposed that with the guaranty of the bonds by the Government the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation should be given the same privilege. This would permit the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to sell the bonds at a somewhat lower rate of interest and thus inure for the benefit of the home owner.

I have shown that what we need is a more efficient and speedy administration of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and an expansion of its powers. In that way we would provide true relief for the masses of the home owners of the United States and go a long way toward bringing back recovery.

Now, I should like to deal with housing conditions as they exist today and with the need for conscious social planning for the housing of the American people.

LIVING CONDITIONS IN THE UNITED STATES

We call ourselves the most advanced Nation of the world, yet 40 percent of the people of the United States occupy dwellings that do not permit a standard of living in decency and comfort.

Surprising as it may sound, we find tenements in Pittsburgh, in Chicago, and in New York, and in many other cities, which house from 3 to 13 human beings in a single room, which have a single hall toilet for from 2 to 10 families, and which in many cases have only an outside toilet.

Never before have the United States had such a splendid opportunity and perhaps never again will have such an easily available method of providing decent, humane shelter for millions of Americans.

NEW HOME CONSTRUCTION

It seems to be conceded by the responsible authorities in Washington that the construction of new single-family homes on a large scale is extremely desirable at this time, both for the purpose of stimulating the construction industry, and thus providing mass employment, and also for the purpose of supplying a shortage of single-family homes. The question which is still being debated in the Nation's Capital is by what method the Government can best assist in this matter.

I can see no better method of bringing this about than by utilizing the huge machinery already set up by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. That Corporation has an agency in every county in the United States, has trained thousands of employees, and has accumulated considerable experience in dealing with loans to home owners.

I have proposed in my bill that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation exchange its bonds for mortgages on newly constructed homes to the extent of 75 percent of the combined value of lot and new dwelling.

Alternative plans have been suggested. It has been suggested that Congress pass new legislation to permit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation directly to discount mortgages placed on new homes. This plan meets with obvious objections. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation does not have the machinery to deal with individual owners of mortgages, nor does it have any way in which it could pass on the soundness of titles. All this machinery is already provided in the set-up of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, existing throughout the United States.

In this connection it is interesting to examine a survey which has been made by the Research Division of the N.R.A. under the able supervision of its director, Alexander Sachs. The economic experts of the N.R.A. estimate that, because of the increase in the number of new families, the need for replacement of homes abandoned and burned down and the necessity for improving the standard of housing, this country requires the construction of about 800,000 new individual one-family homes during the next 2 years, at a total expenditure of about two and one half billion dollars.

I conclude by calling attention to the need for conscious community planning and building.

COMMUNITY PLANNING

The layout of practically all our cities of today is more or less accidental. The various parts of the city were planned without regard to, or coordination with, each other. In many cases, individual units in the neighborhood were planned without realization of the relation of the unit to the rest of the neighborhood.

The time has come when we should experiment with the construction of large-scale housing in integrated units. I have in mind the planning and simultaneous construction of new sections of cities which will provide adequate housing in rows of individual dwellings, or in rows of two- or three-story flats, to be surrounded by sufficient gardens, parks, and playgrounds. Such a section could well include a community kindergarten, a conveniently located market, planned as part of the housing development, a school and many other integral parts of a well-ordered community.

On housing, whether in individual family units, in socially planned sections, or in small communities within cities, we could usefully spend billions of dollars. A housing program treated in an intelligent way and on a sufficiently large scale could well bring us back to prosperity.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION TO HELP BUILD SMALL HOMES

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation, with its machinery extending to every county of the United States, could play a large part in such a program. While the emergency exists and building funds are not obtainable from private sources, it provides a marvelous opportunity for the financing of the construction of small individual homes without cost or expense to the Government.

This would create employment, put money into circulation, and help to pull us out of the depression. Moreover, it would be the beginning of a program that could well be carried on for a generation to come until all of America is housed in a decent, humane, and comfortable manner.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

In the Home Owners' Loan Act the Roosevelt administration has created one of its most useful instruments. With the gradual improvement of the machinery of the administration of the act, it is hoped that perhaps a million home owners in the United States will be saved from foreclosure. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation lends itself equally well to the construction of new homes. It could in that manner become a measure for recovery in a positive sense.

The Home Owners' Loan Act will teach us far-reaching lessons. It has shown that the financing of the American homes must be by long-term mortgages and at low rates of interest. It will be of tremendous benefit to the home owners of the country, and, if properly administered, can become one of the outstanding achievements of the administration of President Roosevelt.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state, it is my opinion that as long as we have a system of government permitting 4 percent of its citizens to own 96 percent of the wealth of our country there will be depressions. It is a fact there are millions of citizens in the United States who are in need of the necessities of life. This condition should not prevail in a country like ours where there is an abundance of everything which is essential to satisfy human needs. The sad plight of our unfortunate citizens could be remedied within a brief period of time if the Congress of the United States would enact the following progressive and humane legislation: Pensions for the aged, widows, and all those who are physically incapacitated, unemployment insurance, reimbursement for unpaid school teachers (regardless of creed, race, nationality, or color), guaranteeing the safety of people's money in all banks and all other institutions of finance, abolition of sweat shops, slum districts, and chain-gang systems, discontinuance of inhuman treatment of prison inmates, less money for battleships and other things that destroy human life, but more money for education and the eradication of the causes of depressions, legislation which will benefit the ex-service men and their dependents, Federal employees, farmers, coal miners, and all others who labor for a livelihood.

I am sure that if Congress would pass the legislation herein mentioned, undoubtedly ours would be the kind of Government for which our forefathers fought and died—"a government of the people, for the people, and by the people."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I would not take up the time of the House at this moment if it were not for the fact that I was not in the Chamber when my good friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], as I understand, attacked the American Federation of Labor. From what I understand he said, he is in sympathy with the automotive manufacturers of Detroit in their fight against the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not say that. I said for any organization at this particular time to incite any trouble was disloyalty to the President of the United States.

Mr. CONNERY. That is just what I want to talk about now. Yesterday afternoon in the office of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN], my colleague, who is a member of the Labor Committee, I was shown I do not know how many affidavits signed by workers from the city of Pittsburgh who were seeking to form bona fide union organizations in the plants out there. Among those affidavits were affidavits of men who had gone into these plants after company-union elections had been held and foremen had discharged these men because they had not voted for the company union, and the most scurrilous language was used to these men because they had refused to vote for the company unions. I cannot even attempt to repeat on the floor of the House of Representatives the language which was used to these men and the abuse which was heaped upon them. That is going on all over the country. I have letters from every part of the United States on this very matter. That is why Senator WAGNER introduced the Wagner bill in the Senate and why I introduced the Connery bill in the House, known as the "Wagner-Connery bill", to put teeth in the Labor Board set-up, so that we can do away with company unions. In the Senate when the N.R.A. bill was under consideration Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska, and Senator WHEELER, of Montana, made it plain that they would not subscribe to an amendment which sought to put company unions in the N.R.A., and all the debate in the House and in the Senate at that time when that bill came up was to the effect that N.R.A. would be no good for labor unless the clause 7-a absolutely did away with company unions. These company unions are the bane of labor and workers in the United States, and that is the real fight today.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I will yield to my friend in a few moments. The fight at Detroit today is not the fight of the American Federation of Labor to control industry. It is a battle of the workers in Detroit to organize themselves into a real, honest, bona fide labor union, not controlled by the automotive manufacturers, but a real workers' union; and the American Federation of Labor, as it always has done in the past, is aiding those workers to get their rights to organize under 7-a of the National Recovery Act. Do not forget what the President of the United States said a short time ago—and I wish to repeat what I have said frequently in public, that I think Franklin D. Roosevelt is the greatest President the United States has had since Abraham Lincoln. [Applause.] He is a humanitarian and has the interest and well-being of the exploited workers in industry deeply at heart.

The President in his speech to the N.R.A. conference in Constitution Hall said that the language in the N.R.A. giving labor the right to organize and the right of collective bargaining means exactly what it says, and the American Federation of Labor is fighting the battle of the President of the United States in insisting that the workers in Detroit and every place else in the United States get their rights to organize under the N.R.A. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Does my friend from Massachusetts believe that in this particular moment the American Federation of Labor ought to call out on strike 250,000 men who now have good positions, who are the heads of families, who are working 36 hours per week on good pay, and who are satisfied, simply because it insists on the men having a union card, and the unions demanding that $6,000,000 be turned over to them in monthly dues by these auto factories?

Mr. CONNERY. Why does not the gentleman from Texas put the burden of this threatened strike where it belongs, on the manufacturers who are breaking the laws of the United States, and not try to shift the burden onto the workers?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Just for a brief statement in answer to the gentleman from Texas. If there is any labor disorder in Detroit, the responsibility rests upon the shoulders of the manufacturers of the city of Detroit, because we have passed a law here giving labor the right to organize, and I have talked with representatives of Detroit factories, and they have told me that they will not obey the mandate of Congress, and I for one am going to uphold the sanctity of the laws of the Congress of the United States and the will of the President. Congress gave to big business the right to combine to fix prices; they suspended the antitrust laws. And in the same law it gave to the laborers the right to be organized and to be affiliated with a union of their own choice, the right to collective bargaining, and freedom from control of a company union. That is the law to be enforced equally on both sides.

As far as I am concerned, there will be only one code and interpretation of laws. The laws of this country should apply with equal fairness to both the manufacturer and to the worker. I sincerely hope that the law will be followed at this time and that there will be no strike.

American justice demands the equal protection of the laws to all classes of citizens, without the interference of any influence whatsoever.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is any other business coming before the House this afternoon?

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. We have a conference report that we desire to consider and dispose of, and then there is the legislative appropriation bill; and under general debate on that bill the gentleman will have the right to discuss this or any other subject in order in general debate. We are then to follow it with the tariff bill; and I do think the gentleman should give us an opportunity to proceed with the business before the House. I object.

CONFERENCE REPORT, AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1935

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H.R. 8134) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana calls up a conference report and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the conferees.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8134) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5 and 6.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 19, 21, 29, 30, 31, 33, and 34, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,348,619"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,394,323"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$230,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$312,701"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$136,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$16,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 1, 3, 4, 25, 26, 27, 28, 32, and 35.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8134) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

CORRECTIONS OF TOTALS, PUNCTUATION, SPELLING, ETC.

The following amendments relate to the correction of totals to correspond with the action taken as to specific items, corrections of punctuation and spelling, perfection of style, etc.:

Amendments nos. 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 15, 16, 18, 19, 27, 28, 29, 31, 34, and 35.

On amendment no. 5: Eliminates the appropriation of $10,000 provided by the Senate for the establishment of a meteorological station at Missoula, Mont.

On amendment no. 11: Dutch elm disease research: Retains $50,000, as provided by the Senate, for an additional amount, under forest pathology, for research on the Dutch elm disease.

On amendment no. 14: Western irrigation agriculture: Appropriates $12,000 of an unexpended balance, as proposed by the Senate, for an additional amount for western irrigation agriculture.

On amendment no. 17: Forest-fire cooperation: Appropriates $1,348,619 instead of $1,198,619, as proposed by the House, and $1,498,619, as proposed by the Senate, for forest-fire cooperation.

On amendment no. 20: Japanese-beetle control: Appropriates $230,000 instead of $203,010, as proposed by the House, and $279,030, as proposed by the Senate, for Japanese-beetle control.

On amendment no. 21: Phony-peach eradication: Strikes out the House language requiring that expenditures for phony-peach eradication be matched by the State, county, or local authorities or by individuals or organizations.

On amendment no. 22: Corn borer research: Provides an increase of $50,000 instead of an increase of $100,000, as proposed by the Senate, in the funds for corn borer research under the appropriation for cereal and forage insects.

On amendment no. 23: Cotton insects: Provides a direct appropriation of $136,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $114,763, as proposed by the House, for cotton insects, and strikes out the Senate language reappropriating $39,000 as an additional amount for the same purpose.

On amendment no. 24: Foreign plant quarantines: Appropriates $16,000 instead of $95,000, as proposed by the Senate, out of an unexpended balance, as an additional amount for foreign plant quarantines.

On amendment no. 30: Crop and livestock estimates (relating to corn): Permits the preparation and publication of reports stating the intention of farmers as to the acreage to be planted in corn instead of forbidding the same as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 33: Grasshopper control: Appropriates $2,354,893, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,000,000, as proposed by the House, for grasshopper control.

AMENDMENTS IN DISAGREEMENT

The committee on conference report in disagreement the following amendments of the Senate:

On no. 1: Establishing the position of Under Secretary of Agriculture.

On nos. 3 and 4: Increasing the allotment for expenditure for allowances for living quarters for employees in the Foreign Service of the Department and striking out the provision which limits to $720 the amount which may be so expended for any one person.

On no. 25: Appropriating $300,000 for control and prevention of spread of Dutch elm disease.

On no. 26: Appropriating $360,000 for control and prevention of spread of the gypsy and brown-tail moths.

On no. 32: Authorizing an expenditure of $10,000 from the funds available for carrying into effect the Agricultural Adjustment Act for the share of the United States as a member of the International Wheat Advisory Committee.

JOHN N. SANDLIN,
M. J. HART,
CLARENCE CANNON,
J. H. SINCLAIR,
LLOYD THURSTON,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 1: Page 2 of the bill, line 4, after the word "Agriculture", insert "Under Secretary of Agriculture, $10,000, and there is hereby established in the Department of Agriculture the position of Under Secretary of Agriculture, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and whose compensation shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum."

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SANDLIN. I will.

Mr. SNELL. What information was there before the committee that influenced the committee to believe it was necessary to have an under secretary of Agriculture at the present time?

Mr. SANDLIN. We held quite extensive hearings before the subcommittee on that question. Based on those hearings, the subcommittee included this provision in the bill, which was reported to the Committee on Appropriations. It went out on a point of order, as it was legislation. Then the bill went to the Senate, and they put it in there. The conference committee accepted it. There are three or four departments of the Government which have under secretaries who draw this salary.

Mr. SNELL. I do not care about what is happening in other departments. What is the real reason that we must have an under secretary here? It has been the traditional policy of Members on the Democratic side to oppose creating the position of under secretary. I should like to know what has made them change their position at this time?

Mr. SANDLIN. The reason is that the Secretary of Agriculture is doing so much work that he needs additional help to handle it. We have been doing so many things for agriculture that we on this side thought he should be given this under secretary. Everybody knows, with all the legislation that has been passed by this Congress, it has placed upon the Secretary of Agriculture many additional duties. There is not a Cabinet officer whose duties have been enlarged as much as those of the Secretary of Agriculture by legislation passed by this Congress.

Mr. SNELL. I agree with the gentleman to that extent, but how many extra men have already been assigned to the Department of Agriculture from the various other departments, who are drawing their pay not through the regular established appropriations for the Department?

Mr. SANDLIN. I cannot give the number that have been assigned.

Mr. SNELL. Is it not a fact that they have assigned new men to take care of all the temporary duties? It is the understanding that these are only temporary duties. Why not let the men who have been assigned there take care of those duties and not create a position, because, if you create that position, it will last for all time.

Mr. SANDLIN. That is probably true, but the evidence before our committee showed that, with the exception of the Secretary of Agriculture, there is no one down there who could sign certain papers. The Chief of the Weather Bureau had to perform the service of an under secretary. There was no other man there who could sign certain documents and papers except the Chief of the Weather Bureau.

Mr. SNELL. But there are several men down there who could be designated to sign any papers which required to be signed.

Mr. SANDLIN. It could be done by passing a law authorizing them to do it.

Mr. SNELL. I would not create a new position at a salary of $10,000 a year simply to have somebody to sign some papers.

Mr. SANDLIN. Of course, there are other duties he will have to perform.

Mr. SNELL. But we do know that there are any number of men who have been assigned there to perform all the extra duties. This new legislation is not supposed to be permanent, but you are creating a permanent position.

Mr. SANDLIN. Will it change the position of the gentleman if he hears what the Secretary of Agriculture had to say about it?

Mr. SNELL. I should like to hear it.

Mr. SANDLIN. I read what the Secretary had to say about it:

In order to more effectively handle the constantly increasing pressure of the business which must be dealt with in the executive offices of the Department, there exists an urgent need for an additional assistant to the Secretary of Agriculture. Such a position, with the designation of "Under Secretary", following the precedent established in the cases of the State and Treasury Departments, was included in the Budget estimates as submitted to Congress by the President. However, this was not included in the agricultural appropriation bill, as passed by the House. No additional appropriation will be required, as funds are available for the salary of an additional assistant by reason of other payroll reductions.

At present a major portion of the time of both the Secretary and the one Assistant Secretary now authorized for the Department is occupied by personal conferences with producer, trade, and other groups that are vitally affected by current activities of the Government, from an early hour in the morning until several hours after the regular closing time in the evening. These officers are also called upon to attend numerous legislative hearings, conferences, etc., and to participate in the planning and execution of major recovery and related activities of the administration where it is essential that the agricultural interests be fully represented and coordinated with the general program.

Under these conditions it has become increasingly difficult to give adequate attention to the large volume of business that arises in the ordinary conduct of the affairs of the Department. This represents a business of considerable magnitude and includes the settlement daily of matters involving important public interests. It affects also the transaction of private business in the many lines affected by the scope of work intrusted to this Department by the Congress, especially in connection with the regulatory laws. At present the Secretary and Assistant Secretary are compelled to pass upon a gist of such matters, including leases, contracts, bonds, and other fiscal papers, etc., without the opportunity for informing themselves as completely as they feel both the public interest and their personal satisfaction demand. This situation is aggravated by the fact that having only one Assistant Secretary, in the absence of either the Secretary or the Assistant Secretary the entire burden must be assumed by the other official. This is frankly a physical impossibility if matters to be determined or documents to be signed are to be given the consideration which the public business is entitled to receive.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate that is all right as far as the Department is concerned.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SANDLIN. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Is not the real object of this proposition simply to raise Professor Tugwell's salary from $8,000 to $10,000 a year?

Mr. SANDLIN. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. TABER. And to put in another Assistant Secretary in addition?

Mr. SANDLIN. As far as I know, I will say I do not know that that is the fact at all.

Mr. TABER. That is what I understand.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDLIN. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. This amendment creates the position of under secretary of Agriculture. Every newspaper in the United States has said that it is to give Mr. Rexford Tugwell, a member of Secretary Wallace's staff, a $10,000 job. Does not the gentleman feel, in view of all this newspaper publicity, that Rexford Tugwell is going to be promoted to the post of under secretary?

Mr. SANDLIN. Speaking for myself, I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that it makes no difference to me what is carried in the newspapers. My action upon this matter is based upon information which leads me to believe the position is justified.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman thinks we need a new $10,000 position in this program of farming the farmers of the country?

Mr. SANDLIN. I can speak for my section only. I do not know how it has affected the gentleman's section.

Mr. O'MALLEY. We in Wisconsin know what it has done to us and our information does not come from newspapers.

Mr. SANDLIN. In my section of the country we have received more benefit from the present administration of the Department of Agriculture than we have from any previous administration.

Mr. O'MALLEY. That is not the situation in the State of Wisconsin, though I know the South has been well taken care of. Mr. Tugwell's brain waves have not helped our situation one whit, insofar as the dairy problem is concerned.

Mr. SANDLIN. The gentleman, of course, is advised as to his section, and as to that I shall not attempt to argue with him.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDLIN. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Is it to be understood that if this position is created, Professor Tugwell will get it?

Mr. SANDLIN. Do not put into my mouth something I did not say or do not know. I say I do not know whether he will or not.

Mr. MOTT. Then I will tell the gentleman that is the fact.

Mr. SANDLIN. I have no assurance on the subject.

Mr. MOTT. This is what I want to ask the gentleman: When this office is created and Mr. Tugwell is appointed under secretary of Agriculture will he not be doing exactly the same work as under secretary that he is now doing as Assistant Secretary?

Mr. SANDLIN. I am not prepared to answer that.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDLIN. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will this office carry a straight salary of $10,000 or will this amount be subject to the pay cut?

Mr. SANDLIN. It will be subject to the pay cut.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDLIN. I yield.

Mr. SINCLAIR. There are only three Presidential appointive officers in the Department of Agriculture. There is the Secretary of Agriculture, the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, and I believe the Chief of the Weather Bureau. It has been found that the duties of the office call both the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary away from the office at times. The Weather Bureau is located a mile from the office of the Secretary of Agriculture, consequently there is no one left in authority when the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary leave the main office, and they have to get an Executive order from the President in order to transact certain phases of the business of the Department.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDLIN. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman from North Dakota know how many additional men are being carried in the Department of Agriculture at the present time from the outside agencies?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I do not know, but it is several thousand.

Mr. SNELL. Several thousand; yet you must create another job! My honest opinion about the matter is, although I cannot prove it, that this proposition is advanced for the purpose of giving another Democrat a job and giving this man Tugwell a $10,000 salary.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I beg to correct the gentleman on that point.

Mr. SNELL. I said that was my idea.

Mr. DINGELL. If Mr. Tugwell is the man concerned, he is a Republican and not a Democrat.

Mr. SNELL. Tugwell! Forget it; forget it! He never claimed to be a Republican, and we certainly do not claim him.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Tugwell is a Republican.

Mr. SINCLAIR. It was the feeling of the committee that there ought to be an under secretary in the Department of Agriculture to keep pace with the other departments of the Government. Agriculture is entitled to that.

Mr. SNELL. Simply to keep pace with the other departments. That is the best excuse given yet. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Louisiana yield that I may ask the Republican member of the committee a question?

Mr. SANDLIN. Certainly.

Mr. MOTT. Can the gentleman from North Dakota tell me whether or not it is a fact that when this office of under secretary is created and Professor Tugwell is appointed to the office, he will not be doing exactly the same work as under secretary of Agriculture that he is now doing as Assistant Secretary of Agriculture; that the only difference will be an amount of $2,000 increase of salary?

Mr. SINCLAIR. No; I do not think that is true; I think he will do different work entirely. This under secretary will do additional work.

Mr. MOTT. That is what I am getting at. Now, what is the additional work that Mr. Tugwell will do as under secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. SINCLAIR. There was not fully explained to the committee exactly the nature of the work, but it was felt that the business of the Department of Agriculture had increased and was increasing all the time and that there was need for an additional person to help carry out the work.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman answer another question? Is it also not a fact that when this office of Under Secretary of Agriculture is created carrying a $10,000 salary, instead of the $8,000 for Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, that this one man will be appointed to this position at an increase of $2,000 a year with a little extra work? Is not that the set-up?

Mr. SINCLAIR. According to my information, that is the fact.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment no. 3: On page 3, line 17, strike out "$20,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$22,990."

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment no. 4: On page 3, line 23, after the parenthesis, strike out "but not to exceed $720 may be so used for any one person."

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SANDLIN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 4 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken by said amendment, insert: ", but the amount so used for any one person shall not exceed the amount permitted by law to be so used, during the fiscal year 1935, for any one person in the Foreign Service of the Department of Commerce."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment no. 25. On page 55, after line 22, insert: "Dutch elm disease: For control and prevention of spread of the Dutch elm disease in the United States, $300,000."

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SANDLIN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment no. 25 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Dutch elm disease: For control and prevention of spread of the Dutch elm disease in the United States, $150,000: Provided, That this sum shall be reduced by an amount equal to any amount that may hereafter be allotted for the purposes named herein from any Federal relief or other Federal emergency appropriations."

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SANDLIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand, some of these emergency organizations at the present time are allotting money for this work, are they not?

Mr. SANDLIN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. They are allotting some money?

Mr. SANDLIN. Several thousand dollars.

Mr. SNELL. I know the people in the northeastern section of the United States are very much disturbed over the spread of the disease. Personally I know nothing about it, but several have written me and said it should be studied and controlled before it gets too far.

Mr. SANDLIN. We think a sufficient amount has been allotted.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman thinks there is a sufficient amount to make the study that is necessary and to control the spread of the disease so far as we can at this time?

Mr. SANDLIN. Your committee thinks so; yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment no. 26: On page 55, after line 24, insert: "Gypsy and brown-tail moths: For the control and prevention of spread of the gypsy and brown-tail moths, $360,000."

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SANDLIN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment no. 26 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert: "Gypsy and brown-tail moths: For the control and prevention of spread of the gypsy and brown-tail moths, $360,000 of the sum allotted for this purpose for the fiscal year 1934 by the Public Works Administration shall be available only for expenditure during the fiscal year 1935."

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I submit a preferential motion.

I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment no. 26.

May I ask the chairman of the committee the effect of the proposed amendment?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The effect of Mr. SANDLIN's amendment is to give to the Department of Agriculture $360,000 to maintain the moth-free zone around the moth-infested area for the next year. The Department says this will be sufficient.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BEEDY. When this bill left the House is it true that it only appropriated $300,000?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It included nothing; but it was supposed that the Public Works Board had modified their resolution setting aside some $2,000,000 for the control of the gypsy moth and that $360,000 would be available for the next fiscal year, 1935. The Department became in doubt as to whether this new resolution was sufficient under the ruling of the Comptroller General for the Public Works Board to spend this money. The amendment offered by the chairman of the subcommittee simply takes the money from them and appropriates it for the next fiscal year and leaves no doubt about the $360,000 being available. Mr. Strong says this is sufficient to carry on the ordinary activities and to maintain the moth-free zone and that is all that is necessary.

Mr. KENNEY. Do we actually make this appropriation here?

Mr. BUCHANAN. We actually make it in this bill.

Mr. KENNEY. So that we are appropriating money now in the hands of the Public Works?

Mr. BUCHANAN. We are appropriating money that has been allotted for expenditure to the Department of Agriculture that has not been spent.

Mr. KENNEY. What assurance do we have that the Public Works will turn the money over to the Agricultural Department?

Mr. BUCHANAN. This is the law. This takes it from the Public Works.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEY. I yield.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] will remember that an amendment was offered by myself when this bill was originally before the House providing an appropriation of $300,000 for this purpose. If the motion now made by the gentleman from Louisiana is carried, will it have the same effect as appropriating $360,000 for this purpose?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Exactly the same effect.

Mr. KENNEY. Then I understand that the effect of the motion made by the chairman of the subcommittee is virtually the same as my preferential motion, so far as the amount of money is concerned.

Mr. BUCHANAN. So far as the $360,000 is concerned, it is.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. SANDLIN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment no. 27: Page 56, line 4, strike out "$2,882,309" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,739,566."

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SANDLIN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment no. 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$3,130,536."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment no. 28: On page 56, in line 5, strike out "$632,430" and insert in lieu thereof "$674,430."

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SANDLIN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$669,430."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment no. 32: Page 81, after line 7, insert:

"INTERNATIONAL PRODUCTION CONTROL COMMITTEES

"During the fiscal year 1935 the Secretary of Agriculture may expend not to exceed $10,000, from the funds available for carrying into effect the Agricultural Adjustment Act approved May 12, 1933 (Public, No. 10, 73d Cong.), the share of the United States as a member of the International Wheat Advisory Committee or like events or bodies concerned with the reduction of agricultural surpluses or other objectives of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, together with traveling and all other necessary expenses relating thereto."

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment no. 35: Page 83, line 15, strike out "$59,428,887" and insert in lieu thereof "$60,991,037."

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SANDLIN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment no. 35 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$60,232,007."

The motion was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement comparing the total appropriations as finally agreed upon with the Budget estimates and the totals of the bill as passed by the House and as it passed the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Statement comparing the total appropriations as finally agreed to with the amount of the Budget estimates and the totals as the bill passed the House and as it passed the Senate:

Budget estimates.....	$62,227,005
Total as passed the House.....	59,428,887
Total as passed the Senate.....	61,001,037
Total agreed to in conference (including tentative agreements as to items brought back in disagreement).....	60,232,007
Increase above total as passed the House.....	803,120
Decrease under total as passed the Senate.....	769,030
Decrease under Budget.....	1,994,998

FARM-CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

The Budget estimate for the Farm Credit Administration is in the sum of $2,389,666, which is the amount appropriated, there having been no change in the Budget estimates for this service either by the House or by the Senate.

MILEPOSTS IN CONSERVATION

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a radio speech delivered by my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG], on the preservation of wild life.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to unanimous consent heretofore granted, I am submitting for printing in the RECORD a radio address delivered by my colleague, Hon. RICHARD M. KLEBERG, on Friday evening, March 16, 1934, on the subject of the legislative program affecting the conservation of wild life.

The address is as follows:

I come to you this afternoon inspired by a combination of what I consider to be both a happy privilege and a duty. I bring you the most important message affecting the conservation of wild life that we have received in a generation. I mean this in all sincerity because those of us in Congress who have witnessed the trends in wild-life thought and legislation feel that the movement for protection and restoration of the wild life of our country has reached the highest point of perfection heretofore attained. In fact, for the first time our country finds itself permanently fortified along lines which insure that future generations will not be deprived of some of the keenest pleasures and experiences that those of us in past generations have enjoyed.

Permit me to review what this legislative program is and then to tell you some of the advantages which inevitably will follow. On Monday of last week the House passed three permanent laws, the combined provisions of these constituting a broad, permanent, and far-reaching national program for the restoration of our wild-life resources. These bills are popularly known or referred to as the "duck stamp" bill, the "coordination bill", and the "Joseph T. Robinson national-forest refuge bill." All three of these had previously passed the Senate and two of them had already been signed by the President. It was my particular privilege to have introduced two of these measures in the House of Representatives—the "duck stamp" bill and the coordination bill. The companion measures in the Senate were introduced by Hon. FREDERICK WALCOTT, of Connecticut, Chairman of the Senate Wild Life Committee. It was also my privilege to present all three of these measures to the House Committee on Agriculture for its approval and then to steer them through the House to final passage. Their provisions are as follows:

The "duck stamp" bill provides that all shooters of migratory waterfowl shall purchase at convenient post offices a $1 stamp, which must be attached to their State hunting license or certificate. In the House this bill was amended to exempt from its operation minors under the age of 16 and resident owners, tenants, or share croppers who shoot migratory fowl on their own property when found endangering crops or property. Ninety percent of the money raised by the sale of these duck stamps will be used for the purpose of operating and maintaining waterfowl sanctuaries throughout our country. These sanctuaries will be inviolate in which no shooting or hunting will be permitted. They will constitute the breeding, nesting, resting, and feeding grounds of our ducks, geese, and other waterfowls in their migrations north and south across our continent. While no accurate figures are at present obtainable as to the amount of money the sale of these duck stamps will bring in, under estimates by official agencies and others it is reasonably certain that about $1,000,000 a year will be raised for the purchase of these sanctuaries. The "duck stamp" bill places a large share of the responsibilities for restoring and maintaining our waterfowl population upon those who receive the direct benefits in the way of more birds and better shooting. Every conservation agency in America supported this bill, as well as multiple thousands of individual sportsmen and bird and game lovers. Never has there been such unanimous public opinion for and back of a conservation measure.

Those of you who have followed legislation for the protection of game and the wild-life resources of our country will recall that a few years ago what was called the "dollar license and public shooting grounds bill" was introduced.

This bill was properly confronted with whole-hearted opposition from every corner of our country and you should know the difference between that bill and the present "duck stamp" bill to prevent confusion which has been brought about through statements by misinformed persons, as well as in some instances through press notices which, while well intentioned were not conversant with the facts. In the case of the dollar license and public shooting grounds bill revenues which were raised from the license were intended for the purchase and development of public shooting grounds where sportsmen could congregate and shoot ducks and geese, thus providing for a concentrated slaughter of the birds, with no provision for places where they might breed, nest, rest, and feed, a principle which could inevitably mean nothing other than the more immediate extinction of our wild life resources and in its final effect be directly opposed to the best interests of our people, our sportsmen, and our wild life. On the other hand, the "duck stamp" bill provides that the revenue raised thereunder will be used for the purchase and maintenance of inviolate sanctuaries or refuges for our birds, where no shooting will be permitted at all. A practical mind could readily see that the inevitable increase and surplus of the birds thus given an opportunity to multiply in their migration from protected nesting and feeding areas will benefit our sportsmen and our younger generation by providing what we hope will be an inexhaustible source of supply. The declining waterfowl population must be restored before more shooting is permitted or possible. So, briefly, the old public shooting ground bill provided for the prompt extinction or extermination of nature's source of many of our outdoor pleasures, where the "duck stamp" bill just enacted guarantees both protection and an increase in the joys of the life the outdoors holds in store for our people.

One million dollars a year over a period of years in this restoration process will not only increase the waterfowl population but will be of enormous benefit to the agricultural interests of the country. To create or restore a waterfowl sanctuary requires certain water levels. This stable water level is provided by the construction of dikes and dams for the impounding of water. In such areas marshes, grasses, and reeds, as well as other plant life affording both shelter and food for waterfowl, will be produced.

Permit me to digress to call your attention briefly to the important relation of the coordination bill to both the "duck stamp" bill and Senator Robinson's bill. The stabilizing influence of the water levels in these various refuges will be a vital and important factor in raising the subterranean water level or water table of the adjacent and surrounding farm lands below these refuges. In the past there has unquestionably been a great amount of highly unfortunate and ill-advised drainage without regard to its effect upon the natural resources of the country. I am convinced that under the coordination bill great and valuable research will be developed and truths brought to light which will mean much to every section of the country engaged in agriculture. Not only our water tables, so important to those who till the soil, but the subterranean water levels involved in wells will be protected from the constant lowering process which has followed in the destruction of certain natural courses for the flow of water under nature's law by this ill-advised drainage, and so forth. There are only two possible causes for the lowering of our water tables and the subterranean level of water in wells. One is caused by drought or lack of rainfall over long periods on the watersheds which supply them and the other is the diversion of the natural flow of water on these watersheds and the dissipation through drainage and evaporation of the great natural reservoirs which supply these levels.

A word in conclusion with reference to the "duck stamp" bill. This measure will provide, through strategically located sanctuaries, for a more orderly and leisurely migration both to and from the breeding and nesting grounds of these birds in their annual migrations. The present highly developed network of lines of transportation and the development of speed in transit of the past few years has brought about a situation which makes it possible for hundreds of sportsmen to be ready and waiting for these birds at practically every place within our land where they might alight in their migration during hunting seasons variously arranged in different States. This situation, in effect, provides that the bands of ducks and geese, when they head south, will constantly be shunted onward, without a chance to rest in our country, until they reach Mexico or other southern climates, where there are no game laws and where these birds are destroyed by market hunters. In Mexico, for instance, a very large percentage of the birds killed for market purposes spoil before they can be sold in the non-refrigerated, open-air center markets, where they are sold all over Mexico. The "duck stamp" bill will inevitably curtail the southern limits of the migration of many of our varieties to where vast numbers of both ducks and geese will never go farther south than the southernmost established sanctuaries under this bill.

The restoration and perpetuation of our wild life go hand in hand with the farming interests of our country. There is no conflict between the two, although in times past this fact has not been as well understood as it will be in the future. Every movement toward the increase of wild life is a movement which will ultimately benefit the farmer. I am happy to know that recently, at a conference held under the direction of the Senate Wild Life Committee on January 25, there were present representatives from the Farmers' Union, the National Grange, and the American Farm Bureau, the three great agencies representing the agricultural and farming interests of the United States. They joined with the representatives of all of the conservation organizations of the country, including the official State agencies, in endorsing the three bills which I have mentioned. This was a new day for conservation.

The coordination bill in itself establishes a policy of cooperation among Federal departments and bureaus engaged in conservation activities. It may be interesting to know that our wild-life resources are administered in some degree by all of our Federal departments, although the Departments of Agriculture, Interior, and Commerce play the most important parts. Under the Department of Agriculture we have the Biological Survey and the Forest Service. Under Commerce we have the Bureau of Fisheries, and under the Interior we have the national parks and the control of erosion. To coordinate the activities of these departments to bring about a closer cooperation and working understanding, to foster a unified policy for wild life, are the purposes behind this bill. Under its provisions utilization may be made of our streams, our forests, and our public domain in the development of a great restoration program for wild life.

POLLUTION

Under the coordination bill there will be begun a Nation-wide correction of conditions which, through pollution of our streams, lakes, and inland bays, has caused untold destruction of fish, migratory, shore, and song birds, as well as in some cases seriously affecting important mammalian wild life.

The national-forest refuge bill was introduced by Senator JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, of Arkansas, the majority leader of the Senate. By Executive order the President of the United States may set aside designated areas within the national forests and on the public domain for the protection of our wild-life resources. These areas must obtain the approval of the States within which they are to be located, thus saving any question as to State rights in the management and control of its own wild-life resources.

Perhaps the greatest benefit that wild life will receive from all of the recovery programs is that which will come from the removal of submarginal land from commercial agriculture. There are literally millions of acres of so-called "farm land" which are not capable of producing enough to justify their cultivation, yet they have entered into competition with more favorable land, causing over production. Thus, these lands help to depreciate the selling price of all agricultural products. There was recently created a Federal Surplus Relief Corporation, with the Government as the sole stockholder, the purpose of which is to purchase these submarginal areas wherever they may be, removing them from cultivation and placing them in the public domain. Many millions of dollars will be expended in such purchases. This gives to the friends of conservation a great hope. Many of these lands are ideally suitable for a great restoration program for migratory and upland game birds, as well as for the four-footed mammals. Former swamp areas which have been drained will undoubtedly be included in these purchases and by the utilization of C.C.G. camps, these areas can be restored to their former highly beneficial use to wild fowl. Those areas in which ducks and geese do not play an important part may well serve an excellent purpose in the restoration of upland game. When the plow no longer turns its furrow, rank vegetation develops and a cover and food supply is established for many varieties of upland game.

Behind these measures is something more than just the restoration of our wild life. Those of us who have for the past generation been outdoors men, have witnessed a gradual but certain decline in the numbers of our birds and our animals. This great heritage, which came to us from our pioneer ancestors, would, in another generation, pass away unless those of us today took measures to perpetuate it. The boys and girls of today are the men and women of tomorrow and they, too, should have the right to enjoy what we did yesterday.

I am extremely proud that it has been my privilege to have been one of the many who has assisted in establishing, once and for all, this great program looking toward the conservation of our wild life, which after all means so much to us in healthful recreation and the building up of a sturdy people.

Conservation is on the high road. The barriers which have so handicapped progress in the past have been removed. Congress, which is responsive to the Nation, has awakened to the value of these natural resources in wild life.

I thank you for this opportunity of giving you this message of hope and cheer.

AGRICULTURE AND THE SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY

Mr. COCHRAN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a speech upon agriculture and the sugar-beet industry, delivered by our colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF], over the radio, at Washington, D.C., on March 17, 1934.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

My friends, one of the many things engaging the attention of Congress at the present time is the bill to make sugar one of the basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act. If the bill should be adopted, it is proposed by the administration to immediately reduce the American production of beet sugar 300,000 tons and give that additional tonnage to Cuba.

This is the first step toward still further reduction and the final destruction of the American beet-sugar industry.

Hon. Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, has charge of the administration of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Assistant to Mr. Wallace is Prof. Rexford G. Tugwell. The gentleman who will have charge of the administration of sugar, if this bill should become the law, is Mr. A. J. S. Weaver. All three of these gentlemen are on record as believing the sugar-beet and sugar-cane industry in this country to be inefficient, and that as such its existence not justified.

There are more than 100,000 American farmers raising sugar beets. They are planting each year more than 1,000,000 of the most fertile acres in the land to this crop. The sugar beet is a cash crop; it is the one depended upon to pay the taxes on their farms and to meet the mortgage payments. In other words, it insures the beet-raising farmers economic life at a time when other farmers are being dispossessed by the tens of thousands because of their inability to pay their taxes or meet their mortgage obligations.

The proposal of the administration and the public statements of the gentlemen I have named very clearly indicates that, if adopted, the complete destruction of the beet sugar industry will eventually follow. The adoption of this bill as introduced will be the first successful step to this end. I find myself in disagreement with this part of the administration's program.

The President has expressed some concern about the increasing retail price of sugar. I have secured from the Government Departments records of the average price to the consumer of this commodity during the past 45 years, and I find that during the 2-year period of 1932 and 1933 the American housewife bought her sugar for less than any other like period throughout that long term of years. The Presidential information on this point would seem to be inaccurate.

The President also expresses concern about the rehabilitation of the market for our products in Cuba. In a bulletin issued by the United States Department of Commerce in 1932, it is stated that it is apparent that rehabilitation of our market in this island is not possible, because of the recent diversification of agricultural crops in that island, and because our Cuban neighbors have learned the value of producing every possible commodity at home, and have, behind high Cuban tariff walls, brought about the construction of industries which now produce many of the products which she recently bought from us. The Presidential information on this point would seem to be at least incomplete.

I am satisfied that the President is ill-advised, and I voice my criticism as one who puts love of country above partisanship in a sincere effort to warn this administration of what this program will do to the sugar industry, the farmers, the workers in the sugar factories, the workers on the railroads, and in other industries which furnish necessary supplies, together with the sugar consumers of this country, if this program is carried out. I believe that since the destinies of this Nation have been so wholly and completely intrusted to the present Chief Executive, it is the duty of every Member of Congress and every citizen of the United States to aid him by constructive criticism and suggestion; and it is for this purpose that I present the facts as to what this program really means.

I want it clearly understood that I am not leveling personal criticism at the President of the United States or at any other official of the administration, because this is not a matter of personalities. It is a matter of the gravest and most vital economic fundamentals concerning the welfare of every man, woman, and child in this country. Therefore, my opposition is not an opposition to persons, but is an opposition to the program proposed.

It is well known here in Washington that there has been a persistent attempt to destroy the American sugar-beet industry by a small group of financial interests, centered principally in New York and on the eastern seaboard, who control practically the whole of the Cuban sugar industry. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been invested in Cuban sugar plantations and mills by this little group of eastern financiers.

It must be remembered that every job held by a low-wage foreign laborer in the Cuban sugar industry means one less job at higher wages for the American workingman. Every pound of sugar products raised in the tropics and sold in this country means 1 pound less of profitable sugar that may be raised by the American farmer.

The President in his message made it clear that he believes the administration program regarding sugar will result in a saving to the American consumer. Nothing is more clear or better proven than that without domestic competition, foreign sugar is incapable of price control. This was clearly demonstrated in 1919 and 1920. Every housewife of that day will long remember that so-called "sugar debauch" when the Cuban sugar interests raised their raw-sugar price from 5½ cents per pound to 23½ cents per pound within a few months, and finally compelled the American consumer to pay 32 cents per pound for this necessary food product, merely because the beet-sugar supply had been exhausted and the Cuban supply dominated the American market.

Keep in mind that the identical interests who perpetrated that atrocious piece of piracy upon the American consumers are exactly the same interests that control the Cuban sugar industry today and which will control that industry when the domestic industry has been destroyed. They represent in numerous instances the same individuals who have participated in the piracies in air mail, ocean mail, aircraft manufacturing, stock jobbing, and bank speculation upon the American people.

What person is there within the sound of my voice who for a moment questions what the result would be if this group should again control the American sugar market? What man or woman within the sound of my voice doubts for a moment what the result will be if foreign sugar producers are able to destroy the domestic industry and then set the price that they would charge the American citizen for his sugar?

Do you know, my friends, that the sum wrung from the pockets of the American consumers in that one sugar debauch of 1919 and 1920 was more than sufficient to erect enough beet-sugar factories in this country to supply our entire requirements? Do you know that this levy placed upon American consumers by those in control of the Cuban sugar industry was greater than the duty collected on all sugar imported from Cuba in the following 5 years?

Every year the present duty on sugar saves the American consumer hundreds of millions of dollars by preserving the beet-sugar industry and thus keeping the price at a reasonable level. To place this commodity upon the free list, or to destroy in other ways the American beet-sugar industry, means not alone taking from the American consumer that contingent insurance against high prices for this product but it means that more than a million acres of farm land, now devoted to sugar-beet culture will be devoted to other crops already surfeiting our markets. Hundreds of thousands of farmers will be deprived of a profitable cash crop; hundreds of prosperous farming communities, which owe their prosperity to the establishment of beet-sugar factories in their midst, will be deprived of these benefits; scores of thousands of farmers who today use the money they receive for their sugar beets to pay their taxes, which, without such money, could not be paid during these times, will face eviction and ruin. It is the one crop upon which the American farmer can safely count a profit when he plants his seed. For that reason it is without question the most valuable crop that any farmer raises in any beet-sugar-producing section of this country.

These gentlemen I have mentioned earlier in my remarks seem to believe that we in this country should buy everything we need in the cheapest market, regardless of where in this wide, wide world that market may be.

If that program were followed as a sound theory of economics, we would buy our beef from Argentina; our wheat from Argentina, Canada, and Australia; our wool and mutton from Australia and Argentina; our shoes from Czechoslovakia; our coal from England; our dairy products from New Zealand and Denmark; our beans and peas from Japan, our pork products from Denmark; our tomatoes from Mexico; our onions from Spain. We would buy our cotton from India and Egypt and in the future from Brazil and Russia; our cheese from Italy and Denmark. We would buy our machinery and cutlery from Great Britain, Germany, and Japan; our chemicals from Germany; and so on ad infinitum. And by so doing we would surrender once and for all the thing that has brought more peace, comfort, and happiness to the American people than all else, and that is the American standard of living. And further, we would surrender that splendid capacity for self-containment which, together with thousands of miles of salt water on the eastern, southern, and western borders, places us in a peculiar position on this globe for security, prosperity, peace, and happiness. In these hectic days, when every nation in the world is becoming self-sustaining as rapidly as possible, these facts are not without grave importance.

The Secretary of Agriculture in a recent statement in which he speaks of an economic program that appeals to him said:

"This will involve a radical reduction in tariffs that might seriously hurt certain industries and a few kinds of agricultural businesses, such as sugar-beet growing and flax growing. It might also cause pain for awhile to woolgrowers and to farmers who supply material for various edible oils. I think we ought to face that fact. Now, if we are going to lower tariffs radically there may have to be definite planning whereby certain industries or businesses will have to be retired. The Government might have to help furnish means for the orderly retirement of such businesses and even select those which are thus to be retired."

In conclusion, my friends, I wish to say that I cannot escape the sinister import of that statement of the Secretary of Agriculture. It seems to me that those words should arrest the attention of every citizen, every business man, every industry in this country, because who is going to decide if such a program is adopted based upon such philosophy as that? Who, I ask, is going to decide what businesses shall be destroyed, what businesses shall be permitted to live, what citizens shall be condemned to have their business destroyed, and what citizens shall be favored by permitting their businesses to live? What agency will control, what individual will be the all-powerful arbiter, business executioner, and what motives finally might actuate such an individual? Why, my friends, when I consider these points in the light of the situation and in the light of the whole philosophy of a free democratic government, I stand appalled at the future possibilities of such a program.

DUTY OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADS-WORTH], yesterday before the Women's Republican Club, Washington, D.C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

A party's right to live depends upon its willingness and ability to serve the country. Lacking the ideal of service, a political party immediately degenerates into a mere job-making and job-holding device, despised and dreaded by all thoughtful people. The Republican Party came into being at a time of great national crisis and devoted its young energies to the service of the country. On other occasions since the days of Lincoln it has met important issues with courage and determination, and it is well to know that whenever it has done so it has enjoyed the overwhelming confidence of the people. And by the same token, when the party falters or evades a fundamental issue, it suffers defeat. Its experience in this respect in recent years should not be forgotten. I am convinced that an issue is arising in this country which demands once more the service of the Republican Party. I visualize a long battle, engaging the earnest attention of millions of people. It will be a political battle, fought with political weapons. It will be waged upon a fundamental question more important than any we have encountered since Lincoln's time. Let us see what has been going on during this last year, and what we shall have to face in the near future.

The Congress, upon the recommendation of the President, has enacted a large number of measures having for their purpose the overcoming of the depression. These measures have come along with bewildering rapidity. All of them are important, many of them novel, and some of them revolutionary. Hungry for relief and willing to try almost anything, the country has accepted them and has given to them and to the administration a sympathetic and optimistic support. Those who have been doubtful as to the wisdom and efficacy of some of these measures have forborne destructive criticism and have been hoping very earnestly that their doubts might vanish. A tolerant spirit, Nation-wide, has prevailed. A vast engine of publicity in the press, on the screen, and over the radio has kept the attention of the public riveted upon the so-called "recovery program." It is fair to say there has never been anything like it in the way of organized propaganda. The capacity of our people to endure a thing of this sort is extraordinary. We have endured it, first, because we long for recovery and, second, because we have been looking upon all these extraordinary measures as being merely temporary—set up to meet the emergency and to be abandoned the instant the emergency has passed.

In recent weeks, however, it has become perfectly apparent that these measures are not intended to be merely temporary. Through the utterances of the President and of many of his closest advisers, we now know, absolutely, that it is the intention of the sponsors of these measures to make them a vital element in the permanent policy of the United States, emergency or no emergency. In his message at the opening of the Congress last January the President made this reasonably clear. His more recent utterances and those of his lieutenants leave no doubt whatsoever. The issue involved stands before us in definite outline. It stares us in the face. We cannot ignore it or avoid it. Some of the more important of the emergency measures expire in June of 1935, a little over 1 year from now. I have in mind especially the National Industrial Recovery Act and the Agricultural Adjustment Act, those two measures which, taken together, represent the new philosophy of government which it is sought to impose upon us and our children. It is to be assumed that as the month of June in the year 1935 approaches, the administration will exert its power to the utmost in an effort to persuade Congress to reenact upon a permanent basis the N.R.A. and the A.A.A., together with such other measures as may fit into the general scheme. Every Member of that Congress will have to face the issue. Indeed, unless I am very much mistaken, we shall all have to face it in the congressional campaign of next autumn.

What is the nature of the issue? Let us be a little more specific. For a little over 140 years the American Nation has maintained, without substantial change, a certain form of government. The Nation has grown and prospered mightily, until today it is the greatest of all nations. The form and functions of the National Government are outlined in the Constitution of the United States. And what is more important, some of the very vital relations of the citizen to his Government are expressed in the Constitution, notably in the Bill of Rights. Jealous of our privileges as free men, we have delegated to the National Government certain carefully specified powers, and, at the same time, we have reserved to the States and to ourselves, the people, all those powers which are not specifically delegated. It is this reservation in favor of the people that spells liberty of the traditional American kind. If that reservation is to be wiped out, then the American conception of liberty will perish. It is now proposed to do that very thing. When it is done, the whole picture of American life will be transformed into something never dreamed of by any respectable number of people prior to this very year.

Instead of a Federal union of States, we shall have, in effect, an imperial Government centered here in Washington, with its tentacles reaching out into the smallest community and creeping into the very homes of the people. To all intents and purposes the States will be reduced to provinces, for the power which they now enjoy in regulating their home affairs and the daily lives of their citizens will have been taken over by the new national government. This transformation is to be achieved in order that the people may be regimented and made obedient to whatever economic plan is deemed to be good for them by the Washington bureaucracy. With this thing established, we shall have, I suppose, a series of 4-year plans, each of them corresponding to a presidential term. Soviet Russia furnishes an analogy, for they are now in their second 5-year plan. We can get a pretty clear idea of some of the details of this thing by observing the regulations now being imposed upon industry and agriculture under N.R.A. and A.A.A. It is interesting to note how it proceeds. It starts with an appeal for voluntary cooperation. It moves along step by step.

The first step is generally pretty short, but, having been taken, it practically compels the taking of a second and longer step. The second step brings on the third, and so on to the end of the journey, at which we find the citizen subjected to outright compulsion at the hands of the Government, which threatens him with criminal prosecution if he should dare disobey. He is to be told how long he shall work and what he shall be paid. The Government will decide how much he shall produce in the factory and the price to be charged for the product. He shall be told how many acres he may plant to a given crop and how many bushels he may sell. He may be left in possession of his land, but its management will pass to the bureaucracy. To put it briefly, the Government will decide how a man shall earn his living, whether it be in a dry-cleaning establishment in Jacksonville, or on a wheat farm in Kansas. Many of you may say, "Oh, they would not think of going as far as that." But, I ask you to note the present-day progress, the trend, and, indeed, the visible goal of N.R.A. and A.A.A.

More than that, remember that the President and many of his most influential advisors have already given public expression of their complete approval of these measures and are today urging that they be made permanent. They are devoted to this philosophy of regimentation. They believe in it. They are convinced that the race would be happier if it proceeded en masse along the highway of life guided by the superior wisdom of government. They assert that the old system has failed and that the new system must be built upon its ruins. In view of recent utterances of those in command of our Government and in view of that combination of events rapidly unfolded before our very eyes, there can be no doubt whatsoever that we are face to face with a tremendous issue. And what will the great parties do about it? I am afraid it is too much to expect active, organized resistance from the Democratic Party. Its leaders have ordered "about face." No matter how a great many individual Democrats feel about this thing, the Democratic Party as an organization is marching in this new direction. Shades of Jefferson and Madison! What would they say if they could see their party now? And how about the Republican Party?

Has not the time come when, once more, the Republican Party must serve the Nation? Surely its duty is clear. It must spring to the defense of the Constitution. It must contend unceasingly for the preservation of the American conception of liberty, in accordance with which the citizen is the master of his government and not its servant. The party must set up a nucleus of resistance against this new philosophy. It must proclaim all over again that liberty, a thing of the spirit, is far more precious than any material advantage. It must help this generation decide what kind of country the next generation is to live in—the American kind or the Soviet kind. The battle will not be won in a day. It may take years. No matter what its length, no matter what discouragements and set-backs may be encountered, it must be fought through to the end. It is the duty of the Republican Party to do this very thing. It is the only instrument that the American people can use. Let us hope that it will enlist for the duration.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a statement on the automatic promotions in the independent offices appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in committing the independent offices appropriation bill to conference, interest was so great in Senate amendments numbered 14 and 22, dealing with Federal salaries and veterans' benefits, respectively, that two very important amendments were intrusted to our conferees for adjustment without any expression as to the views of the Membership thereupon. I refer to Senate amendment numbered 19, with respect to reestablishing automatic promotions, and to Senate amendment numbered 20, with respect to administrative promotions.

In the same measure, Mr. Speaker, in which we have refused to restore all the benefits of which veterans were deprived in consequence of the economy legislation passed at the last session—refused because we were told the expense would be too great, that the expense would be out of joint with the administration's fiscal program—in that same measure provision is made for promoting people on the Federal pay rolls. How preposterous; how absurd!

In the same measure, Mr. Speaker, it is practicable to make provision for restoring 10 percent of the 15-percent salary cut, but it is not practicable, because of the expense, to do the fair and just thing by the veterans.

Now, I want you Members to pay attention to this, because I do not want to see any of you placed unknowingly in the attitude of voting for a conference report that would place you in such an indefensible position.

Several hundred million or a billion dollars are voted for this, that, or the other relief agency, and we hear Members say, "I voted for it, but where is the money coming from?" When it comes to the veterans, caution steps in. The admonition that the expense is too great is hearkened to, but there appears to be no hesitancy about restoring two thirds of the pay cut or promoting people. Where is that money coming from, may I ask?

Mr. Speaker, as a matter of truth, it is nothing short of madness to be promoting long-time officeholders in times like these, with hundreds of thousands of people practically or in effect upon a dole and millions of people still without gainful employment.

The chairman of the House conferees is on record that the position of the House on amendments nos. 14 and 22 will be insisted upon, and, if in vain, that those amendments will be brought back to the House. I believe that the conferees should bring back amendments nos. 19 and 20 for separate action by the House if the Senate will not recede.

Senate amendment no. 20 is totally and absolutely indefensible, in my judgment. Senate amendment no. 19 is equally as bad. This amendment, however, is attached to a proposition originating in the House designed to insure that commissioned officers of the services embraced by the joint pay act of June 10, 1922, would receive the pay of the rank to which advanced in accordance with law. Some question has arisen as to whether or not the House proposal would accomplish its designed purpose. That doubt should be removed. The Senate amendment strikes out the provision and lets down the bars completely, except as to the 5 percent triennial increases, which are continued frozen as of June 30, 1932.

The greatest hurt to commissioned personnel occasioned by economy legislation concerns junior officers in the grades of second and first lieutenants (ensigns and lieutenants, junior grade). I believe that, if we should take care of these lads, we should simply be righting a wrong. Beyond that it is indefensible to go at this time. My thought, to accomplish that change and no more, would be to substitute for the language of the House and the language of the Senate a provision reading—

(1) Section 201 (suspending automatic increases in compensation) of part II of the Legislative Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1933, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: "Commencing July 1, 1935, nothing in this section shall be construed to deprive any second lieutenant or any first lieutenant of the Army and any officer of corresponding grades of the services mentioned in the Pay Adjustment Act of 1922, the pay of the second period as fixed in such act, plus longevity increases provided for in the tenth paragraph of section 1 of the Pay Adjustment Act of 1922 earned prior to July 1, 1932."

The money we would save by refusing to go along with amendments nos. 19 and 20 would go far in providing gainful employment for persons in dire need.

PUBLIC-GRAZING LANDS

Mr. BANKHEAD, by direction of the Committee on Rules, presented a privileged report for printing in the RECORD, which was referred to the calendar and ordered printed.

The resolution is as follows:

House Resolution 307

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 6462, a bill to stop injury to the public-grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill or any amendment recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Public Lands, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

With the following committee amendment:

On line 1, page 2, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. LUDLOW. I regret, Mr. Speaker, that I shall have to object, as we have been waiting here all the afternoon to take up the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman from Iowa can get his time in general debate.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8617) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate shall be equally divided between the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD] and myself.

Mr. DOWELL. Reserving the right to object, how long does the gentleman expect general debate to continue?

Mr. LUDLOW. Today and tomorrow.

Mr. McLEOD. It is the understanding that debate will not be closed until when?

Mr. LUDLOW. Until it becomes apparent that the requests are substantially exhausted. I think there is no necessity for immediate cloture.

Mr. DOWELL. It is expected to carry general debate into tomorrow?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes; today and tomorrow.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, there is no request that the debate shall be confined to the bill?

The SPEAKER. No.

The motion of Mr. Ludlow was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. O'CONNOR in the chair.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield to myself 25 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the bill making appropriations for the legislative establishment is the smallest of the supply measures and on the principle that "a short horse is soonest curried", I shall hope to present this bill for your consideration in the briefest and most succinct manner possible.

The bill carries a total of $17,448,993 of direct appropriations and while this makes a showing on paper of an increase of $609,073 over the total of direct appropriations carried in the legislative appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1934, it is an apparent, and not a real, increase.

This discrepancy between facts and surface indications is easily understood when we recall that last year Congress ordered $1,000,000 of the impounded salary pay-cut funds of the Government Printing Office diverted to working capital of that institution and used as such. These accumulated funds arose from the fact that the various Government departments, independent offices, and other activities that have work done at the Government Printing Office had submitted their requisitions and made their settlements on the basis of full-basic salaries at the Government Printing Office. Application of the pay cut to these settlements left a large sum in the hands of the Public Printer to be disposed of in some manner, and the Appropriations Committee, observing what I believe was wise economy, provided in the legislative supply bill last year that $1,000,000 of these funds should be used for working capital of the Printing Office. This reduced the direct appropriation for working capital during the present fiscal year 1934 to $1,750,000, which is the only sum that appears as working capital of the Printing Office in the tabulation of the current appropriations, whereas the sum actually provided as working capital for the current year was $1,000,000 plus $1,750,000 or $2,750,000.

Bearing this total sum in mind, we find that the grand total of the legislative appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1935 is $390,927 less than the grand total of direct and indirect appropriations for the fiscal year 1934. In no single instance has your subcommittee increased any Budget item, and in many instances Budget items have been decreased, as will be explained later. The total appropriations show a decrease of $291,938.60 below estimates.

Your subcommittee has given its time laboriously and diligently to consideration of the estimates and the justifications thereof, following extended hearings, and as chairman of the subcommittee I wish to express my grateful appreciation to the other members of the subcommittee—Judge SANDLIN, former chairman; Mr. McLEOD; Mr. GRANFIELD; and Mr. SINCLAIR—for their conscientious and painstaking cooperation and for the never-failing kindness with which they have tolerated the shortcomings of a new and more or less verdant chairman. I can truthfully say that all partisanship was tabooed in the consideration of this measure in the subcommittee, and that devotion to the public interest was our only guide. I have found Mr. BUCHANAN, the chairman of our general committee, most willing and helpful at all times, and to him and to Mr. Shield, our able and efficient chief clerk, I wish to express my deep appreciation.

I shall not enter into any long and tedious discussion of the various items, as I think you will find the report most illuminating as to details, but I shall be satisfied if I successfully elucidate the most important items.

The salaries carried in this bill are based on a uniform cut of 10 percent of basic salaries, as against a cut of $8\frac{1}{3}$ percent for the fiscal year 1934 in the salaries of employees and 10 percent for Members of Congress. Members of both branches of Congress, including the Speaker, are subjected in this bill to the 10-percent cut, the same as employees in all of the services covered by the bill. It is interesting to know that while the cut in the Speaker's salary for the year 1934 was 15 percent it becomes 10 percent under this bill, which accounts for the increase of \$750 in the item of salaries of Members, from \$3,963,750 in 1934 to \$3,964,500 in 1935. I mention this because I feel positively certain someone is going to inquire, "Why this increase of \$750, since there is no change in total Membership?"

The mileage of Members of the Senate and House remains the same as last year, and is three fourths of the normal mileage allowance that obtained for many years before the mileage cut.

The stationery allowance is restored in this bill to the full amount of $125 per Member per each session of Congress. In the present fiscal year the stationery allowance is $90 per session. It is perfectly obvious that an allowance of $90 per session is wholly inadequate so far as most of the Members are concerned, throwing upon them the necessity of paying for the stationery supplies to serve their constituents after their allowance is exhausted. This is a small matter, but it involves an injustice to Members which we undertake in this bill to rectify. Even this increase to the statutory allowance of $125 is insufficient to cover the stationery expenses of many Members, and they will have to go into their pockets for the balance. Of course, it never was intended that Members of Congress should finance the purchase of necessary supplies to run their offices.

The adoption of the "lame duck" amendment to the Constitution has necessitated the incorporation of new phraseology in this bill making it plain that the stationery allowance carried in the bill is for the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress. The statute enacted in 1868 creating the stationery allowance specifically states that it is a session allowance, and without the new language referred to Members might in good faith draw out or commute the stationery allowance after July 1 next, leaving their successors without any allowances for the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress. This would leave new Members who will take office for the first time next January without any stationery allowance. As the statute plainly says this is a session allowance, the language referred to in the bill was recommended by the Clerk of the House, who makes these disbursements, as essential for clarification purposes and to make stationery withdrawals conform to law.

In connection with the office of Speaker this bill takes out of the usual item of salaries the parliamentarian, the assistant parliamentarian, and the messenger to the Speaker's table and gives them a new and separate set-up under the caption "Speaker's table." This was deemed desirable in the interest of clarity and efficiency and was approved by the Speaker. Salaries are in no way affected by the change.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes.

Mr. KRAMER. Was any additional amount added for postage by air-mail between Washington and the western territory, such as California and Washington State?

Mr. LUDLOW. There never has been any allowance for postage for Members of Congress, and there is none in this bill.

Mr. KRAMER. Does the gentleman know that in California and Washington and those Western States it takes from 4 to 6 days for mail to travel back and forth, and sometimes the purpose would be entirely in vain if the mail is not sent by air mail. The Member of Congress is required to put from 8 to 21 cents and sometimes more additional postage on so that it may travel by air mail.

Mr. LUDLOW. I recognize that, but it is also true that the Member has telegraph frank privilege which he may use on official business to cover any purposes.

Mr. KRAMER. But if that were used, it would increase the cost more than if there was a provision for franking by air mail or of an additional sum to take care of air mail. To telegraph to someone at a distance and to have a reply would cost a great deal more, because the telegraph alone would be in the neighborhood of $1.25 for 10 words.

Mr. LUDLOW. I appreciate what the gentleman says, but that precedent has never been made in regard to postage, and we are carrying out the previous policy in this bill.

The estimate included $2,182.50 for a new carpet for the House of Representatives and $10,000 for 50 new rugs for the offices in the old House Office Building, at $200 each, the latter estimate being subsequently revised to provide for 40 new rugs. Your subcommittee decided that purchase of a carpet for the House Chamber could be deferred for another year, and that by careful economy $4,000 would be sufficient to replace worn-out rugs in the old House Office Building during the next fiscal year. Except in cases of what appeared to be imperative necessity, it has been our policy to hold down appropriations in a degree commensurate with the distress of the country. The usual allocation of $22,000 for the House restaurant has been cut to $12,000, due to the fact that at last the restaurant appears to be self-sustaining. However, the continued financial success of the restaurant, as experience indicates, is a rather uncertain quantity, and it was thought desirable to set aside $12,000 as a cushion against a possible restaurant deficit in the next fiscal year.

We have segregated from the item of "Special and select committees" the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation and have set it up in a detached status with an appropriation of $25,500, which is the amount intended to be allocated for it from the total for special and select committees.

We did this for several reasons; first, because it is in fact a permanent and continuing committee, while the other committees under the heading of "Special and select" are ephemeral and vanish as soon as their special services are ended. Secondly, it was considered better practice and more businesslike to have this permanent activity make its reports and receive its appropriations direct from the Appropriations Committee rather than by the roundabout method of an allocation by the Clerk of the House from a lump sum. This change in system is conducive to more direct accountability and is in line with what may be expected when an activity assumes a status that appears to be permanent.

One of the new items carried in this bill is $180,000 to provide for nine new elevators in the United States Capitol Building. In this building there are 11 elevators. Nine are old and, according to the findings of experts, are lacking in safety appliances and to a degree are positively dangerous to human life. The other two were recently rebuilt, and there is no question about their safety. These two modern elevators are at the Senate wing of the Capitol, main entrance.

The nine remaining elevators referred to are from 25 to 38 years old and so obsolete that whenever there is breakage of parts it is necessary to make special arrangements to have new parts recast, as the parts are no longer in stock. Furthermore, the nine elevators have been officially declared unsafe by the United States Bureau of Standards.

The matter comes up at this time as the result of a thorough inspection of the elevators of the Capitol Building by the Bureau of Standards.

This investigation covered a period of about 2 months, and the full text of the report of the Bureau on the condition of the Capitol elevators is found in the hearings of our subcommittee. Permit me to quote excerpts from this report:

Safety equipment which is vitally necessary if maximum protection is to be afforded to passengers is missing from these nine cars—

Says the Bureau of Standards.

The controllers all show considerable wear and in certain cases are nearing the limit of their useful life. As in the case of the hoisting machines themselves, it is practically impossible to obtain repair parts for these controllers.

The growing interest in public affairs and the increasing tendency toward travel have resulted in marked increase in the number of visitors to this building during the past decade. This is particularly true of the period when Congress is in session. The present equipment is not adequate to handle the peak loads.

All of the machines are lacking in safeguards now considered imperative. It is not practical to install many of these safeguards on the present equipment because of lack of certain necessary equipment on the controllers.

Because of the very nature of this building, the seat of government, the safest possible equipment should be provided, both to protect the public and Members of Congress.

The nine elevators which it is proposed to replace would not be permitted to continue in service in any city or State with adequate codes, were they in a building subject to the jurisdiction of State or municipal inspection.

When confronted with this report, setting forth the results of an expert scientific examination of the Capitol elevators, indicating that on account of wear and a lack of safety appliances some, if not all, of these elevators are actually unsafe, your subcommittee gave serious consideration to working out a program that would meet this situation. The first suggestion was that we should select two elevators for immediate replacement and should extend the remainder of the replacement over a period of years. On careful thought, it seemed that this program was unwise, as even expert advice could not designate definitely the particular elevators it would be best to rebuild in a group of nine elevators almost equally deficient, so the process of selection assumed the proportions of a knotty problem. Furthermore, we were faced with the probability of rising prices, and all things considered, it seemed advisable to direct Mr. Lynn, the Architect of the Capitol, to secure figures on the cost of rebuilding all nine elevators under one contract, compared with the cost of piecemeal construction extended over a period of years.

Mr. Lynn did so and reported that, whereas if construction were based on a program of years the cost would be $202,000, by letting the contract for all nine elevators at the same time the cost would be $180,000, a saving of $22,000. The estimated cost of constructing two elevators was $45,000, or $22,500 per elevator, while by letting one contract cover all nine, the cost will be $20,000 per elevator.

Viewing the problem as a whole, the economies involved and according the proper weight to the official determination that there is actual hazard to life in the operation of the present elevators we have decided that this replacement program should proceed at once to its complete conclusion and we have provided in this bill an appropriation of $180,000 to construct all nine elevators. We feel that we would be derelict under our responsibilities to our fellow citizens unless we took every necessary step to safeguard the lives of those who are entitled to use these elevators and therefore we believe this appropriation is justified under existing conditions.

We have provided in this bill that hereafter expenses of committees appointed to represent the House at the funerals of its dead Members shall be limited to not more than 4 Members of the House and 2 Members of the Senate, and that the widow and minor children of a deceased Member shall be provided with transportation at Government expense. Under existing legislation carried in the Legislative Appropriation Act for 1934, funeral committees for deceased House Members are limited to 2 Members of the House and 2 Members of the Senate, and no provision whatever is made to pay the transportation expenses of any relative of the deceased.

The custom of sending funeral committees to attend the burial of deceased Members affords expression to a beautiful sentiment which your subcommittee would not in any way thwart or abridge but it is undeniable that under the former loose system whereby as many as 35 Members were sometimes appointed on funeral committees there was gross abuse and an unjustifiable imposition on the taxpayers who have to foot the bills. An honest, sincere effort to stop this abuse led to the adoption of the legislation limiting funeral committees to two House Members. Many Members, actuated by honest and worthy motives and endorsing the purpose of the limitation of Members, believe nevertheless that the reduction was carried too far and that without in any way inviting a return to the old practices it would be advisable to provide for 4 Members of the House and 2 Senators and to arrange for transportation for the immediate relatives mentioned. Desirous as we are of maintaining all of the sentiment that clusters around the ancient custom, while at the same time exercising meticulous care to keep it free of abuses, your subcommittee concurs in this view. Beyond 4 Members of the House and 2 of the Senate we would not be willing to go, as the purpose of the custom—which is to show respect for the dead—can be accomplished by a small committee of Members as well as by one much larger.

There is one feature of this bill to which I now invite your attention and that is the provision that has been made in several items to strengthen the Capitol power plant. That power plant was constructed to furnish light, heat, and power for a small group of buildings on Capitol hill. Year by year its load has been increased by the addition of buildings to be served until these accretions have taxed it far beyond its limit. By reason of age and wear and this overtaxing process the time has come when ordinary prudence dictates that certain replacements and improvements should be made in the direction of enabling the plant at all times and under all conditions to function and carry its increased load.

These specific appropriations total $98,000, and all of them, except an appropriation for a new roof, are to strengthen the power plant so that it may meet all emergencies. The roof of the boiler room is so deteriorated that it leaks badly as is shown by discolorations on the inside partitions. An estimate of $10,000 for a new copper roof was submitted. Your subcommittee believed that since the power plant is a building of factory structure and not a show building a copper roof was unnecessary since testimony showed that the present roof has been exceptionally durable, lasting 25 years. It is a composition of a bottom layer of concrete, overspread with a mixture of tar, sand, and gravel. We provided, therefore, an appropriation of $3,000 which was the estimate for reconstructing the roof with the same materials.

We also allow $28,000 for a new feed-water heater to feed the boilers. The old heater now used is of the open-feed type. It has a capacity of 7,500 horsepower and 8,500 gallons an hour. The draft on it is away above its capacity, and on account of the type of the heater the effect of gases has brought about deteriorations that may cause collapse at any time. The new heater is to be of the deaerating type and will have a pump that will extract the gases that eat the pipes and tubes. It will have a capacity of 14,000 horsepower and 35,000 gallons of water an hour and the installation of this heater will result in a considerable saving in the cost of fuel. The present heater was installed in 1925 when its capacity was thought to be ample, but it is now wholly insufficient for the increased load.

Another power-plant item carried in this bill, which is highly essential, is $25,000 for high-tension switching gear. This is absolutely necessary to strengthen the reserves of the Capitol power plant. In case of a breakdown this switching gear would enable the navy yard power plant to take over part of the Capitol power plant's load. For instance, if a breakdown of the Capitol power plant should occur, this switching gear would enable the navy yard power plant to immediately take over the service for the Government Printing Office, which is a large and important activity served by the Capitol power plant, and business at the great printing establishment would go on as usual. Or with this switching arrangement the navy-yard plant could take over the service for any other building or group of buildings on Capitol Hill in time of distress when the Capitol power plant fails in whole or part. There is always the possibility that if there should be trouble at the pump house and the Capitol power plant should lose its circulating water it would not be able to carry more than 35 percent of its electric load and it would not be able with its present switching gear to split its load with the navy yard power plant. Good business and ordinary prudence justify this appropriation for a high-tension switching gear.

The other item to strengthen the power plant is $42,000 to lay 2,300 feet of 36-inch cast-iron water main to connect the power plant with the Potomac River pumping station. This would replace a main that has been in since 1908 and 1909, or about 26 years. Expert testimony was that this old main is liable to fail at any time. There already has been trouble where the main goes under the main tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad, necessitating the laying of a new section there. Robert Harrison, chief engineer of the Capitol power plant, testified:

I would like to impress upon the committee that it is most important that we have that line replaced. Our whole service is dependent upon it.

In view of the testimony that this main is likely to burst at any time with resultant damage and inconvenience that cannot be calculated, your subcommittee thought it was wise to approve this estimate.

Summarized, the items to improve the Capitol power plant are: New roof for boiler room, $3,000; new deaerating feed water heater, $28,000; high tension switching gear, $25,000; new water main, $42,000; total, $98,000. The chairman of your subcommittee made a careful personal inspection of the plant and premises and is convinced that these estimates are well justified.

Among the estimates rejected by the subcommittee in the interest of economy were $25,000 for extension of the map division stack of the Library of Congress; an increase of $15,000 in the appropriation to buy new plants for the Botanic Garden, and $27,000 to enlarge the boiler room and install another boiler at the Botanic Gardens Poplar Point nursery.

We felt that there is no urgency in regard to these appropriations, and that they can well await the return of better times.

In the report you will find a statement that shows the decreases in our bill compared with the Budget estimates. The decreases on account of appropriations for the United States Senate total $39,342.60, of which $12,750 is on account of a reduction of senatorial mileage which is allowed at three fourths of the normal appropriation. The original estimate provided for the restoration of 20 cents per mile. The revision is based on 15 cents per mile. The Senate estimate for stationery, $25,000, was reduced to $19,500. Under the law stationery is limited to $125 per Member, and our subcommittee could see no reason for appropriating more than the statutory amount. The other decreases below the Budget in Senate items were made to conform to this year's appropriations, it being more or less of a custom to include in the bill the Senate items for the current year where those items are below the estimates, leaving it to the Senators to increase those items if they desire to do so when the bill reaches the upper branch.

Appropriations for the House of Representatives are decreased $73,318 below the Budget. Of this decrease, $43,750 is on account of payment of mileage on a three-fourths basis. We allowed the postmaster $2,500 for motor-carrying vehicles instead of $3,400, the estimated amount, as for years he has been turning back part of the appropriation under that heading. We decreased the item for furniture and repairs to furniture in the sum of $3,500 by omitting the proposed appropriation for a new carpet for the House and House galleries and reducing the appropriation for rugs for the House Office Building. The cut of $20,000 in miscellaneous items is due in part to a voluntary reduction of $10,000 in this estimate by the Clerk of the House and $10,000 in the allocation for the House restaurant. The Legislative Counsel agreed to a reduction of $5,000 from the estimate for that establishment. The Capitol Building repairs estimate was reduced $15,736 by omitting an item of $6,736 for steel shelving in the House Document Room basement and reducing the allowance for skylight repairs from $10,000 to $1,000. An item of $1,920 to purchase a new snow plow was omitted, and we saved $1,945 by reducing the estimate for personnel for the Capitol garages. Two additional employees were estimated for, making seven in all. We decided that the garages can continue to operate for another year on a personnel of five.

Elimination of items for venetian blinds for the old House Office Building, lighting standards for the New House Office Building, and proposed additional personnel for the New House Office Building brought the maintenance appropriation for the two House Office Buildings $13,820 below the estimates.

Elimination of the estimate for a new map stack for the Library of Congress, to cost $25,000, made the total reductions for the Architect of the Capitol $65,883, compared with estimates.

The reduction of $48,905 in estimates for the Botanic Garden were brought about by elimination of an item of $2,630 for temporary laborers to take the place of Civil Works employees, a reduction of $15,000 in the appropriation to buy new plants, and the elimination of estimates, totaling $27,000, for improvements at Poplar Point nursery, which your subcommittee did not regard as imperatively necessary at this time.

We reduced salary estimates of the Library of Congress by $22,765. This included reallocations in the sum of $10,840 and a reassignment of employees to different duties involving $2,520 additional, besides further eliminations of personnel which we did not regard as necessary.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. What consideration, if any, was given by the subcommittee to the proposal to give Members of Congress an additional clerk in their offices on account of the terrible load that is upon every Member at the present time?

Mr. LUDLOW. That matter was considered, but it was felt that that would more properly be handled in another way through a legislative committee. It is recognized that many Members do have a very heavy burden which they are financing themselves by the employment of additional clerks and stenographers, but it was also felt, I believe, that there are others who are not so heavily taxed, and an appropriation to give the same number of clerks to all would hardly be well-considered legislative action. It was felt that on an appropriation bill this could not be approached with the thoroughness that should be given to it and that it would better be taken up in a different way through action of some committee that perhaps could hold hearings or could give detailed consideration to the inequalities of the burden resting on different offices so as to work out a better considered and more thorough bill upon the subject.

I yield back the remainder of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, much of the legislation that has been presented at this session of Congress, and also the special session of Congress, was intended to restore normal conditions in the country so that the people of the Nation might enjoy life more abundantly. That is the desire of every Member of this body. We may have different opinions as to the best methods by which this may be accomplished, and we may differ in our judgments and in our opinions as to how best to accomplish it, but in the last analysis that is the objective of every Member of Congress.

One measure now pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency, I believe, would go a long way toward restoring economic conditions throughout the Nation. I refer to the measure introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD], which provides for the payment in full of all deposits in banks; that is, National banks and State banks that were members of the Federal Reserve System. So great was the emergency on the 9th of March 1933, when some 164 new Members of this House were sworn in, that we voted for a measure without having seen or read it, to place in the hands of the President of the United States authority and control over all banks in the Nation. The C.W.A. and the P.W.A. and other alphabetical designations are intended to place back into circulation, by giving employment, that much-needed article known as currency or money, so that business can function normally again. That undoubtedly was the underlying reason, or one of the underlying reasons, the other day when the Patman bill passed this House, to pay the veterans of the World War their adjusted-service certificates by placing money into every corner of the United States, in addition to paying an honor debt.

Money is the lifeblood of a people's activities. It is the current which moves the wheels of business and of commerce and of industry, and when it fails to move or circulate among the people business, commerce, and industry stop. The people of this Nation had confidence in their banks, and that faith was encouraged to a greater or less degree by a bronze plate that was fastened to the outside of bank buildings which read "Member of the Federal Reserve System." This applied to both State and National banks that were members of the Federal Reserve System, and many of the people believed—I know that to be true in my own home city—that the Government stood behind such banks. They were under State and Federal supervision. They were examined periodically by either State examiners or Federal examiners, and in order for a bank to become a member of the Federal Reserve System it was required not only to take stock in the Federal Reserve bank but it was also required to keep on deposit certain designated sums of their reserves, which ranged from 3 to 13 percent. When those banks closed the smaller banks—I refer to State banks as well as National banks—were at once affected, because of their reserve deposits being tied up in the larger reserve banks. In Michigan alone 231 communities suffered from the impounding of the reserves of 259 banks in the larger reserve city depositories which were supervised and controlled by the Federal Government. This situation, while there may be no legal obligation, nevertheless imposes a moral obligation on the part of the Federal Government and a responsibility to the people for the loss of their deposits in closed banks which were members of the Federal Reserve System.

Congressman McLEOD's bill, H.R. 7908, is designed to correct that situation and discharge that moral responsibility by paying the depositors in full.

I understand, by the way, that a companion bill has been introduced in the Senate of the United States by Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma having virtually the same object in view.

Mr. BIERMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. Certainly, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BIERMANN. Does the gentleman know how much this will cost?

Mr. DONDERO. I will discuss that later.

Mr. BIERMANN. And can the gentleman tell us where he expects to get the money?

Mr. DONDERO. I will give the same explanation as the method by which we raised other large sums of money that we have appropriated since the 4th day of March 1933.

The bill provides, in substance, that the depositors shall be paid in full with funds provided by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, that Corporation to take over the assets—buy them, if you please—from the various closed banks and then liquidate them over a period of 10 years. The amount of money required for that purpose, to satisfy and pay off depositors in full, would be somewhere between a billion and a billion and a half dollars. Some estimate has been made that it would be even far less than that.

This bill, if enacted into law, would put money into circulation throughout the United States.

Not only would it pay off these depositors but they, in turn, would pay their taxes, interest on their mortgages, buy the necessities and conveniences of life. In other words, it would put purchasing power into the hands of the people who had their deposits so impounded in the closed banks. It would immediately relieve, to a very large extent, the demand that is made on the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the Federal land banks of the country for loans to save homes and the farms of the people. The welfare burden of the Nation would be materially reduced, and bread lines would be shortened and public schools that are now knocking at the Federal door for aid would be able to function, either without that aid or with that aid greatly reduced.

In the richest county of Michigan, outside of Wayne County, in which the city of Detroit is located, a survey of the school situation was made last December, and out of 177 school districts in that county it was found that 41 of those districts could not function or maintain their schools as provided under the Michigan law because their money was impounded in closed banks.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. Certainly.

Mr. MAY. Has there been any survey made to ascertain the portion of collectible assets in the closed banks as compared with the amount of deposits that would have to be paid by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or loans? If so, how do they stand on that question?

Mr. DONDERO. I am not able to answer that. I will come to this question in a minute, that there may be some loss to the Federal Government. I think that would be acknowledged at the very outset, but what that loss would be and how large or how little it would be, is very hard to determine in advance. Many of those assets might be preserved in a period of 10 years.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Michigan 10 additional minutes.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DONDERO. Certainly.

Mr. MAY. What I had in mind was possibly the Comptroller of the Currency, through reports that are required of banks who are members of the Federal Reserve System, would be able to make a very accurate estimate of the amount of tangible assets that might be collected upon in the event the Reconstruction Finance Corporation takes them over, and he might be able from those reports, to determine quite accurately what the difference is between the deposits that will have to be paid and the collectible assets in the banks.

Mr. DONDERO. I think that is true. I may say in that connection that if money was provided for the payment to the depositors, particularly by the large depositories of the country, so that they could in turn pay the smaller banks that have their deposits there as a reserve, many of those banks might be able to open or function again in a normal way.

Mr. MAY. Would the gentleman pardon a further suggestion, that the payment of those depositors would also have a very favorable effect on the ability of the particular communities in which they were paid, when the money came into their hands, to go back and liquidate their notes and pay off their obligations to the bank?

Mr. DONDERO. There is no question about that. Whenever they owe the banks money, of course, it would have to be paid first out of such deposits as they had in the banks to which they owed the money.

Mr. HENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. Certainly.

Mr. HENNEY. Would this program be retroactive? What I have reference to is the fact that many of these banks settled their affairs with their depositors on a percentage basis, the depositors in some instances receiving 25 percent of the amount due them. Will the bill of which the gentleman speaks be retroactive to the time the banks were closed?

Mr. DONDERO. That matter would have to be determined, undoubtedly, when the legislation came before the House for consideration. Perhaps some arbitrary date might have to be determined upon beyond which they could not or would not go. I appreciate that fact. Other banks have gone even to the extent of making settlement with their depositors.

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. If the gentleman's purpose is to aid public schools, could they not be aided directly by authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to lend money to the school districts themselves, taking the frozen assets as collateral in addition to the millage the schools receive from the State and county?

Mr. DONDERO. I think I understand what the gentleman has in mind. A great many loans already have been made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to closed banks, the banks pledging as collateral security their best assets for such loans.

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. Yes. I have introduced a bill to authorize the R.F.C. to lend money to school districts, allowing the school districts to put up frozen assets as collateral.

Mr. DONDERO. In the instance of which I speak, there are 41 school districts in my county which could function normally if they had the money due them from closed banks so they could use it.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a further interruption?

Mr. DONDERO. Certainly.

Mr. MAY. And that very thing would facilitate the circulation of money in the community and would ultimately enable the people who live in that community to repay money they owe, when the R.F.C. loans them money on their frozen assets.

Mr. DONDERO. There is no question about it; the gentleman is correct.

If this Congress desires—as I am sure it does—to place purchasing power in the hands of the people and restore normal conditions, the passage of this bill would go a long way to bring about that much desired object. Business and industry would have funds with which to operate. Many people who had their life savings in banks and who are now on public charity would be made independent and self-sustaining.

There may be some loss to the Government by taking over the assets of the closed banks. Granting this to be true, nevertheless, it would be an investment which would contribute very largely in the reduction of the Federal welfare loan which the Government is now carrying and will carry through its P.W.A. and C.W.A. programs. Whether or not there would be any loss, it is difficult to determine. The liquidation, spread over a period of 10 years, would make it possible to sell the assets taken over without loss, and the depositors would be relieved of expensive liquidation under receivership.

The people who deposited their money in banks were not trying to get rich quick. They were the sane, frugal type, who were providing for a "rainy day." This bill would restore to them ready money which was taken away from them by acts beyond their control.

If we wish to inaugurate a real program of reconstruction, I believe it can be accomplished by paying the frozen bank deposits in full, which would be distributed equitably over the United States. Benefits would flow to every State in the Nation and into the district of every Member of Congress. They would go where they are most needed, into the communities that have been stricken and in proportion to the distress which has overtaken them.

This plan may be called inflationary, but it would be a controlled inflation to be terminated in 10 years. Hope would be revived in the people; faith and confidence in government would be restored; and a return to more normal conditions could be expected.

This is a constructive measure and would act as a real prime to the recovery pump.

In conclusion I may say that more than 100 Members of this body have already signified their friendly inclination to this form of legislation; and I hope when it reaches the floor of the House it will be given favorable consideration by this body and passed. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in the developments of our Air Mail Service during the past few days and some comments that have been made in an effort to cover up the thefts of the Aircraft Trust. A few weeks ago the Postmaster General saw fit to cancel all of the air-mail contracts in the United States upon the ground that there had been irregularities in letting them. The task of carrying the mail was assigned to the Army. Succeeding days constituted one of the worst spells of weather we have experienced all winter with a few accidents resulting therefrom that we all regret, but that are small in comparison to a vast number of deaths occurring on private lines over a like period.

I want to consider briefly some comments that have been made of late, Army Air Corps equipment, and deaths in air accidents in connection with private lines and routine operation of Army planes, all with a view to showing that the Army can carry the mail.

Last Saturday we heard from Eddie Rickenbacker, the ace of aces, vice president of North American Aviation, the parent company of T.W.A., Eastern Air Transport, and Western Air Express, one of the outfits that has been drawing subsidies for carrying the mail. The ace said he felt he had earned his right to citizenship. So have the taxpayers, Mr. Rickenbacker, who have paid the bonus your outfit has been enjoying. The distinguished gentleman questioned the President's judgment when, according to his own words, we are on the verge of pulling out from the dregs of a dastardly depression. If that be true, then it is partly because he and others, aided by the ballyhoo artists, are interested in representing the commercial air lines rather than the people of the efficiency of the Air Corps. The ace is a specialist Reserve officer and ought to have some pride in the Army. Colonel Lindbergh, who has been on the stand of late is a Reserve officer in the Air Corps. I have been astonished at the lack of pride and interest these men have shown in their own outfits and their efficiency. I hope the fact they are both connected with large air companies has had nothing to do with the alienation of their affections.

Former Senator Hiram Bingham has also dipped his oar into this deal. Now, I should think he would be rather reluctant to criticize the President. I remember back in 1929, when serious charges with reference to his activities in connection with the Air Trust were brought against him by T. L. Hill, who was president of the American Society for the Promotion of Aviation, 522 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

It is apparent that certain elements in the opposition in the House about to be drowned in the popularity of Roosevelt and groping for an issue, grasped some air accidents as a club with which to strike at the administration, and wept crocodile tears in a copious manner. An organized effort, aided by the tom-toms of the ballyhoo artists, was launched to discredit the President and the Postmaster General. The deal was one of the most dastardly efforts to cover up the thefts of the Aircraft Trust that was ever attempted. I am astonished that anyone should dare to make such a glaring effort in the face of facts that have been uncovered during the past few months in the investigation of Senator BLACK's committee.

America's air force is supposed to be one of the most important arms of our national defense. Military authorities are agreed the next war will be fought largely in the air with fast planes capable of flying in any weather, under any circumstances, and, of course, at a moment's notice. I presume everyone will admit that battles and military attacks are not governed by weather. Nations do not wait for nice sunshiny days to stage a fight. In my opinion, if we are going to have an air force, we must have one that is ready for action at any time and manned with flyers who can fly.

I think the Army can fly the mail; if not, then why? If the Army is unable to handle that peace-time job, then what are we to do in the event of war? If the equipment we have at present is not satisfactory, then what is wrong after we have spent millions on our Air Corps during recent years? There was a time when the Army carried the mail. It handled the job from the beginning until 1927. If it is unable to handle it now, then let us dig into it and find out if commercial air lines being subsidized by the Government have been biting the hand that has fed them by preventing the Army from using modern equipment that has made flying safer during recent years, or if those same companies have been pawning off obsolete stuff upon the Army. If that be true, then there may be real murder in that deal.

In line with this thought, about October 31, 1929—according to an account in the New York Times under date of November 1, 1929—Mr. Thomas L. Hill submitted to the Lobby Investigating Committee of the Senate, of which Senator T. H. Caraway was chairman, some exhibits which he said were evidence revealing—

The existence of a pernicious and superlobby in Washington, representing the Air Trust which has caused the diversion and conversion to the Air Trust of over $30,000,000 of Government planes and equipment and which has operated to give over $100,000,000 worth of airplane contracts for inferior machines to members of the Air Trust, to the exclusion of more efficient, safer, and cheaper planes made by independent aircraft manufacturers, and has caused the death of scores of pilots. * * *

If that be true, and we ought to find out about it, then there is illegal, well-organized, wholesale murder that has broken the hearts of thousands of loved ones and cost the Government millions of dollars.

Just yesterday our able colleague, ROSS COLLINS, of Mississippi, quoted from hearings held 3 years ago before the military subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee. Maj. Gen. James E. Fechet, who was then Chief of the Air Corps, testified as follows:

Mr. COLLINS. I want to ask one more question before I forget it. The Government appropriates money for the Air Corps of the Army and for the Air Corps of the Navy. I imagine that the appropriation for the Navy for all air activities is about the same as the appropriation for the Army—about $70,000,000. What is your opinion about the adequacy of that sum of money to provide adequate air force for this Government?

General FECHET. I am firmly convinced that the United States is spending enough money today to provide adequate national (air) defense, but, in my opinion, it is not being properly spent.

We have got to go through with this thing. If we whitewash the deal, it will eventually cost the taxpayers billions of dollars, lose countless human lives, and weaken our national defense. The existence of such practices constitutes nothing short of treason.

I have been amazed at some comments that have been made on the floor of the House in the wake of recent events. Men and women have stood here and belittled their own Nation's agencies of defense. I did not hear any such statements flowing from their lips after the crash of the Akron, when 73 men went down to their death. There were no comments when the mangled bodies of those men were left at the bottom of the sea midst the twisted wreckage of a lighter-than-air craft that it was known could not weather a storm before it ever left the ground. The Air Trust did not want the flag-draped caskets of those men photographed on the docks of America's coastline. That ship represented a type of flying equipment with a long and consistent record of disasters at home and abroad. Other nations, such as France, Italy, and England, have abandoned them as an agency of defense because of their vulnerability to attack and the fact that they cannot weather a storm. In spite of those facts, America, at the insistence of the moneyed interests represented by the Mellon Aluminum Trust, the Goodyear Zeppelin Co., and others, who have engaged a high-powered corps of salesmen to sell the crates to the Navy, has gone on building lighter-than-air ships. Of course, there is a motive back of the deal. Certain legislation pressed from time to time in this House indicated that those moneyed groups intended to establish a transoceanic line of the craft and then secure a mail contract from the taxpayers at the rate of $20 a mile. Payments to that outfit for a single trip might have totaled more than $100,000.

I say it is about time we lift our voices to cry out murder at such crude practices as these. Of course, I am almost alone in the wilderness in that effort, because this is different. It is the air companies and the moneyed interests that are at the bottom of that deal.

Speaking of legalized murder reminds me that one commercial air line alone killed 12 in two shots during the last few weeks. No one said anything about that being legalized murder. From July 1, 1932, to June 30, 1933, 197 were killed in aircraft accidents. If anyone does not believe it, I have the names of the casualties to prove it. From January 20, 1933, up until the present, scheduled commercial lines have killed 40. During the period the Army has carried the mail they have killed at least 12.

During the month of June 1933, an ideal time for flying, the Army lost 15 flyers and injured 6 in 24 days, June 1 to 24, in the mere transaction of its ordinary duties. Why did not the air lines start a ballyhoo campaign about that being legalized murder? Of course, Mr. Hoover, Mr. Mellon, and others were in power then, so that made some difference. They were interested in developing commercial air lines.

And now about the men we have lost in flying the mail. Let us go into that proposition a little. All of them were young men, most of them boys in their twenties. Five of them graduated from Kelly Field less than a year ago. The remaining five were all young men with little experience, with one or two exceptions—Lowrey graduated in 1929 and Wienecke in 1930. I want to know why those men were thrown into the breach in this emergency. We have over 1,200 Regular Army Air Corps flyers and more than 1,300 Reserve Corps officers who have been trained to fly. A large number of them are old, seasoned pilots. In the case of Reserve officers, many of them have gone into the service of commercial lines. Why have not they been pushed into the air to fly the mail in place of a bunch of boys? Is it possible that the air lines have been able to manage things so as to discredit the Army in its effort to fly the mail at the expense of human life? Surely they do not have an agent who is manipulating things from within in an effort to trip the President. If that should be true, then there is a case of real murder that borders on the first degree. There would be an effort to discredit our air defense that could be classified as treason against the country. If such guilty hands are handling things, their owners should be traced to their lair, tried in court, and punished in accordance with the country's laws. This does not look like a blunder; it looks like an organized effort to gang the President and our Air Corps Service.

Gentlemen, I will tell you what some of these people, including the Aircraft Trust, have up their sleeves. They want to discredit the Army Air Corps' ability to carry the mail, and then, with that as a foundation, hasten through this House some legislation providing for the immediate return of the service to private companies either as a permanent policy or under the guise of "convenience and necessity." And do not think they will hesitate to put some jokers in that legislation that will be mighty costly to the people if they think they can get away with it. Just think of that; jeopardize the reputation of our air defenses for the sake of profits at the expense of taxpayers, all to satisfy the greed of organized minorities whose pocketbooks have felt the sting of Federal authority. It is a crime against the flag of our country, and the finger of shame should rest upon all those who are guilty. O Death, what grasping, greedy motives have masqueraded beneath the mantle of thy sorrow.

Let the Army carry the mail. If the men who have been placed at the sticks of the ships have not seen sufficient service, we will find out what outside influence has been brought to bear to prevent our seasoned flyers from going aloft. If the equipment is obsolete, we know who sold it to the Army in the past and thus who is guilty of murder, murder of 10 men (?)—no, of hundreds in the last few years. Look at this list for the period of 1932 to 1933. There are the names of 60 flyers who died in Army, Navy, and Marine Corps air crashes during that 12-month period. That is not speculation. The stories of those tragedies are facts, and there are a lot more where those came from, and do not forget it. As I said before, I think the Army can fly the mail, but if it cannot, we are going to find out why. Thank God we have a President in the White House who is a courageous leader, who is going to fight this thing through and smoke out the real truth that will place the guilt of a crime against the people on the shoulders of those whose hands are stained. I know he has the courage to do it and show up the publicity mongers who have been circularizing the Congress with propaganda and monopolizing the front pages and the editorial columns in an effort against the cause of justice and the rights of the common people that he, the President, has sponsored.

The President and the Postmaster General are to be commended for their defense of the rights of the people. They are under obligation to protect the taxpayers, and they are doing it. I know they are going to keep the flag of our Nation that flutters from the wing tips of Army planes from being dragged into the mire by those who will sacrifice even their country's honor for the sake of ill-gained profits.

Let it be known here and now that the facts as I have stated them indicate beyond a question of a doubt President Roosevelt has not blundered, as the commercial air lines who want to force the return of the air-mail business to their hands would have you believe. He has taken a courageous stand to prevent the moneyed interests that have grasped control of commercial aviation from ramming their hands into the pockets of the taxpayers. I am confident he is going on through with this thing for the purpose of showing up the crowd that has gobbled up the aviation business of this country, and prove to the Nation that we not only have an Army Air Corps that can carry the mail but one that can defend the country in the event of a hostile invasion. If that is not true, then it is possible future development will indicate the President has by virtue of his cool and calculating judgment saved us from a national calamity.

The American people must be loyal to him and back him up. If they do not, they will find that they have been traitors to their flag, traitors to themselves, and that they have wronged those who have been battling for their cause. Let us have no more efforts to shield Treasury raiders from the eyes of the American public. Let us finish the job we have started for the man in the street who has paid the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE].

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak to you this afternoon on the question of our expenditures in recent years for aircraft equipment. We have branches of aeronautics in the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, Marine Corps, Department of Commerce, Department of Agriculture, National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, and the Post Office Department, each of which has its separate personnel and overhead expenses to be met.

AIRCRAFT INVESTIGATIONS

Since the World War we have had 25 or more separate investigations, all of which were trying to formulate a future policy for our governmental air forces, especially as our air forces relate to national defense. We have had in this country, both before, during, and since the war, a group of men who have been primarily interested in selling the Government aircraft equipment, and they have always actively lobbied to that end and have assiduously tried to block consolidations of the departments, especially a centralized purchasing agent for aircraft equipment. This group has always opposed open competitive bidding in the procurement of aircraft supplies, and so far have been able to block the wishes of Congress along this line. This same group sold the Government aircraft during the World War, and were responsible for the expenditure of more than one and one half billion dollars. They manufactured the D.H.-4s, commonly known as the "flaming coffins", very few of which reached the front lines and were in service at the front at the signing of the armistice. It was known at that time that these D.H.-4s were not good enough to be kept as standard equipment in the British Royal Air Force and were almost immediately replaced by the D.H.-9 and other types. This same group very largely control the aircraft industry today.

The remarks that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN] has just made with regard to the Air Trust can be verified not only by this chart which I hold in my hand, showing the interlocking connections of the "Air Trust", but by an individual investigation which will bear out the information therein contained. There is no doubt in my mind, and I do not believe there will be in your mind if you go into this matter, as to the status of this industry today. This business is primarily divided into two branches, transportation and manufacturing. The transportation phase deals with air mail and passengers. The manufacturing branch deals with the commercial end.

AIR-MAIL SUBSIDY

Let us look at the situation for just a few minutes. We have already received information from the Post Office Department that these concerns carrying the mail have taken unfairly in profits from this Government an amount in excess of $46,000,000. They have received that much subsidy since 1928, when they began carrying the mail for our Government, beyond what would be a reasonable price for this service on domestic air mail alone. What this same group of concerns received in unfair, unjust, and, we might say, illegal profits on Government contracts that they have received since the Aircraft Act of July 2, 1926, would make the $46,000,000 look like a very small sum of money.

WHAT AVIATION COSTS

When we look at the appropriations which Congress has made for the last 5 years, we find that Congress has appropriated for aviation alone in excess of $152,000,000 annually, on the average, as shown by the following table, showing the estimated expenditures for aviation from 1929 to 1933, inclusive:

Estimated cost of the Air Service of the United States, including Army, Navy, Coast Guard, Post Office, Department of Commerce, Department of Agriculture, and the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, fiscal years 1929-33, inclusive—Continued

² All issues by War Department branches.

⁴ The appropriations and expenditures listed include the cost of maintenance, operation, and repair of aircraft tenders and the carriers Saratoga, Lexington, and Langley including the pay and subsistence of aviation personnel attached thereto.

⁵ Excludes commuted rations. Reported in Pay, Marine Corps.

⁶ Includes hospital treatment of aviation personnel, which item was not included in the estimates of previous years.

The above table is a mere estimate by the War Department, and many believe our expenditures much more than shown by the chart (pp. 398-399, Navy appropriation hearing, 1935). The recent disclosures show—as clearly brought out by the gentleman from Iowa—there is something radically wrong with the equipment being furnished not only the Army but the Navy as well.

What is wrong with this equipment? We have annually been paying more money than any other nation in the world for aviation. Certainly Congress has done its part. There are no superior aviators in the world to the men of our Army and Navy. The Army's recent unfortunate experience in carrying the mail shows primarily the lack of proper flying equipment. This equipment has not stood up. It is not delivering.

THE AIR-TRUST LOBBY

Yet this bunch of pirates have had the audacity to come before this Congress and before our committees and attack the administration, calling the President's advisers "traitors." Why? Because he has had the courage to step into the breach because of the corruption and fraud that has been disclosed in the letting of the mail contracts by previous administrations in the Post Office Department and has taken away from this bunch of pirates the right to carry the mail. They did not have this right, and they knew the contracts under which they have been operating were illegal. Every concern that had one of these contracts knew that it had a contract it could not go into court and enforce. They have very recently organized a lobby. It is going to charge Washington with a slush fund in excess of $100,000, and they are going to tell you that you must turn these air-mail lines back to the private companies without fail. They are going to try to discredit the administration and anyone who dares to stand in their way. They are also telling the independent aircraft concerns to get on the line and chip in because they are going to put it over and they will need their help.

The lobby is now being organized. Their personnel is becoming known. The advance guard is already here, and they are going to tell us we must turn these lines back and do it promptly. The mail boxes of different Members are being filled with partisan editorials of the press of the country from coast to coast, all a part of the propaganda organized by this group to tell the administration that it must turn these lines back quickly and that Congress must enact legislation that will bring about this result.

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. WEARIN. Did the gentleman ever happen to notice that this propaganda is being sent out in envelopes with the return address of the Transcontinental & Western Air Co.?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes, sir. All of it, and it is being mimeographed by them, and they are one of the worst offenders in this racket.

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. The gentleman started out a moment ago by speaking of the industry being divided into two branches, the transportation and the manufacturing end. The gentleman then discussed the transportation end. Is the gentleman going to speak later with respect to the manufacturing end?

AIRCRAFT MANUFACTURE

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes, sir. I want to cover the manufacturing phase of it, because it is very vital to our different departments purchasing this aircraft equipment from these same concerns. I touched on that question the other day in a speech I made. At that time I attempted to bring out the inferiority of the equipment that is being sold by the trust today to the Government through its different branches. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt about this, and the tables of Major Mackenzie-Kennedy which I inserted in the RECORD on March 6 will speak for themselves. These tables have been checked by Government experts and found conservative but accurate. Our warplanes and warplane engines will not fly as fast and will not deliver in comparison with the planes of half a dozen other countries. Our position in national defense in the air is a serious one. Today we rank third among the nations in the number of warplanes; sixth in the number of factories; the most backward of all in the design of warplanes in service and projected. Our warplanes are most deficient in the elasticity of performance. Today our leading warplanes cannot reach similar foreign planes to do battle with them. A careful comparison made of our warplanes and engines with those of other countries will show that the speed of our planes are from 20 percent to 30 percent less than that of several other nations. The different investigating committees have been striving to correct this condition since the World War, and today we find ourselves, comparatively speaking, without any warplanes. We now have the two main branches of the Service, the Army and the Navy, each very jealous of its own jurisdiction, each loaded at the head and primarily interested in its own jurisdiction alone, with our air defense standing alone and taking only what they will hand it—the crumbs that fall from the master's table.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I notice during the last few days some of the long, lean, lanky, hungry politicians up at Wichita Falls, whom the gentleman caused to be on the outside looking in, rather than on the inside looking out, are very much dissatisfied with the gentleman's attitude. Are they still after the gentleman up at Wichita Falls?

WICHITA FALLS "RING'S" ACTIVITIES

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes, sir; they are still after me, and it is for a reason. It is the same crowd that has always been after me on the different propositions where I have defended the rights of the taxpayers of the country and have refused to let them dictate how I should vote. They opposed me when I was in the house and in the senate in Texas. They are never satisfied until and unless they can have their way, and I have always tried to protect the little fellow—they can look after themselves.

Mr. BLANTON. Is that the same bunch of lean, long, lanky, hungry politicians that tried to take my colleague's appointments away from him with respect to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes, sir; it is the same bunch, and it is the same bunch that tried to take away from me the right to name the postmasters and other appointments in my district.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I am pleased that the gentleman has been yielded more time, because I have some very important questions I want to ask the gentleman.

I wonder if this is the same gang of Republican complexion up at Wichita Falls that yesterday helped other Republicans to have placed on our home loan bank bill, in another body, a Republican amendment that would take away from all Democratic Congressmen the naming of appraisers and attorneys for each county in our districts?

Mr. McFARLANE. I do not know about that, but I do know that so far as my own district is concerned, nothing would please that crowd better than to do just that.

Mr. BLANTON. I wish my colleague, tonight before he goes to bed, would wire that gang at Wichita Falls, and would wire Jim Shaw at Dallas, that when this amendment reaches the House of Representatives what the House will do to it will be aplenty. We will kill it as soon as we reach it. We will not allow a Republican amendment like that to stay in the bill. My colleague knows that the Democratic appointees whom the Democratic Members of Congress in every district have appointed as appraisers and attorneys in each county have been the highest-class men in our districts. They have been men of intelligence, men of integrity, men of experience, men of great ability, men well qualified, men who know the people, men who know the property, men highly respected at home, and men who have been doing valuable service for the Government of the United States ever since their appointment. We will not permit Jim Shaw to disturb them.

Mr. EAGLE. May another Texan interject to say that that is especially true in the Houston district?

Mr. McFARLANE. The gentlemen are right, and I thank you for your contributions.

Mr. BLANTON. And Jim Shaw did not put it over my colleague from Houston at all.

Mr. EAGLE. Not at all, and they will not hereafter.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. The gentleman from Texas does not want the House to believe that there are some Republican politicians in Texas stopping him from naming postmasters in his district?

Mr. McFARLANE. They just tried to do that, I may say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD], but they did not succeed.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas 3 additional minutes.

LITTLE COMPETITION IN AIRCRAFT PROCUREMENT

Mr. McFARLANE. On the manufacturing phase of this Air Trust racket, let me call your attention to the seriousness of the situation.

In July 1926 Congress enacted the present aircraft-procurement law after many investigations and long debate, both in the committees and in Congress, in trying to determine the best policy of procurement in building up our air forces so that we could take our proper place in the air among the other nations of the world. The principal bone of contention between the conflicting viewpoints, as expressed by the leaders in the House Military and Naval Affairs Committees, was whether or not we should have public and open competitive bidding in the procurement of our aircraft equipment. After much debate the different measures passed the House and Senate and the Free conference committee brought back their report. The principal bone of contention was on amendment no. 30, and on this amendment Mr. McSWAIN said:

Rather than eliminate publicity, rather than cut out competition and bidding, as was the recommendation of the Lampert and Morrow committees, we have not doubled it merely, but we have multiplied it by at least 10, so that now the light is to be turned on from every angle. It is true that there is discretion in the Secretary to decide which is the lowest responsible bidder, which one can best build the aircraft for the safety of the lives of the men who are to fly them in time of peace and time of war.

Mr. GRIFFIN. But you eliminated that.

Mr. McSWAIN. The discretion still rests with the Secretary of War to decide that question, and there is publicity from the very first proposition of inviting competition in the matter of design contest, competition in the building and construction contract, and there is light turned on in this.

This Aircraft Act and the above expresses the undisputed intention of Congress at that time on the question of open competition. The Army and Navy in this bill were given special privileges not enjoyed by any other aeronautical division. The Secretaries of War and of the Navy were given the exclusive authority to interpret the provisions of the contract, when the contracts of all other departments are interpreted by the Comptroller General; and the record of aircraft procurement from 1926 to date shows that is where we have made a serious mistake. More than 90 percent of the warplanes, engines, and parts purchased since the act of 1926, according to the Comptroller's Department, has been without open competitive bidding. According to the unbroken line of decisions of Judge Advocate Generals of both the Army and the Navy Departments, neither Department, under section 10 (k) had the right to secure designs, aircraft, aircraft parts, or aeronautical accessories without open competitive bidding; yet the record shows that the Secretaries of the Army and the Navy and those employees under them have continued to disregard the opinion of their legal advisers and have purchased aircraft under this section in violation of the law and clearly contrary to the intent of Congress in the enactment of the law.

AIR TRUST HARD TO SATISFY

We have the same group that controls air transportation selling all aircraft equipment to the Government departments under contract, with little or no competition, in open, flagrant violation of the law of Congress enacted July 2, 1926, knowing that they are violating the law in selling to different departments Army and Navy equipment—and then they have the gall to come out in the press and criticize the President and the administration when they were caught with the goods in trying to enforce illegal air-mail contracts which were unreasonably expensive to the taxpayers.

The profit they have made on the contracts that they have had with our Government, what they have received in unfair, unjust profits, will not be a bagatelle when compared with what they received in governmental contracts on the bunch of inefficient and obsolete equipment they have sold the Army and the Navy since the World War.

They are not trying to promote the national defense nor improve the aircraft equipment they sell us; they are interested only in one thing, and that is quantity production and making as much money off the Government as possible. If they improve their equipment, they would have to appropriate something for their improved jigs, dies, and tools; and as there is no competition, why should they do it? There are two principal holding companies, and they largely control the whole thing—the Curtiss-Wright Co. and the United Aircraft & Transport Corporation.

INCOME-TAX EVASION

I have been checking the income-tax records of all corporations selling the Navy aircraft and find that while many of these concerns which head-up principally through the Chase National, National City, and J. P. Morgan & Co. group are primarily interested in crucifying the disabled war veterans and their dependents through their activities in the National Economy League they have secured favorable income-tax legislation for themselves and by filing consolidated returns through their holding companies have saved millions of dollars that they would have been required to pay under the income-tax law of 1918. All corporations holding Government contracts should be required to pay income taxes on same and should not be allowed to file consolidated returns or to evade this tax through other manipulations. I insert in the RECORD at this time (see p. 4977) a chart showing the latest available information on the interlocking directorates and connections of the "air trust."

In January 1928 Hon. CARL VINSON introduced H.R. 9359, to amend section 10 (k) to permit the procurement of aircraft without competition. This measure was drawn at the request of Mr. Curtis D. Wilbur, then Secretary of the Navy. The measure was never reported out of the Military Affairs Committee. We should either repeal the Aircraft Act of 1926 or demand that its provisions be enforced. We ought to have competition, competitive bidding in the procurement of our aircraft the same as we have in other things.

The Army and the Navy has been given special privilege, and the law has been violated by the different departments knowingly.

And, my friends, let me say here now they know they have violated section 10 (k) ever since it was enacted.

Section 10 (k) is as follows:

(k) The Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy may at his discretion purchase abroad or in the United States, with or without competition, by contract or otherwise, such designs, aircraft, aircraft parts, or aeronautical accessories as may be necessary in his judgment for experimental purposes in the development of aircraft or aircraft parts or aeronautical accessories of the best kind for the Army or the Navy, as the case may be, and if as a result of such procurement, new and suitable designs considered to be the best kind for the Army or the Navy are developed, he may enter into contract, subject to the requirements of paragraph (j) of this section, for the procurement in quantity of such aircraft, aircraft parts, or aeronautical accessories without regard to the provisions of paragraphs (a) to (e), inclusive, hereof.

They know it today. They violated the clear mandate of Congress in purchasing their equipment. That is something that ought to be looked into. It ought to be investigated. This matter ought not to be whitewashed. When you get the report from the investigating Committee on Military Affairs, it will not be a whitewash like the majority report of another committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What committee does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. McFARLANE. The Subcommittee on Naval Affairs of the House, appointed to investigate aircraft procurement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the gentleman think that was a whitewash?

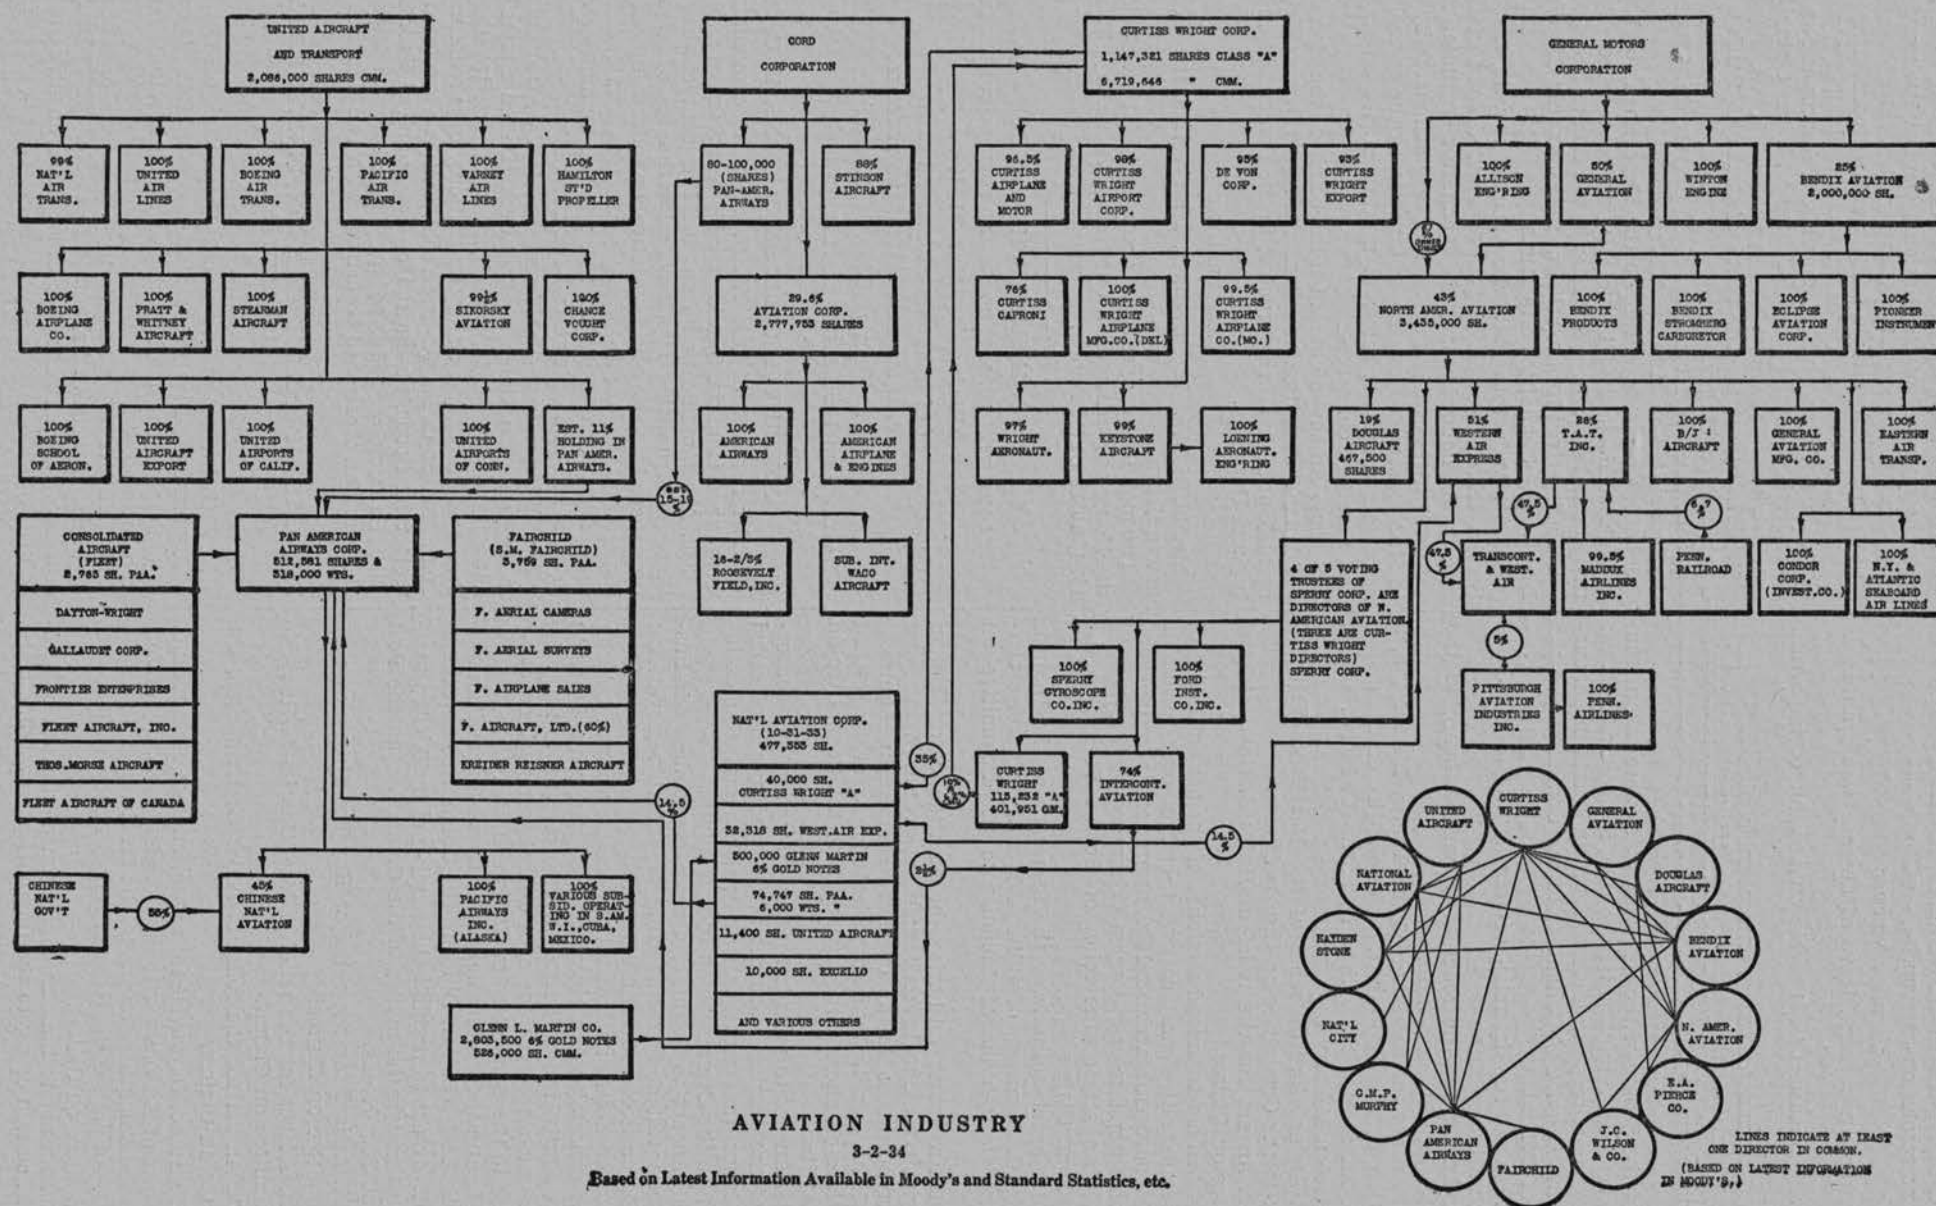

Mr. McFARLANE. I think so; the report will speak for itself. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'CONNOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reported that that Committee had under consideration the bill (H.R. 8617), the legislative appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 21, 1934

(Legislative day of Tuesday, Mar. 20, 1934)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal for the calendar day of Tuesday, March 20, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States, was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Hattigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8134) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, and 32 to the said bill and concurred therein, and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 25, 26, 27, 28, and 35 to the said bill, and concurred therein severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2728) to repeal Federal liquor prohibition laws to the extent they are in force in the Territory of Hawaii, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2729) to repeal an act of Congress entitled "An act to prohibit the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes", approved February 14, 1917, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ANNUAL REPORT OF ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL (S.DOC. NO. 158)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Architect of the Capitol, transmitting, pursuant to law, his annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

MARKETING OF GOVERNMENT SECURITIES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in partial response to Senate Resolution 209, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 21, 1934.

Hon. JOHN N. GARNER,

President of the Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am in receipt of Senate Resolution 209, requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the Senate information with respect to Government securities offered to the public during the present fiscal year.

Between July 1, 1933, and March 15, 1934, the Secretary of the Treasury offered for subscription 2 issues of bonds, 3 issues of Treasury certificates of indebtedness, 5 issues of Treasury notes, and 35 issues of Treasury bills. Since it is necessary to obtain from the Federal Reserve banks information as to the amounts allotted to the several classes of subscribers specified in the resolution, I have obtained estimates from the several governors of the Federal Reserve banks of the time necessary to compile this data. It will be possible for most of the Federal Reserve banks to complete this analysis within 3 weeks, but three of the larger districts have indicated that a longer time will be required.

A complete report, giving the information desired by the Senate, will be forwarded to you as soon as this data is received and assembled.

Very truly yours,

HENRY MORGENTHAU, JR.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

INFORMATION FROM NATIONAL RECOVERY ADMINISTRATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Administrator of National Recovery, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 175—requesting certain information concerning employees and codes of the National Recovery Administration—the data requested so far as practicable, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NYE subsequently said: Mr. President, there was laid before the Senate this morning a communication from the Administrator of the National Recovery Administration in response to Senate Resolution 175, which was agreed to by the Senate about a month ago. That communication has been laid on the table for the moment, and I now move that it be referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Printing, where consideration may be given to the matter being printed as a public document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from Frank I. Faulkner, of Washington, D.C., relative to taxes and related matters, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a paper in the nature of a petition from Mrs. Cynthia Bradford, of Detroit, Mich., praying for the passage of legislation providing immediate payment of the so-called "soldiers' bonus", which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Park, New Bedford, North Attleboro, Somerville, Taunton, and Westfield; the Cape Cod Clerical Club, of Yarmouth; the World's Service Society, of Williamsburg; and the Ladies Benevolent Society of the Congregational Church, of Burlington, all in the State of Massachusetts, favoring the holding of early hearings and favorable action on the so-called "Patman motion-picture bill", being House bill 6097, providing higher moral standards for films entering interstate and foreign commerce, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

TREATMENT OF THE JEWS IN GERMANY

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present resolutions adopted by the Rodphey Scholem Lodge, No. 322, Independent Order of B'rith Abraham, of Holyoke, Mass., and a meeting of Jewish citizens of Franklin, Holliston, Medway, Millis, and West Medway, all in the State of Massachusetts, urging favorable consideration of Senate resolution 154, submitted by the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], opposing discriminations against Jews in Germany, which I ask may be appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PRESERVATION OF SUGAR-REFINING INDUSTRY IN UNITED STATES

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present resolutions from the Massachusetts General Court seeking the preservation of the United States industry of sugar refining, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions seeking preservation of the United States industry of sugar refining

Whereas the preservation of the domestic industry of sugar refining requires a drastic limitation of importations of refined sugar from insular possessions of the United States and from foreign countries: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts urges upon the Congress and the President of the United States to exercise their powers drastically to limit the importation of refined sugar from insular possessions of the United States and from foreign countries and thus insure the continued existence in the United States of a great industry, and specifically urges that the Costigan bill, so called, now pending before Congress and providing for quotas and control over supplies of raw sugar be amended by the inserting therein of provisions expressly limiting importations of refined sugar from insular possessions of the United States and from foreign countries; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the Commonwealth forthwith forward copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth.

In house of representatives, adopted March 7, 1934.

In senate, adopted, in concurrence, March 15, 1934.

A true copy. Attest:

[SEAL]

F. W. COOK,

Secretary of the Commonwealth.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 2997) authorizing loans by Federal land banks to incorporated associations and corporations in certain cases, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 513) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3046) creating the Sistersville Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, hold, and operate a highway bridge across the Ohio River at or near Sistersville, W. Va., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 514) thereon.

Mr. DICKINSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1431. An act for the relief of Elmer E. C. Armstrong (Rept. No. 515); and

S. 2378. An act for the relief of August R. Lundstrom (Rept. No. 516).

Mr. DICKINSON also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1314) for the relief of Perry Randolph, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 517) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 4056) for the relief of Emma F. Taber, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 518) thereon.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 2639) for the relief of Charles J. Eisenhower, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 519) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H.R. 472. An act for the relief of Phyllis Pratt and Harold Louis Pratt, a minor (Rept. No. 520); and H.R. 881. An act for the relief of Primo Tiburzio (Rept. No. 521).

Mr. GIBSON also, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H.R. 469. An act for the relief of Lucy Murphy (Rept. No. 522); and H.R. 2342. An act for the relief of Lota Tidwell, the widow of Chambliss L. Tidwell (Rept. No. 523).

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably without amendment Senate Resolution 212, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor hereby is authorized to employ for the remainder of the session of the Senate an assistant clerk, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,000 per annum.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 20th instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 356) for the relief of the Great American Indemnity Co. of New York.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

EXTRADITION OF FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back favorably without amendment House bill 5862, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Let me explain that the bill provides for the removal of American citizens or nationals who are fugitives from justice from places in which the United States exercises extraterritorial authority. Somewhere at sea is a small Greek freight vessel bearing an American citizen who is a fugitive from justice. This citizen seeks refuge in a place from which he cannot be removed and brought back for trial. This legislation is a modification of section 591 of title 18 of the United States Code so as to authorize the removal of American citizens or nationals who have been accused of crime to the United States, the language extending to those places where our Government exercises extraterritorial authority.

I ask that there be printed with my remarks the House report on the bill.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Rept. No. 217, 73d Cong., 1st sess.]

EXTRADITION FROM AREAS IN WHICH THE UNITED STATES EXERCISES EXTRATERRITORIAL JURISDICTION

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report (to accompany H.R. 5862):

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 5862) to provide for the removal of American citizens and nationals accused of crime to and from the jurisdiction of any officer or representative of the United States vested with judicial authority in any country in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction, after consideration, reports the same favorably to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The omission in present law which the enactment of this bill would supply was called to the attention of the committee by the Department of State. A communication addressed by the Secretary of State to the chairman of the committee under date of May 17, 1933, which is attached hereto and made a part of this report, explains the effect of the bill and the desirability of its enactment.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 17, 1933.

HON. HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Chairman of the Judiciary Committee,
House of Representatives.

SIR: There is no present provision of law whereby American citizens or nationals who are fugitives from justice may be extradited as between the United States and the jurisdiction of its officers or representatives who are vested with judicial authority in countries where the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction and the experience of this Department has indicated that it is very desirable that this omission be supplied in order that havens of refuge shall not exist for such fugitives.

Because of the very existence of the extraterritorial jurisdiction which the United States exercises in several countries of the world it has been found impracticable for this country to enter into treaties of extradition with the governments of such countries, which are not empowered to bring about the arrest of American citizens.

It is true that the treaties with the countries concerned by virtue of which extraterritorial jurisdiction is exercised by the United States do not expressly concede to this country the right of extradition. However, it is a fact that other governments also exercising extraterritorial jurisdiction in those countries while likewise without express provisions of treaty conferring upon them the right to extradite, have in practice and for many years exercised such right, so far as their nationals are concerned, and it is understood with the concurrence of the countries in question. Consequently, it is believed that the United States may well enact legislation providing for extradition to and from these countries and it is felt that the enactment of such legislation would in nowise arouse resentment in these countries but instead would be concurred in by them.

Accordingly, I transmit a proposed bill which I am requesting you to introduce, providing in section 1 for the return, as between the United States, its Territories, districts, and possessions on the one hand, and the jurisdiction of officers or representatives of the United States vested with judicial authority in the countries where the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction of American citizens or nationals who are charged with crimes against the United States, and providing in section 2 for the return to a State, Territory, district, or possession of the United States from a jurisdiction exercised by the United States abroad of fugitives charged with a crime against the laws of such State, Territory, district, or possession.

The countries to which the proposed bill, if enacted into law, would relate are the following, in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction: China, Egypt, Ethiopia, Muscat, and Morocco.

I should, of course, be glad to be advised prior to the introduction of the bill of any modifications thereof which you or the committee under your charge should consider it advisable to make therein.

Very truly yours,

CORDELL HULL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 5862) to provide for the removal of American citizens and nationals accused of crime to and from the jurisdiction of any officer or representative of the United States vested with judicial authority in any country in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 591 of title 18 of the United States Code, so far as applicable, shall apply within the jurisdiction of the United States in any country where the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction for the arrest and removal therefrom to the United States, its Territories, Districts, or possessions, including the Panama Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands, or any other territory governed, occupied, or controlled by it, of any citizen or national of the United States who is a fugitive from justice charged with or convicted of the commission of any crime or offense against the United States, and shall also apply throughout the United States, its Territories, Districts, and possessions, including the Panama Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands, as well as to any other territory governed, occupied, or controlled by the United States, for the arrest and removal therefrom to the jurisdiction of any officer or representative of the United States vested with judicial authority in any country in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction, of any citizen or national of the United States who is a fugitive from justice charged with or convicted of the commission of any crime or offense against the United States in any country where it exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction. Such fugitive first mentioned may, by any officer or representative of the United States vested with judicial authority in any country in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction and agreeably to the usual mode of process against offenders subject to such jurisdiction, be arrested and imprisoned or admitted to bail, as the case may be, pending the issuance of a warrant for his removal to the United States, its Territories, Districts, or possessions, including the Panama Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands, or any other territory governed, occupied, or controlled by it, which warrant it shall be the duty of the principal officer or representative of the United States vested with judicial authority in the country where the fugitive shall be found seasonably to issue, and of the United States marshal or corresponding officer to execute. Such marshal or other officer, or the deputies of such marshal or officer, when engaged in executing such warrant without the jurisdiction of the court to which they are attached, shall have all the powers of a marshal of the United States so far as such powers are requisite for the prisoner's safekeeping and the execution of the warrant.

SEC. 2. Whenever the executive authority of any State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States, including the Panama Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands, demands any American citizen or national as a fugitive from justice who has fled to the jurisdiction of any officer or representative of the United States vested with judicial authority in any country in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction, and produces a copy of an indictment found or an affidavit made before a magistrate of any State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States, charging the fugitive so demanded with having committed treason, felony, or other crime, certified as authentic by the Governor, chief magistrate, or other person authorized to act as such from whence the fugitive so charged has fled, it shall be the duty of the officer or representative of the United States vested with judicial authority to whom the demand has been made to cause such fugitive to be arrested and secured, and to cause notice of the arrest to be given to the executive authorities making such demand, or to the agent of such authority appointed to receive the fugitive, and to cause the fugitive to be delivered to such agent when he shall appear. If no such agent shall appear within 3 months from the time of the arrest, the prisoner may be discharged. All costs or expenses incurred in the apprehending, securing, and transmitting such fugitive to the State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States, including the Panama Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands, shall be paid by the executive authority making such demand. The agent who receives the fugitive into his custody shall be empowered to transport him to the jurisdiction from which he has fled, and every person who, by force, sets at liberty or rescues the fugitive from such agent while so transporting him shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than 1 year.

SEC. 3. Whenever, under this act, it is desired to obtain the provisional arrest and detention of a fugitive in advance of the presentation of the formal proofs, such detention may be obtained by telegraph upon the request of the authority competent to request the surrender of such fugitive addressed to the authority competent to grant such surrender: Provided, That such request for provisional arrest and detention be accompanied by an express statement that a warrant for the fugitive's arrest has been issued within the jurisdiction of the authority making such request charging the fugitive with the commission of the crime for which his extradition is sought to be obtained: Provided further, That in the case of a request so made by a State, Territory, District, or possession, the expenses of obtaining a fugitive upon telegraphic request shall be borne by such State, Territory, District, or possession: And provided further, That no person shall be held in custody under telegraphic request by virtue of the provisions of this section for more than 90 days.

SEC. 4. The provisions of section 244 of title 18 of the United States Code are hereby made applicable to proceedings in extradition instituted in accordance with the provisions of this act.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HEBERT:

A bill (S. 3122) for the relief of H. N. Wilcox; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 3124) to amend the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in classified civil service, and for other purposes, approved May 22, 1920, and acts in amendment thereof", approved July 3, 1926, as amended; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. GORE:

A bill (S. 3126) for the relief of Caesar F. Simmons; to the Committee on Claims.

(By request.) A bill (S. 3127) granting a pension to Susie Wichita Te-kits-kush; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 3128) to pay certain fees to Maude G. Nicholson, widow of George A. Nicholson, late a United States commissioner; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3129) for the relief of Max Vogel; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 3130) granting a renewal of Patent No. 54296 relating to the badge of the American Legion; and

A bill (S. 3131) granting a renewal of Patent No. 55398 relating to the badge of the American Legion Auxiliary; to the Committee on Patents.

LICENSING OF RACE TRACKS IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I introduce, by request, a bill to license race tracks in the District of Columbia and provide for their regulation.

The measure is identical with House bill 7906, introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. BLACK, of New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 3123) to license race tracks in the District of Columbia and provide for their regulation was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENT OF SECURITIES ACT OF 1933

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a bill proposing to amend the Securities Act of 1933. With the permission of the Senate, I will take just a few moments to explain what I am seeking to accomplish.

My State of Oklahoma is one of the new States. In addition to being one of the leading agricultural States and one of the leading livestock-producing States, it has made substantial progress in manufacturing and industrial pursuits generally. In the State of Oklahoma—and I am advised the same condition obtains in other States—industry is languishing for the want of money, credit, and ability to finance necessary expansion and development. In order to assist industry in Oklahoma as well as in other States, it is necessary to make possible the financing of industrial activity.

The particular objections or restrictions about which I complain are briefly as follows:

The Securities Act of 1933 prohibits the issuance or sale of securities unless a "registration statement" is in effect. This registration statement is in substance an application to the Government for permission to issue a specified security. The statement must be signed by the issuer, its principal executive officer or officers, its principal financial officer, its comptroller, and by the majority of its board of directors. Schedule A of the act contains 32 specifications—over 1,700 words—of written information to be contained in the registration statement, most of which can only be furnished by expert accountants, auditors, engineers, and valuers. The information and data required is exhaustive in detail, and in addition the Federal Trade Commission may require such further information or data as it sees fit.

Should there be in any of this information or data any mistake which amounts to an untrue statement of a material fact or to an omission to state a material fact required to be stated or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, every person who signed the registration statement, every person who was a director, whether he signed the statement or not, every accountant, engineer, appraiser, or any person who has with his consent been named in any part of the statement or any report or valuation which is used in connection with the statement, and also every underwriter, may be sued by any person acquiring such security, no matter from whom, and every such person is made jointly and severally liable to pay the cost of the security or damages not in excess of the price at which the security was originally offered.

Every person who sells a security by means of a written or oral statement, or both, which contains or omits the statement of a material fact as aforesaid is liable in damages. Also, any and every person who by any means controls the person so selling is likewise liable.

It is impossible to say how far-reaching this provision may be. Thus, scores of perfectly honest, well-intentioned people are made liable for the mistake of another, of whose mistake at the time they could in all human probability know nothing.

The act prohibits the sale of a security unless a prospectus thereof has been issued, which must contain substantially the same information required in a registration statement, and the act imposes both penal and civil liability for violation of the act with respect thereto, depending upon their character.

It will be seen that in the case of officers of a corporation who may be receiving only reasonable compensation, independent engineers, accountants, and appraisers, and others receiving only reasonable fees, and members of a board of directors, usually receiving no compensation, only a nominal fee, all acting honestly and in the highest degree of integrity, all may have their personal fortunes involved in any sizable issue of securities because of the innocent mistake of some one else.

All of the civil liabilities referred to are included in sections 11 to 16 of the act, and part of section 17, and the conditions created by them are what have frozen financing. To overcome this condition it is necessary to liberalize the act, with due regard to protecting the investing public. To make the common law apply to the subject, the bill which I have introduced proposes to eliminate these sections and parts. The penal provisions of the act for willful violation of the act are not disturbed. The bill also empowers the commission to make the procedure in the issuance of securities as inexpensive as possible.

Under the conditions created by the act it is not surprising that there has been but a pitiful attempt at financing. The keystone of the arch that we are all trying to build is employment, without which we cannot build. Just how we can expect employment without adequate financing I do not know, but I do know that unless industry is put in position to finance employment when the Government carry-over resources are exhausted, as they all too soon will be, we will be in a most perilous predicament. It is well that the Senate and the House of Representatives should recognize the condition which now confronts us.

Mr. President, at this point I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a copy of the bill which I have just introduced.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3125) to amend the Securities Act of 1933, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16 of the Securities Act of 1933 are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. Such act is amended by inserting after section 10 two new sections, as follows:

"SEC. 11. To facilitate the operation of the provisions of this act and to the end that the issuance of securities may not be made unduly costly, the Commission is hereby authorized and empowered in its discretion to waive and dispense with the filing with it by any applicant for the issuance of securities any papers, documents, data, and/or information which in its judgment may be unnecessary in compliance with the purpose and spirit of this act, except that this section shall not apply to the registration statement provided for in section 6 or the prospectus hereinbefore provided for.

"SEC. 12. Except as provided in section 20 the common law shall apply to any violation of the provisions of this act."

SEC. 3. Section 17 of such act is renumbered as section 13, and is amended by striking out, where they appear in subsection (a) (2), the following words: "or any omission to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading"; and such section is further amended by striking out subsection (b) and by relettering subsection (c) as subsection (b).

SEC. 4. Sections 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, and 23 of such act are hereby renumbered as sections 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19, respectively.

SEC. 5. Section 24 of such act is hereby renumbered as section 20, and is amended by inserting immediately before the word "omits" the word "willfully."

SEC. 6. Sections 25 and 26 of such act are hereby renumbered as sections 21 and 22.

REGULATION OF COTTON INDUSTRY—AMENDMENT

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted six amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE BILL

Mr. SHIPSTEAD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 8573) to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Strike out all of subdivision (e) of section 6, beginning in line 8, page 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(e) The quantities of sugar and coconut oil mentioned in paragraphs (a) and (b) of this section shall be reduced by 20 percent every year from the second to the fifth years, inclusive, after the date of inauguration of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands."

COLLECTION OF FUNDS FOR POLITICAL PURPOSES IN MINNESOTA

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, day before yesterday in the Senate during the debate on the Norris amendment to the home loan bill the statement was made by my colleague [Mr. SCHALL] that information had come to him alleging that funds for political purposes were being collected from C.W.A. workers in the State of Minnesota.

I have a telegram from Governor Olson, of Minnesota, in which he vigorously denies the allegation and states that an examination of these charges was made some time ago under the direction of the Federal Relief Administration and they were found to be unfounded. I have a request from the Governor to give his denial the same publicity in the Record that was given to the statement of my colleague.

I am also informed by Mr. Hopkins, the Administrator of Federal Relief, and am authorized by him to say that charges of this character were brought to his attention sometime ago, and an investigation made under his direction disclosed no evidence to sustain the charges of the collection of money for political purposes from C.W.A. workers in Minnesota. Mr. Hopkins states that if any evidence to sustain these charges is brought to his attention he will take proper action.

TRAFFIC CONDITIONS IN THE DISTRICT—ADDRESS BY SENATOR REYNOLDS

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the Record a very instructive and thoughtful address by the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] before the traffic committee of the Board of Trade of Washington, D.C., on March 21 on traffic conditions in the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

I am deeply appreciative of your kind invitation to be with you here today. I appreciate it for three reasons. It gives me an opportunity to thank Major Brown for the courteous way in which I have been treated by his efficient officers since I came to Washington. It gives me an opportunity to mingle with a group of civic-conscious citizens while they discuss one of the most serious problems confronting our National Capital. I refer to the chaotic conditions resulting from the delayed movement of street cars and motor vehicles over our streets and boulevards.

When I was named as a member of the Senate District Committee, I had hoped that I would find time for frequent contacts with those who direct the business and industrial affairs of this city. But after a long period of other than Democratic control of our Government, those who changed this control have demanded a reward. Most of these people called upon their Democratic Senators, of which I am one, to get it for them. In other words, my time has been limited.

However, I realize that there should be a closer contact between the civic organizations of Washington and those on Capitol Hill who, as members of the two District Committees, are charged with presenting to Congress legislation affecting the District.

When I was invited to speak to you today, I considered the invitation very carefully. I realized that the traffic problem is one for engineers. I knew that legislators could do little, except to clothe engineers with the authority to do that which in their opinion should be done. But the engineers must act first. Finally, I agreed to come on one condition. That condition is that I be permitted to speak frankly and give you my observations as an individual affected by our present traffic tangle. Yet I assure you that in my capacity as a United States Senator I shall wholeheartedly support every proposal that will in a constructive way help to assure a free movement of traffic with a greater degree of safety for all.

I fear that too many attempts to improve traffic conditions have been made in the manner of a half-hearted worker of jig-saw puzzles. In other words, as soon as one piece was missing the whole thing was thrown aside to be tried at another time. As a result there has never been a real effort to look upon our transportation problem as one of coordination. There have been too many spasmodic drives.

As might be expected, the people of Washington are today looking to Congress to take steps to facilitate the movement of traffic. Before this can be done, however, there must be a traffic survey with the objective of coordinating the movement of trolley cars, taxicabs, and private vehicles. This survey must take into account the demands and the needs of the greatest number. The man who rides on the street car has just as much right to reach his office on time as the man who drives an automobile. The man who drives an automobile has every reason to expect that he can also move on schedule. When he reaches his destination he should not be allowed to park his car in a manner that will interfere with the movement of other users of the streets, whether they be motorists or pedestrians. But, as I have said, engineers and experts on the subject must tell us how this is to be done.

I have a most sympathetic attitude toward our trolley system. In Washington, as in other cities, it has been the initial factor in making a physical expansion possible. Street-car lines, like spokes of a wheel, extended outward and furnished the impetus to the suburban trend. They made possible a wide separation between the residence and the place of business. They first enabled the big city to expand.

In earlier days the advent of a new street-car system in a city or town was somewhat like the coming of a railroad. It was not so many years ago that a community with a street-car line boasted of the fact, much in the manner of a boy with long trousers. It was a sign of civic progress, and the chambers of commerce made the most of it.

Many of us here today can recall the time when the street car was not only a necessity but it offered a means of pleasure. The Sunday afternoon trolley ride was an event. Yet I dare say that very few, if any, people today look upon electric transportation as a pleasure function. But the trolley is still important to the people of Washington and elsewhere. Because it cannot compete in speed with the taxicab and the private automobile, we cannot relegate our street-car lines to the junk heap. Their operators have a right to every consideration.

It is not a vested right, however, and they cannot expect undue restrictions on other forms of transportation because the trolleys were here first. I have seen the suggestion that the Public Utilities Commission undertake a transportation survey. Such a survey should not be under any conditions undertaken by an agency primarily concerned with particular phases of the transportation problem. It should be made by an agency concerned with the greatest good for the greatest number.

In connection with surveys, I am reminded of a recent attempt to help the traffic situation at one point which is familiar to all present. I refer to the Dupont Circle area. With little preparation, traffic was suddenly shunted away from the circle and along other arteries. I am not saying that this was not a worthy step, but I believe that in instances of this kind proper notice should be given the motorists. This would allow them to select another route and in the end possibly accomplish a better distribution of traffic.

Before I leave the subject of trolley systems entirely, I will drop the suggestion that if such a step is necessary there must be an iron hand forcing them to change routes, equipment, and in other ways meet the demands of the day. Those who have caught the tempo of modern transportation are finding it beneficial.

There are ways, of course, in which our trolley system can be helped. It is entitled to this help. I need only mention the stringent efforts to stop double parking, the placing of furniture vans across streets during hours of heavy-traffic movement, and the tendency of some operators of vehicles owned by commercial concerns to trust to luck in avoiding a parking ticket. These things should be eliminated, not solely to help the street cars, but also to help others who are entitled to free movement along the streets with a minimum of delay. I have every confidence that an adequate traffic survey would expose and result in the removal of many of these traffic ills.

In speaking of control, I believe that our present system of centralized traffic control is a good one. I am a great believer in placing responsibility in the hands of someone at a central point. Then, if he fails to do the job, he alone is responsible. My own observations in Washington lead me to believe that stricter enforcement of our traffic laws, without fear or favor, can be accomplished under the present set-up.

Enforcement, in turn, creates other problems. The motorist who in a thoughtless moment parks his car double or ignores the traffic light is not a criminal. He is entitled to every consideration. He should not be required to spend hours waiting to pay his fine or to receive leniency where it is justified.

In connection with traffic courts, I was interested sometime ago in the suggestion made by the American Automobile Association that changes be made in our present system. It advocated the establishment of a separate and distinct traffic court before which only cases involving infraction of the local traffic ordinances would be heard. I believe this is a very meritorious plan, but inasmuch as it is now being studied by the District Commissioners further comment is hardly necessary.

I spoke of a traffic survey. If such a survey reveals that more officers are needed, we should have more officers. I was recently shown figures which disclosed that there are 951 vehicles to each traffic officer in the National Capital. Minneapolis, Minn., for example, has only 294 vehicles to every traffic officer, Philadelphia has 437 vehicles to every officer, and New York City has 282 vehicles to every officer. By this I do not mean that we should immediately expand our traffic force, but simply that it should be expanded if a scientific survey finds it necessary.

In conclusion let me add that there never was a time when the people of our country were looking more to the seat of our National Government for a solution of every conceivable kind of problem. Those who come here observe every method of operating this great municipality. Traffic surveys with C.W.A. funds have been started in various parts of the country, but we cannot expect people to have much faith in suggestions and ideas from Washington until we put those suggestions and ideas into effect at the place where they originate.

It has not been my intention to be critical of any group or any individual in making the observations I have made here today. I told you at the outset that they would reflect my views as an individual. As a Member of the Senate, I simply pledge you my cooperation in every worth-while attempt that is made to overcome the conditions that now retard the free movement of traffic.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8573) to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Kean	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Cutting	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Davis	King	Russell
Bachman	Dickinson	La Follette	Schall
Bailey	Dieterich	Logan	Sheppard

Connally	Hayden	Pope
Coolidge	Hebert	Reed
Costigan	Johnson	Reynolds

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I regret to announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] is detained from the Senate on account of a severe cold.

I desire further to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained from the Senate on official business.

I ask that these announcements may stand for the day.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if we are ready to proceed with the discussion of the Philippine independence bill, I desire briefly to submit my view in opposition to it in its pending form.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the able chairman of the committee, has appropriately indicated that the measure is so completely a paraphrase of the previous Hawes-Cutting-Hare bill that he even foregoes an explanation of the measure. I think he is amply justified in that attitude. The only differences between the Hawes-Cutting-Hare bill and the pending Tydings-McDuffie bill are inconsequential and are described in the fifth and sixth paragraphs of the committee report, as follows:

5. The United States agrees to relinquish all reservations now designated for the use of the United States Army after the institution of the independent government, but reserves the right, at its discretion, to retain and maintain naval bases and fueling stations in the Philippine Islands.

This is something of an improvement, but does not affect the fundamental theory of the bill.

The next paragraph reads as follows:

6. The feasibility of further retaining and maintaining naval bases and fueling stations in the Philippine Islands after the independent government is constituted, will be the subject of conferences between the two governments.

This means little or nothing as respects the basic plan and the basic purpose. It is the mere expression of a pious expectation.

With the single exception, Mr. President, that the title of the bill has been changed by a reversal of the phraseology, the two paragraphs I have read from the report constitute practically the only differences between the original measure and the pending bill.

Since it seems unnecessary to the Senator from Maryland to present the affirmative case for the proposed legislation because it is but the same old story and because of the obvious attitude of the Chamber, I think it equally futile to present the opposition. My position is well known; it has been amply set out in the previous debates, and I intend to waste no time in needless repetition. I simply want to carry the record to a consistent conclusion, and to offer a substitute which again, in my judgment, will more accurately reflect the responsibilities of the Government of the United States and the best welfare of the Filipino people themselves. I decline to criticize except as I can specifically point what I believe to be the better and the wiser way.

Let us make no mistake about the pending measure. It is the same old bill which was vetoed by the President on January 17, 1933, and which was passed over the Presidential veto by a vote of 68 to 26. Inasmuch as today's Senate is approximately the same Senate which then voted, I have no illusions about what will happen respecting the bill at the present time. But I want no misapprehension that the bill has gained any material advantages or benefits by the interim changes.

It is the same bill which was heartily pilloried by the American press from coast to coast when the Congress passed it the last time, and the casual, incidental changes that have been made do not in any single degree remove the objections to which American journalism addressed its condemnation at that time. It is the same bill. It certainly has not earned the withdrawal of my opposition.

It is the same bill against which American agriculture strenuously protested because of the fact that it failed, in the estimation of American agriculture, to provide adequate protection of the domestic market in this exceedingly difficult agrarian hour of distress. It is the same bill, and the changes that have been made do not go to those objections in any respect.

It is the same bill which was assaulted at that time by those who believe it is an estoppel against the successful development of American oriental trade. It is the same bill which was challenged as a desertion of our responsibilities both to the Filipinos and to the honor of the United States. Nothing that has happened to the bill changes in any respect the objections of this character which were leveled against it.

Mr. President, it may be said with particular emphasis that it is the same bill which was rejected by large sectors of the Filipino people themselves. They had until January 17, 1934, in which to accept the terms of the Hawes-Cutting-Hare bill. They permitted that deadline to pass without affirmative action. There was a definite cleavage in the islands upon the proposition. The failure to act within the time limit may be fairly interpreted as a verdict of opposition and a mandate of objection to the bill. Nothing that has been changed in it in any material aspect affects that native attitude, if it was an attitude taken in good faith, which I am perfectly willing to assume it was.

So, Mr. President, we now confront this amazing situation: Here is the same old bill changed in no material aspect, but now receiving the endorsement of those native elements which heretofore opposed it.

I want to congratulate the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], my cherished friend, the able Chairman of the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, upon his amazing and inscrutable achievement. He is a magician to have accomplished this unusual result. He is an alchemist. With a deft touch of his diplomatic brush—if I may change the metaphor—he alters a word or two in the title of the bill without any material effect so far as the real purpose is concerned. Then he adroitly deletes an occasional paragraph here and there which has no effect whatever upon the realities of the plan involved. He vaguely promises a few post-mortem conferences which in some nonunderstandable way are supposed ultimately to alter the prospectus in some mysterious degree. And, presto change, overnight, the quarrelsome native attitude unites itself in a glamorous apostrophe to this new proposition. Yesterday's anathema becomes today's jubilee. The Hawes-Cutting-Hare atrocity, as it was designated by many of its critics at the time, now becomes the Tydings-McDuffie benediction. I say again it is a rare and happy achievement on the part of the Senator from Maryland. But I decline, Mr. President, to be fooled by it myself.

I resubmit in very brief epitome the philosophy of action which I think ought to guide the Senate in respect to the situation.

There are two clean-cut ways of dealing with the Philippine Islands. One way is to stay in. The other way is to get out. From my viewpoint there is no middle ground which can be taken either with advantage to the natives or with justification from an American viewpoint. We should either stay in or get out. The pending measure does neither. It half stays in and half gets out, and at no time during the period of 12 or 14 or 16 intervening years of twilight zone can anybody put his finger upon the precise roots of authority. Their flag does not go up. Our flag does not come down. It is a sort of half-masted proposition during the next experimental decade and a half.

I repeat that there are two clean-cut ways of proceeding in respect to the Philippine Islands. One is to stay in and the other is to get out. Those who believe that we should stay in are not entirely united in their viewpoint as to the proper procedure in connection therewith. Some few Americans believe that we should never leave the Philippine Islands, first, because we have no constitutional right from their viewpoint, and, secondly, because they deem the maintenance of this far outpost essential in the economic development of American foreign trade.

I have no sympathy with the viewpoint of those who believe we should stay in the Philippine Islands for keeps. There is no color of question, so far as I am concerned, that we are under compelling moral obligation to leave at the first moment when it can be done with safety and success for them and with safety and success for us.

There is another theory, however, under which we could have stayed in, Mr. President, without any violation whatsoever of those clear commitments to ultimate independence. We could have stayed in under a period of final preindependence preparation with a gradually receding share of the American market left to the Philippine export trade. We could have stayed in under a final preindependence period of preparation which, in my view, could finally have led to ultimate Philippine independence 15 or 20 years hence on the basis of the surest possible permanent success for this great enterprise. I defended this latter viewpoint to the limit upon previous occasions when this problem has been at the Senate's bar. But there is no utility whatever in further discussing any phase of a stay-in program, because the entire trend of public thought, both here and there, appears to reject any such approach.

Therefore, repeating now—and it cannot be repeated too often—that there are only two clean-cut ways in which to deal with this problem—namely, either to stay in or to get out—I submit that we have reached the other alternative, which is to get out. It is the choice of the lesser of evils, with this pending bill in mind.

How can we get out?

Here there are two courses which will be submitted to the Senate. The able Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who has been for two decades the apostle of early and complete Philippine independence, submits a substitute which would provide for absolute and complete independence within a period of 2 or 3 years. He has limited his program only by the time which is necessary to create the essential machinery of the new government.

That is one program for getting out.

I shall submit the other program for getting out, Mr. President; and it is in substantial agreement with the philosophy which is found in the bill submitted by the Senator from Utah, except that I feel that we owe these erstwhile wards of ours a post-independence period of economic readjustment so that they may hope to have the largest possible measure of a chance permanently to succeed in the readjustment of their economic situation. This economic factor is vital to the success of this entire new governmental adventure.

The economic situation is at the bottom of political stability these days. That is evidenced all around this globe. I submit a substitute under which we get out with the least possible delay—I should hope that it would be, at a maximum, 2½ or 3 years—but under which, after we are out, and the Philippine flag is up and our is down, and there is no twilight zone of uncertainty involved, they shall have a 10-year period of subsequent post-independence opportunity to prepare for the time when they must wholly surrender our free American market. I would have them surrender it by progressive stages rather than by summary loss.

There are the two methods by which, in a clean-cut fashion, we can get out.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Is the Senator stating it to be his bill that will result in our staying there 10 years? I did not understand that to be the Senator's bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; the Senator misunderstands me. Under my substitute we retire at the earliest possible moment. Their independent government immediately takes full sovereignty over their situation; but we give them a post-independence period during which, instead of summarily chopping off the free American market, we do it by 2-year stages, so as to permit them to accommodate themselves to their new economic situation in the world.

Mr. LONG. The King bill does not undertake to postpone their independence 12 years. It frees them in 3 years; does it not?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The King bill and the Vandenberg substitute both free them at the earliest possible moment. The difference between the two is that the King substitute provides no subsequent period of economic readjustment.

Mr. LONG. That is why I was hoping we could go to the bat on the King bill, because what we ought to do is to get out of there. I do not see much difference between the proposal of the Senator from Michigan and the other one.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is not a great deal, except in the philosophy.

Mr. LONG. We ought to go to bat on the King bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. We will go to bat—as the Senator says—on both of them, I hope, before the afternoon is over; and I shall not keep the Senate from that show-down more than a few moments.

Here is the opportunity, Mr. President, to get out. If the Senate wants to get out completely, summarily, and without any delay or commitment whatsoever, it can take the King bill. Those who share the anxiety that we get out summarily, quickly, effectively, and yet feel a post-independence responsibility during this period of economic readjustment, can align themselves under my substitute. The point I make is that in either of these instances the Senate will be following a clean-cut, clearly defined policy which lacks any doubtful shadows, and which involves no doubtful implications.

But what is the situation in respect to the Tydings-McDuffie bill, using the title which camouflages the Hayes-Hare-Cutting bill? What do we do under the pending measure? I repeat that we neither stay in nor get out; but during a period which may run from 12 to an indefinite number of years we have all the responsibility for what happens in that far Pacific outpost, and we lack all of the essential authority with which we ought to be clothed whenever we accept a responsibility of that magnitude and that hazard, at any spot or place on earth.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. What authority will we have under the Senator's proposal which we will not have under the pending bill?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall be very glad to go into that question immediately. First, let me deal with the time element, because the two propositions are linked.

Under the pending measure, for which the Senator from Maryland speaks, there will be a constitutional convention not later than October 1. Let us set that date down, then, as a starting post—October 1, 1934. That is when the contemplated system starts to work. Within 2 years the native constitutional convention must submit its constitution to the President. Let us assume that the 2 years are consumed in that process. That brings us to our next fixed date on October 1, 1936, although, mark you, this constitution which they adopt can travel back and forth, back and forth between the Philippine Islands and the White House, until the President and the native constitutional convention shall have agreed that the contemplated constitution fully fits the specifications set down in the first few pages of the bill. If delays ultimately are sought, here is an ideal opportunity to encourage them. I am not going to make a point of that, although I can readily contemplate at that point a substantial postponement of the time when this constitutional process does reach its next fixed focus.

For the sake of the argument, however, let us say that it is done by October 1, 1936. Then 4 months later they have an election. That is February 1, 1937. Then there is a 30-day proclamation of the net result of the election, and that is March 1, 1937. Then they have an election of officers under this new constitution, which occurs within from 3 to 6 months, so that this next fixed date probably becomes September 1, 1937. Then they have 10 years of twilight-zone experimentation in which this native commonwealth exists in the nature of a sort of synthetic republic, for which we have an ultimate responsibility, but, as I shall presently indicate in detail, for which we have no opportunity to forefend the disaster which might come to us if the synthetic experiment goes wrong through native misjudgments or native maladministration. In the language of the street, Uncle Sam holds the bag.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President—

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator now point out in what respect we will have more authority under the Senator's bill than under the pending measure?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes. We have not this thing fully set up yet, however. First, let us get it set up.

Now, we are down to September 1, 1947; and I do not see how it could be a minute earlier. As I have indicated, it might be many years later.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to get away from my original question; but let me say that plans are now in motion, as soon as this bill is passed, to call the Philippine Legislature within 60 days, and by 90 days from the date of the passage of the bill here it will have been accepted by the Filipino people, and the constitutional convention will be held this year; and instead of 1937, the year pictured by the Senator from Michigan, all the indications are that there will be an actual carrying into effect of this entire act before the expiration of the year 1934. There is no reason in the world why that should not be done.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, it is absolutely physically impossible, under the terms of the bill and its own mathematics, to get a complete accomplishment by the end of 1934. The Senator is not disagreeing with me in respect to this immediate constitutional convention which is going to be held. I have given him the date of October 1, 1934, this year, for that particular accomplishment; but then he still has to go through all the subsequent process, and I submit that if he will sharpen his pencil and study the mathematics involved, he will finally come to the conclusion that we shall be exceedingly fortunate if this accumulated adventure reaches its focus by September 1, 1947. Then, under the terms of the bill, the independent government becomes effective on the following 4th of July, and we have reached July 4, 1948. That is 14 years away.

The Senator has been so persuasive, as I undertook to point out when, I am sorry to say, he was absent from the Chamber; he has been such an amazing magician in composing all of the previous rival factional influences which heretofore have prohibited agreement in this area, that perhaps with a continuation of his persuasive diplomacy this date of 1948 might be shaved a little in the course of the years. But, in any event, we are contemplating a program which reaches well beyond a decade.

Mr. President, what happens during all of this intervening period? During that period we set up this commonwealth in the Philippine Islands, which is autonomous in practically every aspect of its operations. The President of the United States has authority to intervene in respect to any doubtful legislation which might be developed under the commonwealth only in the event that it involves the fulfillment of some contract or the fiscal responsibility which is involved in their governmental situation, or if some violation of the international obligations of the United States is contemplated. Those are the only points at which our residuary authority remains. That is a very limited field, and within that field are not embraced scores and scores of frictional problems which will have to be settled upon native responsibility, and which, having been settled upon native responsibility, may well lead to untoward implications in that tinder-laden section of this troubled old world. If, in the ultimate outcome of the use of their own power and their own judgment the people do reach an impasse where difficulty breaks upon them, either internal or external, then, after the trouble is here, poor old Uncle Sam gets the S.O.S., and he has to travel back those 10,000 miles across the Pacific to set the house in order. He cannot prevent the trouble. He can only police it after it comes to a crisis. And then he must act whether he wishes or not.

The thing against which I complain now, as I did when the Hawes-Cutting bill was pending before, is that the United States should be thus left with responsibility anywhere in this world without the fully equivalent authority to defend that responsibility against untoward developments and to defend it every minute of its life.

What becomes of the Governor General of the Philippine Islands? For the next 2 or 3 years of transition he has a tremendously important job as he guides the creation of the new commonwealth. But thereafter under the pending bill he becomes the United States High Commissioner. He keeps the salary, but that is about all he keeps. He no longer lives at Malacanang, the native palace, where a residence traditionally represents the symbol of supreme authority in the islands.

The High Commissioner of the United States is not living at that point during this subsequent 12 or 14 or 16 years of twilight zone government. He is just a high commissioner, who is entitled to have access to all records of the Government, but I do not know what he can do with the information after he gets it, because he is nothing but a sublimated observer acting in behalf of the President of the United States. The only point at which he has any affirmative responsibility is at the point where the Philippine Commonwealth may fail to pay some of its bonded indebtedness. He guards the bondholders, but he can guard little else.

Mr. President, this remnant of power which stays with the United States during this period of serious responsibility is utterly inadequate to implement the responsibility which we have to carry. I repeat, our flag is neither up nor down; it is sort of half-masted, and that is not a happy status for the American flag at any stage or point. It is symbolical of the fact that our authority also is half-masted, although our responsibility remains 100 percent upon us. It seems to me that it is an insufferable paradox. Even the most constant and expert vigilance often finds it difficult to steer a course in this turbulent sector of the world which avoids friction and clash. Yet we propose to put ourselves at the mercy of a proxy who can precipitate the friction and the clash, and we underwrite the consequences.

Mr. President, I think it bad business for the United States to have any such equivocal situation upon its hands in the Far East. I think it is an invitation to complication and danger and disaster. I do not intend to explore that subject in specific detail; it could serve no useful purpose. But every Member of the Senate with any imagination whatsoever knows precisely what it is I mean. I think the pending bill is the wrong formula.

Mr. President, let me say this in conclusion. Let there be no mistake about my attitude respecting the Philippine Islands. It is an attitude of complete sympathy with the independence aspirations of the Filipino people. I believe the American Congress and the American people are under absolute and compelling moral obligation to give them their independence at the first moment when they are competent to maintain their own social, political, and economic structure.

No matter how emotionally appealing their political independence may be, however, it is a counterfeit luxury; it is the shadow rather than the substance, if economic independence and economic self-sufficiency are lacking. It is economic instability which is bringing the oldest and most solidly established nations to their knees today in the travail of immense grief. It is this economic factor which always gives me chief pause when I look ahead to the independent future of these islands.

The Filipino people have my profound best wishes. They have my prayers. They have my admiration for their courageous optimism. They have my benediction for the amazing progress which they have made during 30 years of beneficent American tutelage. I shall not cloud their present independence dreams with any expression of ominous fears. Yet I shall do less than justice to my own convictions if I do not state again for the Record, as I have stated many times before, that economic dangers do lurk along the pathway which they have elected to pursue; and the ultimate safety and stability of their aspirations depend entirely upon the economic genius—indeed, upon a larger economic genius than the rest of the world has been able to evolve up to this time—the economic genius with which they are able to vitalize their separate and independent status.

It is for these reasons that I opposed the first Hawes-Cutting bill and offered a substitute which contemplated a long-range period of final preindependence preparation, believing that this concluding era of preparation would spell the surest chance for a permanently successful Philippine republic when finally launched, believing equally that it would most honorably and adequately discharge our final responsibility as benevolent trustees for these island wards.

Mr. President, that alternative has been so emphatically rejected, both there and here, that it lacks any semblance of hospitality either in the Philippines or in the United States. Therefore, I am driven to the only alternative which is supported by clean-cut consistency.

If we shall not stay in, we must get out as speedily as possible. If we shall shed the authority of guidance during the next decade, we should correspondingly shed the responsibility for what happens if and when self-guidance fails. That is an obligation which we owe to our own citizens of our own United States. Nor can we rightfully ignore this obligation to our own people, particularly at a moment when this far eastern sphere, as I have said before, is the tinder box of the universe.

If this contemplated quasi-independent Commonwealth is competent to assume the well-nigh supreme responsibilities which this legislation promises, then it is competent to run up the free flag of the independent Philippine republic, not 10 or 15 years hence but in 1 or 2 years, as soon as the governmental structure for the Commonwealth can be erected.

If this stop-gap Commonwealth is not competent to assume these responsibilities, then, in my view, the American Congress has no business permitting such a hazardous experiment to proceed under our own flag, and with our own Government answerable for the possibility of untoward events which we are powerless to forestall.

The pending measure creates an immediate synthetic republic; turns it substantially loose in the most treacherous and hazardous zone on earth, at the most unsettled economic moment in modern history; abandons most of the effective American authority for the control of its destiny; but retains to us, as residuary legatees, the ultimate responsibility for what shall happen.

We neither stay in nor get out.

Since the whole trend of thought appears to favor the latter rather than the former philosophy of action, it is my profound conviction that we should cut free from all half-way measures; that we should abjure these hazy interims; and that we should launch the new republic in full reality. Let eventualities occur under their flag and upon their responsibility, not under our flag and upon our responsibility.

Then, in my view, and as proposed by my substitute, let us give the Filipinos a post-independence period of economic readjustment, particularly in respect to our markets and our tariffs, so that their economic hazard may be minimized so far as humanly possible. Thus we should give the new republic its most favorable auspices to weather these economic storms which fling disaster upon the balance of the world; we should give it the final measure of proof of our benevolent interest in its welfare; and we should save the American people harmless in respect to all eventualities.

If I am not mistaken, this is the precise program which General Aguinaldo and his veterans have urged for years.

I repeat that I have no illusions about the temper of the Senate upon this proposition. The pending bill will pass. Its original authors and the authors of this present paraphrase are moved by the highest motives. They are no less concerned than I am for the welfare of the United States and of the Philippines. The able Senator from Maryland, the new Chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, has labored notably and well in composing the native differences which heretofore have rocked this legislation with controversy. The native leaders themselves are to be highly commended for finally merging their views into one common mold. The able Governor General, who comes from my home State, has exercised a fine and wholesome and sympathetic influence in this behalf. I pray that all these auguries may vindicate themselves in a wholly successful and happy adventure, devoid of fateful vicissitudes. The Commonwealth of the Philippines, and then the Philippine Republic, has no warmer friend than I. But I would be less than faithful to this friendship and to my responsibility as an American Senator if I did not dissent to the last from a prospectus which I believe to be a mistake.

Mr. President, I now offer the amendment in the nature of a substitute concerning which I have been speaking. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks, and that the reading thereof be waived, because my explanation fully covers the structure and philosophy of the proposition, and I am quite content to have it submitted to a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACHMAN in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. VANDENBERG's amendment in the nature of a substitute is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

CONSTITUTION FOR INDEPENDENT GOVERNMENT OF PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

SECTION 1. The Philippine Legislature is hereby authorized to formulate and draft a constitution for an independent government of the Philippine Islands, subject to the conditions and qualifications prescribed in this act, which shall exercise jurisdiction over all the territory ceded to the United States by the treaty of peace concluded between the United States and Spain on the 10th day of December 1898, the boundaries of which are set forth in article III of said treaty, together with those islands embraced in the treaty between Spain and the United States concluded at Washington on the 7th day of November 1900 excluding, however, such territory, if any, of the said islands as may be reserved or excepted therefrom pursuant to subsequent provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. Any constitution for an independent government of the Philippine Islands that may be formulated and drafted pursuant to this act shall include provisions to the following effect:

(1) That the government of the Philippine Islands recognizes the exclusive sovereignty, jurisdiction, and control of the United States over any territory, if any, withdrawn from the present limits of the Philippine Islands and reserved to the United States by proclamation of the President of the United States, issued pursuant to the subsequent provisions of this act.

(2) That the government of the Philippine Islands recognizes as the property of the United States, reserved exclusively for its purposes and uses, all immovable property of the United States, set forth and indicated for retention, by the United States, in any proclamation of the President of the United States if issued under subsequent provisions of this act.

(3) That the government of the Philippine Islands recognizes as its own all debts and obligations, direct and indirect, contracted by the Philippine government, its provinces, municipalities, and instrumentalities, while under the sovereignty of the United States.

(4) That all acts of the United States in the Philippine Islands during the exercise of its sovereignty over these islands are ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected.

(5) That the property rights of the United States in the Philippine Islands shall be fully acknowledged, respected, and safeguarded, and that any question that may be pending at the date when an independent government of the Philippine Islands may be established, or that may thereafter arise, regarding the respective property rights of the United States and the Philippine Islands shall be promptly adjusted and settled.

(6) That all existing property rights of citizens or corporations of the United States, and all such rights as may hereafter lawfully be acquired by them, shall be acknowledged, respected, and safeguarded to the same extent as property rights of citizens of the Philippine Islands.

(7) That all continuing obligations assumed by the United States under the treaty of peace with Spain ceding said Philippine Islands to the United States are assumed by the independent government of the Philippine Islands and will be duly discharged by the same.

(8) That the government of the Philippine Islands assumes all obligations, direct or indirect, of the United States, contracted while the United States exercised sovereignty over the Philippine Islands, to citizens of the Philippine Islands by way of pensions, retirement pay, and other similar benefits to which such citizens may be entitled on account of claims for service rendered to the government of the Philippine Islands and that may not have been definitely allowed or rejected prior to the withdrawal of United States sovereignty from the Philippine Islands, and also on account of compensation or other benefits, based upon claims allowed prior to such withdrawal and pertaining to any period subsequent to such withdrawal: Provided, That the government of the Philippine Islands may make such equitable readjustment, of general application, of the amounts payable by it on account of the assumption of such obligations as the different standards of service compensation and living conditions in the Philippine Islands may justify: And provided further, That service of citizens of the Philippine Islands to the government of the Philippine Islands, during the period of United States sovereignty in the Philippine Islands, shall be reckoned as service to any independent government of the Philippine Islands that may be established pursuant to this act, insofar as regards the application of the pension, retirement, or similar laws that may be in effect at the time of the establishment of any such independent government of the Philippine Islands or that may be enacted thereafter by such government.

(9) That the debts and liabilities of the Philippine Islands, its Provinces, cities, municipalities, and instrumentalities, which shall be valid and subsisting at the time of the final and complete withdrawal of the sovereignty of the United States from the Philippine Islands, shall be assumed by the free and independent government of the Philippine Islands; and that where bonds have been issued, under authority of an act of Congress of the United States, by the Philippine Islands, or any Province, city, or municipality therein, and where, under authority of an act of Congress of the United States, the government of the Philippine Islands has guaranteed the payment of interest or of principal, or of both interest and principal, on bonds of corporations, the Philippine government will make adequate provision for the necessary funds for the payment of interest and principal, and such obligations shall be a first lien on the taxes collected in the Philippine Islands.

(10) That the officials elected as provided for in section 4 of this act shall be constitutional officers of the free and independent government of the Philippine Islands and qualified to function in all respects as if elected directly under such government, and shall serve their full terms of office as prescribed in the constitution.

(11) That trade relations between the United States and the free and independent government of the Philippine Islands shall be upon the basis prescribed in sections 6, 7, 8, and 9.

(12) That by way of further assurance the government of the Philippine Islands will embody the foregoing provisions of this section, except subsection (10), in a treaty with the United States.

SUBMISSION OF CONSTITUTION TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

SEC. 3. Upon the drafting and approval of the constitution by the Philippine Legislature, the constitution shall be submitted within 2 years after the enactment of this act to the President of the United States, who shall determine whether or not it conforms with the provisions of this act. If the President finds that the proposed constitution conforms substantially with the provisions of this act, he shall so certify to the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, who shall so advise the Philippine Legislature. If the President finds that the constitution does not conform with the provisions of this act, he shall so advise the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, stating wherein in his judgment the constitution does not so conform and submitting provisions which will, in his judgment, make the constitution so conform. The Governor General shall in turn submit such message to the Philippine Legislature for further action by them pursuant to the same procedure hereinbefore defined, until the President and the Philippine Legislature are in agreement.

SUBMISSION OF CONSTITUTION TO FILIPINO PEOPLE

SEC. 4. After the President of the United States has certified that the constitution conforms with the provisions of this act, it shall be submitted to the people of the Philippine Islands for their ratification or rejection at an election to be held within 4 months after the date of such certification, on a date to be fixed by the Philippine Legislature, at which election the qualified voters of the Philippine Islands shall have an opportunity to vote directly for or against the proposed constitution and ordinances appended thereto. Such election shall be held in such manner as may be prescribed by the Philippine Legislature, to which the return of the election shall be made. The Philippine Legislature shall by law provide for the canvassing of the return and shall certify the result to the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, together with a statement of the votes cast thereon, and a copy of said constitution and ordinances. If a majority of the votes cast shall be for the constitution, the Governor General shall, within 80 days after receipt of the certification from the Philippine Legislature, issue a proclamation for the election of officers of the government of the Philippine Islands provided for in the constitution. The election shall take place not earlier than 3 months nor later than 6 months after the proclamation by the Governor General ordering such election. When the election of the officers provided for under the constitution has been held and the results determined, the Governor General of the Philippine Islands shall certify the results of the election to the President of the United States. The President of the United States shall thereupon issue a proclamation fixing a date, not more than 6 months after the date of such proclamation, for the complete withdrawal of American sovereignty over the Philippine Islands. Upon the date so fixed the previously existing Philippine government shall terminate and the new government shall enter upon its rights, privileges, powers, and duties as provided in the constitution. The existing government of the Philippine Islands, subject to the direction of the President of the United States, shall provide for the orderly transfer of the functions of government.

If a majority of the votes cast are against the constitution, the existing government of the Philippine Islands shall continue without regard to the provisions of this act.

TRADE RELATIONS

SEC. 5. (a) Effective 90 days after the date of enactment of this act, and until the date of Philippine independence, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles coming into the United States from the Philippine Islands 10 percent of the rates of duty which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported into the United States from foreign countries.

(b) The Philippine Legislature is empowered, concurrently with the effective date of such duties, to impose upon articles going into the Philippine Islands from the United States 10 percent of the rates of duty imposed upon like articles imported into the Philippine Islands from foreign countries.

SEC. 6. (a) During the first 2 years after the Philippine Islands become independent, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported into the United States from the Philippine Islands 20 percent of the rates of duty which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles into the United States from other foreign countries.

(b) The Philippine government is empowered, concurrently with the effective date of the increase in tariff duties provided in subdivision (a), to increase the tariff duties imposed upon articles imported into the Philippine Islands from the United States to 20 percent of the rates of duty imposed upon like articles imported into the Philippine Islands from other foreign countries.

Sec. 7. (a) During the third and fourth years after the Philippine Islands become independent, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported into the United States from the Philippine Islands 40 percent of the rates of duty which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported into the United States from other foreign countries.

(b) The Philippine government is empowered, concurrently with the effective date of the increase in tariff duties provided in subdivision (a), to increase the tariff duties imposed upon articles imported into the Philippine Islands from the United States to 40 percent of the rates of duty imposed upon like articles imported into the Philippine Islands from other foreign countries.

Sec. 8. (a) During the fifth and sixth years after the Philippine Islands become independent, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported into the United States from the Philippine Islands 60 percent of the rates of duty which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported into the United States from other foreign countries.

(b) The Philippine government is empowered, concurrently with the effective date of the increase in tariff duties provided in subdivision (a), to increase the tariff duties imposed upon articles imported into the Philippine Islands from the United States to 60 percent of the rates of duty imposed upon like articles imported into the Philippine Islands from other foreign countries.

Sec. 9. (a) During the seventh and eighth years after the Philippine Islands become independent, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported into the United States from the Philippine Islands 80 percent of the rates of duty which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported into the United States from other foreign countries.

(b) The Philippine government is empowered, concurrently with the effective date of the increase in tariff duties provided in subdivision (a), to increase the tariff duties imposed upon articles imported into the Philippine Islands from the United States to 80 percent of the rates of duty imposed upon like articles imported into the Philippine Islands from other foreign countries.

(c) At any time during the seventh and eighth years after the Philippine Islands become independent, the President of the United States is authorized to enter into negotiations with the government of the Philippine Islands with a view to the conclusion of a reciprocal treaty based upon a permanent 20-percent preferential in tariff duties between the United States and the Philippine Islands.

IMMIGRATION

Sec. 10. (a) Effective 90 days after the date of enactment of this act—

(1) For the purposes of the Immigration Act of 1917, the Immigration Act of 1924 (except sec. 13 (c)), this section, and all other laws of the United States relating to the immigration, exclusion, or expulsion of aliens, citizens of the Philippine Islands who are not citizens of the United States shall be considered as if they were aliens. For such purposes the Philippine Islands shall be considered as a separate country and shall have for each fiscal year a quota of —. This paragraph shall not apply to a person coming or seeking to come to the Territory of Hawaii who does not apply for and secure an immigration or passport visa, but such immigration shall be determined by the Department of the Interior on the basis of the needs of industries in the Territory of Hawaii.

(2) Citizens of the Philippine Islands who are not citizens of the United States shall not be admitted to the continental United States from the Territory of Hawaii—whether entering such Territory before or after the effective date of this section—unless they belong to a class declared to be nonimmigrants by section 3 of the Immigration Act of 1924 or to a class declared to be nonquota immigrants under the provisions of section 4 of such act other than subdivision (c) thereof, or unless they were admitted to such Territory under an immigration visa. The Secretary of Labor shall by regulation provide a method of such exclusion and for the admission of such excepted classes.

(3) Any Foreign Service officer may be assigned to duty in the Philippine Islands, under a commission as a consular officer, for such period as may be necessary and under such regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe, during which assignment such officer shall be considered as stationed in a foreign country; but his powers and duties shall be confined to the performance of such of the official acts and notarial and other services, which such officer might properly perform in respect of the administration of the immigration laws if assigned to a foreign country as a consular officer, as may be authorized by the Secretary of State.

(4) For the purposes of sections 18 and 20 of the Immigration Act of 1917, as amended, the Philippine Islands shall be considered to be a foreign country.

(b) The provisions of this section are in addition to the provisions of the immigration laws now in force, and shall be enforced as a part of such laws, and all the penal or other provisions of such laws, not inapplicable, shall apply to and be enforced in connection with the provisions of this section. An alien, although admissible under the provisions of this section, shall not be admitted to the United States if he is excluded by any provision of the immigration laws other than this section, and an alien, although admissible under the provisions of the immigration laws other than this section, shall not be admitted to the United States if he is excluded by any provision of this section.

(c) Terms defined in the Immigration Act of 1924 shall, when used in this section, have the meaning assigned to such terms in that act.

Sec. 11. Upon the final and complete withdrawal of American sovereignty over the Philippine Islands the immigration laws of the United States, including all the provisions thereof relating to persons ineligible to citizenship, shall apply to persons who were born in the Philippine Islands to the same extent as in the case of other foreign countries.

NEUTRALIZATION OF PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

Sec. 12. The President is requested, at the earliest practicable date, to enter into negotiations with foreign powers with a view to the conclusion of a treaty for the perpetual neutralization of the Philippine Islands, if and when Philippine independence shall have been achieved.

EFFECTIVE DATE

Sec. 13. This act shall not take effect until accepted by the Philippine Legislature; except that sections 5 and 10 shall take effect as specified in such sections, respectively.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, before the Senator yields the floor I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Missouri for a question.

Mr. CLARK. Unfortunately I was not able to hear the whole of the Senator's speech because I was obliged to be absent in a meeting of the Committee on Finance. Will the Senator from Michigan state briefly—I do not want him to enter into a discussion of the matter—the difference between his substitute and that proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I can do that, Mr. President, in two sentences. I have already done it in detail in the Senator's absence. The Senator from Utah proposes immediate, absolute, and complete independence at the earliest moment possible under the necessities of creating the new native government, which, for the sake of the argument, would be, let us say, 2 or 3 years.

The substitute which I have presented, and which is now pending, does precisely that same thing so far as the establishment of this new government is concerned, but then creates a subsequent, post-independence economic period of readjustment, during which time, instead of summarily losing our free markets the Filipinos would lose our free markets in a constantly increasing degree, my purpose being, after having created immediate independence, precisely as would the Senator from Utah, subsequent thereto to give this new government its maximum chance to readjust itself economically in respect to the markets of the world.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall not take very long, but I think a word in answer should be made to the remarks of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. First let me say that I do not question his absolute sincerity nor his desire to assist the Philippine people in this very adventurous undertaking. But I think I can bring some facts to the Senate in a few moments which will clearly illustrate the fallacy of the program which the Senator from Michigan espouses.

In the very bill which is now pending before the Senate we have written limitations upon the quantity of sugar, the quantity of cordage, and the quantity of coconut oil less than what the Philippine people are now shipping into this country. As a matter of candor and honesty, I think that is wrong. The Philippine Islands are a part of this country, perhaps a temporary part, but a part of it, and we should write no limitation whatsoever upon the volume of their exports to this country until their independence shall have become an accomplished fact.

All Senators who sat in the Senate in the last Congress remember the sugar fight. I voted against cutting down the quantity of sugar which the Philippine people could export to this country, deeming it an outrage to turn the Philippine people loose in all the changing economic conditions in which we are now living, and ask them to embrace independence without an opportunity to find a new market for the commodities they are now producing.

But did that proposition receive the support of this body? No. An amendment was offered to cut down their sugar exports to one half the quantity they are now shipping to this country, and that amendment was agreed to by the Senate.

Where would the Senator's proposition be after the Philippine people had achieved their independence, were we to allow them, as he says is his idea, to export commodities to this country without regard to our tariff? What would Congress do when the islands were no longer under the American flag? If we cut down the amount of sugar and coconut oil and cordage which they may send into this country while they are a part of this country, God knows there would not be a pound of it coming in the minute after they had achieved their own independence.

We have the force of actual example to substantiate what I say. At the other end of this Capitol building there is pending today a bill to cut down the sugar exportations from the Philippines to the United States, and because independence is imminent are we approaching that proposition in a spirit of fairness and justice? Oh, no. The idea is to drive the Philippine exportation of sugar down to the minimum, to cut it all out forsooth, if Congress will support such a measure, in order that the greedy sugar interests of this country may usurp the entire market, while 14,000,000 people in the Philippine Islands are thrown into economic chaos.

Mr. President, if the amendment of the Senator from Michigan is adopted by Congress there is not a doubt in the world that no sooner will the 3-year period have elapsed than Congress will whittle at the commerce which now comes from the Philippine Islands, and will throw the Philippine people into economic revolution, and mob violence, in my opinion, will break out, which will result in our having to send the Army back there again, and it will be 20 or 25 years before they will have another opportunity to get independence.

It is not easy to start a new government. If we go back in the history of our own country to the period after the Revolutionary War we will find that it was a long while before we got our sea legs so we could walk in the society of nations. A period of many years went by. Our own Constitution was under consideration for 4 months before it was agreed upon. And even then we had bills for which there was no money to offer in payment. It was only after a long time that we laid the foundations of this Republic. Therefore, the 10-year period is fair to the Filipino people. In that time they can make the necessary readjustment. To turn them loose overnight would be to deny them independence, because we would have to go back there again if we should turn them loose before they are able to walk under the load. If that time shall prove too long, if they shall progress faster than we have anticipated, we can always cut down that time to 9 years, to 8 years, to 7 years, to 6 years, or to 5 years; but if we should fix the time at 3 years, and that should prove to be too short, we could not extend the time. The Army would be called in as the arbiter of that situation.

I revert, in conclusion, once more to the proposition of the Senator from Michigan. If, while the Philippine nation is a part of the United States of America, is under its flag and under allegiance to its flag, subject to the laws of its Congress, the Congress will not give it a square deal in its economic relations with continental United States, in God's name, what would we do to those people when no longer they were a part of this Republic? If at this time we will not allow them to ship their fair quantities of sugar, their fair quantities of cordage, their fair quantities of coconut oil, while they are under our flag, where would they be, I ask the Senator from Michigan, when our flag was no longer in the Philippines after the 3-year period? What good would the law be? Congress would repeal it and throw out of order their entire commerce and, in my opinion, plunge them into a bloody revolution, which would fire the entire Orient once more.

No, Senators, in the actual test of experience we have already violated the theory which the Senator from Michigan espouses in his bill. Having had the actual test of performance before us, let us give the Philippine people a chance to become a republic and not let them go until our duty to them shall be fulfilled 100 percent. Then we shall have done something of which to be proud, and our relations with them will remain friendly in the future.

DISTRIBUTION OF WEALTH

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have here a resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi. I read in the newspapers that this resolution had passed the senate of that State. It was sent to me this morning, and I presume it has passed the house of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi. I am going to send it to the desk, and I ask that the clerk may read it, as I was requested to put it in the RECORD by the author of the resolution. I showed the resolution to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who took no exception to my offering it instead of he, himself, doing so. Therefore I will ask the clerk to read the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 39

A concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to put into effect the policy of Hon. HUEY P. LONG pertaining to the distribution of the wealth of the United States

Whereas the greatest financial depression the country has ever known and that has ever been undergone by the masses of the people is being undergone by them now; and

Whereas the wealth through speculation and other ways has gotten into the hands of a few people, thereby impoverishing the honest, toiling masses, who have on account of the accumulation of the wealth by a few been thrown out of employment in a land of plenty and to spare, which is causing them to suffer for the necessities to sustain life; and

Whereas the Honorable HUEY P. LONG, United States Senator, has suggested that laws be enacted placing a high income tax and inheritance tax on a speculator of big-moneyed interest so as to get the wealth of the country back into the hands of the suffering masses and relieving the financial situation under which they are being so much depressed; and

Whereas the Book of Books teaches us that the earth belongs to the Lord and the fullness thereof, and, therefore, it does not belong to the few who have acquired it through speculation and thievery, and it should revert back to the masses for which it was intended, and be used by them in the way that the Lord intended for it to be used: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Mississippi (the house of representatives concurring therein), That we do hereby endorse the plan suggested by the Honorable HUEY P. LONG, or some other plan that will get the wealth of our country redistributed into the hands of the honest, toiling masses for whom it is intended.

We further ask that a copy of this resolution be forwarded by the secretary of state to the Members of Congress from the State of Mississippi and a copy be mailed to the Honorable HUEY P. LONG with instructions for him to place the same in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as I have said, I just received that document, and I have only outside information of its adoption. I presume, however, it has gone through the senate and house of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi.

I have also been sent this morning a few lines from the poet Milton, which I wish to read in order that it may be incorporated in the RECORD. The lines are taken from John Milton's Comus. I read as follows:

[From John Milton's Comus (lines 768-780)]

If every just man that pines with want
Had but a moderate and beseming share
Of that which lewdly pamper'd Luxury
Now heaps upon some few with vast excess,
Nature's full blessings would be well dispensed
In unsuperfluous even proportion
And she no whit encumber'd with her store;
And then the Giver would be better thank'd,
His praise due paid: For swinish Gluttony
Ne'er looks to Heaven amidst his gorgeous feast,
But with besotted base ingratitude
Crams, and blasphemes his feeder.

I have before me further, Mr. President, an article which has been handed to me by the Senator from the State of Washington [Mr. Bone], taken from the New York World Telegram of the 19th day of March 1934, under the heading "The Liberal Viewpoint", by Dr. Harry Elmer Barnes, which I will ask to have printed in full in the RECORD. I will just quote a few excerpts before sending it to the desk.

I read as follows:

There is only one sensible way in which to meet the majority of the burden imposed by the financing of recovery. This is taxation, literally on the basis of capacity to pay.

The very wealthy did not divide up fairly from 1921 to 1929.

And I might add that they did not divide up fairly for many years prior to that time.

By thus reducing purchasing power they brought about a collapse of our business in 1929. Today restoration of prosperity, if possible at all, can only be achieved by taking this unfairly appropriated money away from its holders and devoting it to the national weal. The essentials of a rational program of taxation for the administration are clearly presented by Prof. Henry R. Mussey in The Nation.

So far as possible desirable increase of taxation should fall upon personal income. Taxes on business are, to a great degree, shifted to consumers by raising the prices of products. They may also to a slight extent discourage business initiative.

The first step to be taken is to stop up the gaps in the income-tax fence.

I hope Senators will notice the figures which are given in the article as to what ought to be the limit on incomes, and it will be seen that what I have proposed is conservative by comparison.

Next, the income tax law should be revised so as to fall especially heavy upon the higher brackets. Indeed, surtaxes might well be slapped on which would automatically absorb and turn back to the Government all income over $100,000 a year.

This article in the New York World Telegram says that after $100,000 a year a man ought to be prevented from receiving further income. I am personally of the belief that the figure is nearer right than the figure I have set. The figure I have set and which I have been trying to get adopted by the Senate has been a million dollars a year. Manifestly that is too much, and yet that has been opposed by party leaders and by men in authority on the ground that that will impose too great a restriction upon people, whereas conservative writers say that $100,000 a year should be the maximum income to any one man.

Under the conditions in which we now live a greater income than this cannot be socially justified.

I am inclined to believe that the writer is correct, that an income of more than $100,000 to one man, while millions of people walk the streets and starve to death in a land that has got too much in it is wrong, and to allow people under these conditions to hoard up more than $100,000 a year is outside all social justification.

Next—

Says this article—

the inheritance and estate taxes should also be stiffened up and tightened so as to bring about the public appropriation of all inheritances, monetary and in real property, in excess of two or three million dollars.

Again, Mr. President, this article is far more drastic than my proposal. I propose that we limit inheritances to $5,000,000. Manifestly, that is too much, and $2,000,000 is also too much, in my opinion, so far as that is concerned. The resolution which I have proposed, however, and the bill of which I undertook to secure the enactment allow $5,000,000, whereas, as this article says, we ought not to allow more than two or three million dollars to be inherited by some idle son or daughter, money which they themselves never hit a lick of work to earn, as a result of which wealth has been put into the hands of a few people, while thousands, nay millions, of people are starving to death.

Almost any "poor little rich child" should be able to stagger along through life with such a benefaction from his parents or rich relatives.

In short, a rational taxation scheme would not only be a fiscal expedient; it would be an instrument for achieving social justice. It would serve the cause of equity. It would end the insane and disastrous struggle for fabulous individual riches. It would lead to a more sensible and effective distribution of purchasing power, thus increasing the market effectiveness of American consumers and stimulating a revival of capitalistic business endeavor.

I send the entire article to the desk and ask that it may be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, I have not called up at this time my resolution or bill, and I am not attempting to set aside any pending business in order to do so, but in the near future I will call up my resolution undertaking to commit the Senate to do something that is sane and sensible, to have the taxes paid where they can be paid without burden to the people and to have relief given to our people.

There is no such thing as a business revival such as we are hearing about. I just came back to Washington on the Crescent Limited, the main train of the Southern Railway System, composed of 10 coaches and carrying 22 passengers. I had almost an entire car to myself. The postal rates are declining. The Post Office Department is cutting down its rolls. C.W.A. workers are actually being laid off. Every kind of ballyhoo is going on to tell the people that things are going along all right, but the baby cannot be rocked to sleep when it is hungry. If we are going to do anything to restore America, it must be done along the lines of the resolution which I sent to the desk, or it must be done along the lines of the Declaration of Independence, which gave certain guaranties to the people when they first founded this Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ERICKSON in the chair). Without objection, the article referred to by the Senator from Louisiana will be printed in the RECORD.

The article is as follows:

[From the New York World Telegram of Mar. 19, 1934]

THE LIBERAL VIEWPOINT

By Dr. Harry Elmer Barnes

It is an old adage that "no chain is stronger than its weakest link." It seems pretty generally agreed, even among the friends of the new deal, that the weakest link in the Roosevelt program to date has been its taxation policy. Here there has been only a very slight modification indeed of the indefensible policies of Harding, Coolidge, Mellon, Hoover, and Mills.

This is made clear in an excellent brochure by Prof. Harold M. Groves, published by the New Republic. Professor Groves' services as tax consultant for the Government were rejected by Mr. Morgenthau, who replaced him by a more conservatively minded adviser.

The Roosevelt administration has been bold and adventurous enough in its proposals to spend money, even though there may be some criticism of its distribution of funds. Sooner or later the fiddler will have to be paid. There are a number of ways in which it can be done.

The Government can today print between twelve and fifteen billion dollars of paper money and still preserve the legal backing in gold. This would pay the bill for the first couple of years of the new deal, but it would allow those who have scooped up most of our national income to escape without making their just contribution to the financing of our efforts to escape from economic collapse.

Government bonds could be sold to the tune of many billions of dollars. But this would only postpone the evil day of settlement. It would add to the already top-heavy debt structure of the country, which many competent economists believe is already so great as to make impossible any successful rehabilitation of the capitalistic system.

There is only one sensible way in which to meet the majority of the burden imposed by the financing of recovery. This is taxation literally on the basis of capacity to pay.

The very wealthy did not divide up fairly from 1921 to 1929. By thus reducing purchasing power they brought about a collapse of our business in 1929. Today restoration of prosperity, if possible at all, can only be achieved by taking this unfairly appropriated money away from its holders and devoting it to the national weal. The essentials of a rational program of taxation for the administration are clearly presented by Prof. Henry R. Mussey in The Nation.

So far as possible, the desirable increase of taxation should fall upon personal income. Taxes on business are, to a great degree, shifted to consumers by raising the prices of products. They may also, to a slight extent, discourage business initiative.

Raising taxes on personal incomes ran contrary to the Coolidge-Mellon policy, and in the 5 years preceding the crash of 1929 less than a third of the total Federal revenue came from the personal income and estate taxes.

The first step to be taken is to stop up the gaps in the income-tax fence.

Next, the income tax law should be revised so as to fall especially heavily upon the higher brackets. Indeed, surtaxes might well be slapped on which would automatically absorb and turn back to the Government all income over $100,000 a year. Under the conditions in which we now live a greater income than this cannot be socially justified.

Next, the inheritance and estate taxes should also be stiffened up and tightened, so as to bring about the public appropriation of all inheritances, monetary and in real property, in excess of two to three million dollars. It would end the insane and disastrous struggle for fabulous individual riches. It would lead to a more sensible and effective distribution of purchasing power, thus increasing the market effectiveness of American consumers and stimulating a revival of capitalistic business endeavor.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McGill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6604) to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes; that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to said bill, requested a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. VINSON of Georgia, Mr. DREWRY, Mr. GAMBRILL, Mr. BRITTEN, and Mr. DARROW were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H.R. 3908) for the relief of Joanna A. Sheehan, and it was signed by the Vice President.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ERICKSON in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 8134, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U.S., March 20, 1934.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, and 32 to the bill (H.R. 8134) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment:

In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert: "but the amount so used for any one person shall not exceed the amount permitted by law to be so used, during the fiscal year 1935, for any one person in the foreign service of the Department of Commerce."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"Dutch elm disease: For control and prevention of spread of the Dutch elm disease in the United States, $150,000: Provided, That this sum shall be reduced by an amount equal to any amount that may hereafter be allotted for the purposes named herein from any Federal relief or other Federal emergency appropriations."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"Gypsy and brown-tail moths: For the control and prevention of spread of the gypsy and brown-tail moths, $360,000 of the sum allotted for this purpose for the fiscal year 1934 by the Public Works Administration shall be available only for expenditure during the fiscal year 1935."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$130,536."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$669,430."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$60,232,007."

Mr. RUSSELL. I move that the Senate agree to the House amendments to Senate amendments numbered 4, 25, 26, 27, 28, and 35.

The motion was agreed to.

REPEAL OF FEDERAL PROHIBITION LAWS IN HAWAII AND ALASKA

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2728) to repeal Federal liquor prohibition laws to the extent they are in force in the Territory of Hawaii, which was, on page 2, line 2, to strike out the word "are" where it appears the first time and insert "shall be retained."

He also laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2729) to repeal an act of Congress entitled "An act to prohibit the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes", approved February 14, 1917, and for other purposes, which were, on page 1, line 7, to strike out all after "909," down to and including "repealed" in line 1, page 2, and insert "is repealed. Title II of the National Prohibition Act, as amended and supplemented, and the act entitled 'An act to provide revenue by the taxation of certain nonintoxicating liquor, and for other purposes', approved March 22, 1933, except such provisions of such title and of such act of March 22, 1933, as shall be retained in force and effect in the States, are repealed to the extent such title and such act of March 22, 1933, are in force and effect in the Territory of Alaska"; and, on page 4, after line 13, to insert:

SEC. 5. Section 13 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 1, sec. 29) shall not apply with respect to any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under any provision repealed by this act.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the amendments of the House to the Hawaiian and Alaskan liquor bills have not been referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs of the Senate since the House adopted them, but I understand they are simply clarifying amendments recommended by the office of the Attorney General of the United States. Unless there is some disposition on the part of members of the committee to ask for a conference, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments to both bills.

The motion was agreed to.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. FESS obtained the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to take the floor away from the Senator; but I understand—I may be wrong—that all the speeches on the Vandenberg amendment have been made.

Mr. KING. I am going to speak.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Utah is going to speak on his own amendment; but if there are to be no more speeches on the Vandenberg amendment, I was wondering if the Senator from Ohio would let us dispose of this one amendment before he takes the floor, so that we could at least do that much today on the bill. I do not think it will take 5 minutes to dispose of the amendment. I do not believe there are any other speeches to be made on it.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator that I should prefer to speak on both amendments before a vote is taken upon the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, then I shall give way, except that the Philippine legislature expires, as the Senator knows, sometime in May or June, and I was hopeful that we could have this bill accepted by it before a new legislature shall be elected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think it would be very unfair and very unfortunate if this bill were to be submitted to a legislature which has heretofore been elected. If the proponents of this measure want the wishes of the Filipinos to be ascertained, they will accept an amendment which I shall tender, under the terms of which there will be a plebiscite, rather than submitting it to a legislature which perhaps is already discredited.

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope the Senator from Ohio will not feel that I am at all discourteous in asking these questions, because I realize the great interest he has in the subject he is about to discuss. May I inquire if he will occupy the rest of the afternoon?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, let me state to the Senator from Maryland that I am going to cooperate with him in securing action on the pending bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. The reason I ask the question—and I again apologize—is that I have this bill in charge, and yesterday I had to stay here all afternoon.

Mr. FESS. I want to assure the Senator that I am going to cooperate with him. I desire to make a statement which will not take over 3 minutes, and then I will give way.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well.

CANCELATION OF AIR-MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the afternoon press yesterday carried an item of news which is elaborated this morning in the Washington Post on the first page, in the leading column. The Post states:

Commercial aviation's anticipated return to the air-mail picture took tangible form for the first time yesterday since abrogation of mail contracts February 19 with private air lines authorized to carry mail in bulk and with the Army employing former airline pilots in increasing numbers.

Authorization for private lines to carry individually stamped and addressed mail in bulk as "express" was issued by the Post Office Department March 10, the day the Army flyers were grounded following President Roosevelt's denunciation of fatalities.

This was admitted by Department officials yesterday despite previous denial that such an authorization had been given and declarations that commercial lines were to be barred from participation in mail carrying of any kind until new air-mail legislation is enacted.

Meanwhile, Army air-mail headquarters reported 47 commercial pilots have been called into service to supplement the Army's experienced flyers in carrying the mail on restricted schedules put into effect when the corps resumed mail service Monday.

MAY USE ALL LINE PILOTS

Prior to the time the Army flyers were grounded and air-mail service resumed on an eight-route basis, Army pilots were used exclusively in mail operations, though a small number of commercial pilots who were Reserve officers were put on active status.

Army Air Corps officials here were uninformed as to the number of former airline pilots actually engaged in flying the mail, but it was understood that employment of the entire allotment was contemplated.

Authorization of mail carrying by commercial companies was described at the Post Office Department as "insignificant and routine", arising from repeated requests on the part of large mail-order houses for such service. W. W. Howes, who signed the authorization order as Acting Postmaster General in the absence of Postmaster General Farley, denied the action had any connection with restriction of the Army's mail operations.

Mr. President, I want to take the time today only to call attention to the significance of this dispatch, if it is true, and I assume that it is. The significance grows out of the fact that without its being known to the public, there was an order given not only for the employment of commercial pilots for the operation of planes, but also for the use of commercial aviation to carry mail marked "express" which, as every Senator knows, is unfair to the public, because it involves a double charge. The man who sends the mail pays the postage, and somebody must pay when it goes as express matter instead of mail matter. The payment of expressage does not obviate the payment of postage; and why, if the dispatch be true, this subterfuge is being used, would be interesting to all of us.

In the second place, I hope it is to be admitted without further controversy that the Department is now confessing that an error was made, and that it is now giving contracts to the allegedly fraudulent contractors whose contracts were canceled.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is the Senator from Ohio complaining because the Department made a mistake, or is he complaining because they had the courage, if they did make a mistake, to admit it and try to correct it? Of what is the Senator complaining?

Mr. FESS. If I knew they would admit their mistake and try to correct it, I should have nothing more to say.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator says they are doing just that. He says they are now giving contracts to the same concerns that he thinks ought to have had them all the time.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator wants to keep me on the floor all afternoon, just let him continue that line of remarks, and I will stay here.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my remarks if we are to have, as a consequence, any such calamity as the Senator indicates.

Mr. FESS. The Senator is going to be visited with that calamity, in spite of my promise to my good friend from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] if the Senator insists upon that sort of question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I withdraw it all, Mr. President, and apologize to the Senate and to the Senator.

Mr. FESS. Then I will keep my promise to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. CONNALLY. We are in an emergency. We want to get out of it; and I would not dare invite any such catastrophe as the Senator threatens.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, just one more word.

In the case of the air-mail flyer who was killed the other day—the day before the mail was resumed when he was on a trial flight—it has been stated by many that he was a trained man brought in from the reserve service. The facts are that he was not a pilot but a copilot, and that he was not qualified to fly the mail, and would not have been accepted by any one of the commercial air companies had the companies been operating the service instead of the Government operating it. This man got but $250 a month, while a pilot gets $600 a month. So the suggestion that the man recently killed—the eleventh one who went to his death—was a trained pilot is not true.

Mr. President, I am going to suspend further discussion of the air-mail question in order to facilitate disposing of the bill which my friend from Maryland has in charge. I promised him yesterday that I would not interfere with his efforts to secure action on his bill.

Mr. FESS subsequently said: Mr. President, on yesterday the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], in his discussion, dealt almost exclusively with the Aviation Corporation of Pittsburgh. In the forenoon, before the address was made, the secretary of that concern appeared before the Post Office Committee and gave information in reply to queries propounded to him by the chairman and other members of the committee.

Ordinarily, if it were not for the fact that it would take time, I should like to comment on some of those questions and answers, because they deal directly with the subject discussed yesterday; but I do not want to interfere with the bill of my friend from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. I therefore ask unanimous consent to have the testimony of this witness inserted in the Record; and I ask Senators especially to note the latter part of it, where there are answers to questions propounded dealing directly with the subject of dispute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF MR. C. B. MONRO, EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT OF PENNSYLVANIA AIR LINES

The CHAIRMAN. Whom do you represent, Mr. Monroe?

Mr. MONRO. Pennsylvania Air Lines.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the Penn Air Lines have a contract up to February 19?

Mr. MONRO. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. And between what points?

Mr. MONRO. Between Cleveland, Akron, Pittsburgh, and Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the length of that line?

Mr. MONRO. Three hundred and twenty-one miles.

The CHAIRMAN. What amount per year did you receive?

Mr. MONRO. We were receiving an average in the calendar year 1933 of approximately 40 cents per mile.

The CHAIRMAN. How much in money?

Mr. MONRO. Over $320,000. I have the exact figures here.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, sir, tell us what you have to say.

Mr. MONRO. I assume in appearing before you that there is no desire on your part to conduct a hearing on the matter of the cancellation of all domestic air-mail contracts. Frankly, we would welcome such a hearing, welcome any questions that might be asked in that connection, for no representative of our company has yet been accorded that privilege. I am assuming, however, that you are primarily interested in the bill now under discussion and are interested in the viewpoint of one of the companies which held an air-mail contract prior to February 19, and which, accordingly, has a vital interest in new air-mail legislation.

As a preface to our comments on this bill and purely as a matter of information for your better understanding of our situation, I would like to offer this brief explanation. Pennsylvania Air Lines is one of the smallest of the companies formerly carrying air mail, and is entirely independent of any of the larger aviation groups. It operates from Washington to Cleveland via Akron, and Pittsburgh over a route 321 miles in length, the major portion of which is mountainous territory. Until February 19, five round trips were being flown daily, all with tri-motored 12-passenger airplanes carrying both mail and passengers, airplanes equipped with two-way radio, blind-flying instruments, and all possible devices to insure a safe and efficient service.

The original contract on this route was let on April 27, 1926, and called for service between Cleveland and Pittsburgh only. On June 8, 1931, the line was extended from Pittsburgh to Washington, an extension on which pioneering passenger operations had been conducted for a period of almost 2 years and on which many thousands of dollars in route surveys and other development work had been expended by us—no other aviation interest having spent one cent in that territory.

With regard to its corporate affiliations, Pennsylvania Airlines is 100 percent owned and operated by the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation. This Pittsburgh company was organized in 1928 purely as a community enterprise under the sponsorship of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce. Its capital of approximately $1,200,000 was subscribed by over 200 of the business and civic leaders of the Pittsburgh district. No promotional fees or brokerage commissions were paid to anyone. I might also add that no family or group interest holds or ever held in excess of 5 percent of the total stock issued and outstanding.

At the present time Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation holds 100 percent of the stock of Pennsylvania Airlines, 50 percent of the stock of a company known as "Pittsburgh-Butler Airport, Inc.," and 4.73 percent of the stock of Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc. Our chief interest lies, however, in the ownership and operation of Pennsylvania Airlines, upon the successful continuation of which depends the integrity of the investment of our 234 stockholders, and the successful continuation is in turn dependent upon the air-mail legislation which is enacted at this session of Congress.

Gentlemen, if the bill now under discussion is passed in its present form, it is our opinion that not only the country's air transportation system but aircraft and engine manufacturing and all other phases of the aviation industry as well, which are dependent upon air transportation for the greatest part of their growth and development, would receive a setback from which there could be no recovery as long as the provisions of the act were in force. The fundamental truth of these statements lies in this fact: No air-transport company, organized and operated with the honest purpose of providing a safe and efficient air-mail and passenger service in the best interests of both the Government and the public, and with the honest intent of granting to the stockholders a fair return on their investments, would even attempt to bid on an air-mail contract under the bill as presently written. No corporate officers acquainted with the problems of air transportation, realizing the tremendous responsibility for human lives and for private property, could recommend to their directors and stockholders participation in a contract the honest performance of which could lead but to one result, the loss of all capital invested.

These statements may seem exaggerated, but do they prove so after a careful analysis which we believe is divorced from any tendency to partisanship or bias. What are these provisions, therefore, which would prohibit participation by any but the inexperienced or irresponsible, which would turn away legitimate capital and which would reduce our air transportation system to the status of development of years past?

Our analysis which we present for your consideration concerns chiefly sections 3, 5, 7, and 8, for it seems evident that on those sections is based the entire air-mail policy of the Government, the other provisions, although important in themselves, being more or less subordinate to the main issue.

If the committee will permit, we shall first give our comments on sections 5 and 8, which provide for the qualifications of the bidder and the terms under which an award may be made, provisions so closely related that they may be discussed as one unit.

It seems evident that the restrictions on who should bid are purely fictitious in character: a list of directors and stockholders, a financial statement. All that can be supplied by any "paper" company. And for what purpose is the requirement introduced of furnishing a list of stockholders? Take a large company, for example, whose stock is traded in on one of the exchanges. A list of its stockholders furnished on one day would be out of date in 24 hours.

No mention is made of the essential qualifications of experience and practical ability to carry out the terms of the contract. Any individual owning pen and paper may actually bid on a contract and then during the 6 months given him to qualify enter into a wild stock-promotional scheme, unload the stock on the public, and then take his profit and turn the company over to an inexperienced management for the fulfillment of the contract. In other words, a 6 months' promotional period is guaranteed to any unscrupulous promoter, with a bona fide Government contract to back his speculative efforts. And the money he secures will not come from business men and people acquainted with the problems of transportation, of finance, and of industry. They know too well the impossibility of conducting a successful air-transport system under rates at which a contract will be secured. They realize too well the unstable and shifting foundation on which this new structure will be raised under this bill. That money will come from men and women unacquainted with these facts, from men and women who cannot afford the loss of a single dollar. And their participation and the inevitable loss of their money will be sponsored by the United States Government.

And during the 6 months allowed to the bidder to qualify the responsible and experienced companies which formerly carried the air mail will be liquidating their affairs. Their equipment and supplies will be dumped on the market to be snatched up by concerns which, even if they could avoid later financial ruin, could not supply the former safety and efficiency of service for years to come. In other words, our assets, the property of our stockholders, are to be sacrificed to the unscrupulous or to the inexperienced with the full knowledge and consent of the Government.

But why do we say the companies which formerly carried the air mail will be forced to liquidate? For two reasons. First, let us look at section 7 of the bill, which is specifically written to disqualify all of the present operators without specifically charging any of them, except by inference, of any wrongdoing. In this section is included one of the most unfair, if not actually unconstitutional provisions ever seriously considered by a legislative body. The special Senate committee investigating ocean- and air-mail contracts has been loud in denouncement of the air transport industry. But even that committee has insisted that everyone would be given a fair trial. Yet into this legislation is written the following:

"* * * and no person shall be eligible to bid for or hold an air-mail contract if it or its predecessor is asserting or has any claim against the United States because of a prior annulment of any contract by the Postmaster General."

To the best of my knowledge this clause has been condemned by practically every witness appearing before the Post Office and Post Roads Committee of both the Senate and the House, with the exception of those who had some participation, either direct or indirect, in writing it into the bill. And we would like to add our protests.

If the cancellations were legal and the contractors were guilty of fraud and collusion, why should any fair-minded official refuse to allow that company the right to proceed against the Government in the courts? Why should any company which believes that it has been wrongfully accused and is willing to try its case in the courts be refused the right to engage in business with the Government?

Could this be an admission that annulment of contracts could not be upheld in court, where the facts on each side of the case could be brought out fairly for the first time? Instead of inserting this clause, why has not an effort been made to bring to trial those charged with guilt in obtaining the contracts? If there was sufficient justification for canceling contracts on the basis of fraud and collusion, why have there not been any indictments of those responsible for the so-called "fraud and collusion"?

That is the first of our two reasons for stating that the companies which formerly carried the air mail will be forced to liquidate. What is the second? The second reason lies in section 3, which prescribes the fundamental policy of the Government toward future commercial air-transport development in its provisions for a maximum rate of 30 cents per airplane-mile, or 40 cents when the average load is in excess of 500 pounds.

It is a business axiom that no responsible person will engage in any business enterprise unless he believe a fair profit can be made from the conduct of that enterprise.

The companies formerly flying the mail realize from long experience just what is involved in carrying on a safe and efficient air transport service. They know that the safe arrival of an airplane depends not only upon piloting skill, but upon the ground organization, the maintenance and overhaul crews, the weather observers, the communications personnel, and other departments—all coordinating their efforts to insure the safe arrival of that plane. They know that for every employee in the air there are needed from 6 to 10 on the ground. They know these things and a hundred more, all developed through years of trial and error and through the sacrifice of many lives.

And they know their costs and what the Post Office records show of the cost of operating all air lines—for the fiscal year 1933, for example, 61.4 cents per mile. For the same period they realize that passenger and miscellaneous revenue totaled 18 cents per mile and mail revenue 49.4 cents per mile. What is ahead for them under this act in the way of mail compensation, 30 cents per mile for all but three of the existing routes—New York to Los Angeles, New York to Chicago, and Chicago to San Francisco. On those three routes only the Post Office records indicate that the volume of mail will be sufficient to lift the maximum pay to 40 cents.

Take this 30 cents or even 40 cents per mile. Add to it the passenger and miscellaneous revenue of the fiscal year 1933 with an increase of 10 percent. Subtract the total from the operating costs for the same period, reduced by 10 percent. What are the results? On three of the routes a small profit might be made—some 4.5 cents per mile. On the remaining routes a loss of 5.5 cents per mile will be incurred. And that is based on the bidder's securing the contract at the maximum amount allowed.

Isn't it therefore a certainty that if any of the companies formerly carrying the air mail did bid on the new contracts, their only recourse would be to bid the maximum?

But it is ridiculous to believe that any new contract could be obtained on a bid of the maximum rate. The shoestring operator and the stock promoter would undoubtedly bid in the routes at a rate as low as 10 cents per mile. The premium would then be placed on cheap, inefficient, and unsafe operations; on low salaries for all personnel, whose minimum pay was not stipulated as a result of the provisions of the bill; that is, for all but pilots, or 90 percent of the personnel.

But let us now apply the provisions of this section to the specific case of Pennsylvania Airlines. Let us assume, first, that our company has been awarded the contract between Cleveland and Washington on the maximum bid of 30 cents per mile. There would be no question of our securing a higher rate under the 6-cent feature, as our records indicate that for the fiscal year 1933 our average load per trip was 69.4 pounds; for the calendar year 1933, 78.8 pounds. Our maximum would therefore be 30 cents per airplane-mile.

The next question is, What would the income be from passengers and other sources? Using as an estimate the results for the calendar year 1933, our passenger revenues would be 29.5 cents per mile and miscellaneous revenue nine tenths of 1 cent per mile. What is then the estimated revenue—from mail, 30 cents; from passengers, 29.5 cents; from miscellaneous services, nine tenths of 1 cent—or a total of 60.4 cents per airplane-mile. During the last 6 months of 1933, in which practically all our mileage was flown by 12 passenger tri-motored airplanes, the type of equipment which would be used exclusively under any future contract, our operating costs were 61.7 cents per airplane-mile. Our estimated revenues are 60.4 cents; our estimated costs, 61.7 cents. The net result would be a loss of 1.3 cents per mile.

On the tentative map prepared by the Post Office Department a frequency of three round trips per day is shown for the Cleveland-Washington route, or a total of 702,990 miles per annum. Past history of performance under the exceptionally difficult conditions of weather and terrain peculiar to this route would not permit an estimate of performance greater than 90 percent of the mileage scheduled, or a total of 632,691 miles. Since the estimated costs are based on an average of 79,283 miles per month while we could not fly under the new plan more than 52,724, obviously our mileage costs would actually be several cents over the above estimates. This would result in an unavoidable and continuous drain on our cash resources.

Someone may raise the question, Are these costs high? To the contrary, they are as low as it is possible for any comparatively short line to attain and still conduct a safe, reliable service. These costs are lower than the average of all operators of long lines and of short lines, and such results were secured only through most exacting economy. No officer in our company has ever received a salary of over $1,000 a month. The average salary of our three executive officers is now just over $700 a month. There is only one officer in our company being paid a salary higher than the average paid to our pilots, and that no money has been wasted may be seen from the fact that the total expenses of all of our officers have never exceeded $3,000 in any one year.

At this point the question might be raised, Is there any justification for short feeder lines such as ours continuing to be operated independently? Wouldn't it be better from the point of view of lowered costs to have such feeder lines consolidated with one of the long routes?

It is probably true that some economies might be effected by such a consolidation, though in our case it is doubtful if much money could be saved in this manner. The real point, however, is that it is to the best interest, both of the Government and of the public, that a line such as ours should not be controlled in any way by one of the larger companies.

Pennsylvania Airlines, for example, occupies a rather unique position on the air-transportation map, since it connects with practically all the large systems. At Washington with Eastern Air Transport to the South; at Pittsburgh with T.W.A., operating the mid-transcontinental lines; at Cleveland with United Airlines, operating the northern transcontinental route. Also, at Cleveland, connections are made with American Airways to Detroit and to Buffalo and other cities. In other words, all the traffic from Washington and the southern section of the Atlantic seaboard directed to the middle, Northwest, and West flows over our line. And the reverse is, of course, true. If Pennsylvania Airlines were controlled by any one of these larger companies, a fictitious traffic routing might result, which would be to the detriment of the public interest.

In this connection I would like to read to you a section covering this question from the report of the House Post Office and Post Roads Committee on February 21, 1933, following an investigation into the Postal Service under House Resolution 226. This section reads as follows:

"If a feeder or connecting-link extension happens to cross two main trunk lines, it becomes a cross-line feeder and assumes great strategic importance. Although such a cross-line feeder might very well be operated more economically as a part of one of the trunk lines it intersects, such absorption would tend to upset the competitive situation and might lead to a rate war or the establishing of a rival feeder paralleling the first. Such considerations lead to the conclusion that it may be desirable to keep a cross-line feeder independent even though absorption by one of the trunks it feeds might lead to greatly reduced operating costs. These remarks apply with special force to Pennsylvania Airlines."

The major portion of our route is over mountainous country in a territory notorious for its adverse weather conditions. In the winter months from 10 to 15 percent of our mileage is flown blind, by instruments and radio. Those problems were never recognized by the Post Office Department, for in the 38 months of our operating history, from November 1, 1930, to December 31, 1933, we received an average mail pay rate of 40.8 cents per mile, as against the average of 57.2 cents per mile given to all operators. In other words, for 38 months we have been paid 16.4 cents per mile less than the average paid to all operators. And during the same period our costs were about 5 cents per mile lower than the average of all operators.

In the 38 months of our operating history we incurred a net loss of $72,866.92, not a large sum perhaps, but it represents 36.4 percent of our total capitalization.

And now what are we faced with? If provisions of this bill under discussion were changed to permit former air-mail contractors to bid on the basis suggested, Pennsylvania Airlines would have the privilege of bidding on what? Just this—the privilege of bidding on a contract which, if secured, even at the maximum rate, would result in the inevitable loss of every dollar of our stockholders' money. And again, may I state, it would be ridiculous to assume that other interests would not bid lower than the 30-cent maximum, interests that could have no conception of the problems involved until after painful and probably disastrous experience.

What recourse do we then have? Would you recommend that the officers of our company, in full possession of these facts—and they are incontrovertible facts—would you recommend that the officers of our company deliberately attempt to enter into a contract the performance of which would lead but to the result stated? What would your opinion be of individuals who would deliberately misuse the money intrusted to them by their stockholders? The day this bill becomes a law Pennsylvania Air Lines pays off its employees, liquidates its assets, and returns to its stockholders the few dollars which they may have coming to them.

But what are other companies going to do? Naturally, we cannot speak for them; but we do know these facts:

1. With the possible exception of three routes, mail income cannot exceed 30 cents per mile, if the maximum is bid in all cases.
2. Passenger revenue per mile is higher on the Washington-Cleveland route than on all but three or, at the most, four routes in the country. The Post Office records will confirm this statement.

3. Pennsylvania Airlines' operating costs are substantially lower than the average, a fact which can also be confirmed by Post Office Department records.

If our company, therefore, with higher passenger revenues and lower operating costs than the average, cannot survive under the maximum rates which may be awarded by this bill, is it possible that many of the former air-mail contractors would even attempt to bid on new contracts? What, then, of the quarter of a million or more stockholders, American citizens, with their total investment of from $65,000,000 to $70,000,000?

There are other possible criticisms of this bill, and also of the sections discussed, but we have endeavored to confine our remarks to the fundamental provisions which we believe bear out our previous statement that "no air transport company, organized and operated with the honest purpose of providing a safe and efficient air-mail and passenger service in the best interests of both the Government and the public and with the honest intent of granting to the stockholders a fair return on their investments, would even attempt to bid on an air-mail contract under the bill as presently written."

In view of this, it may be only logical to inquire if we have any constructive suggestions which may be considered in your study of legislation designed to restore to this country its former splendid air-transport system and to insure continued progress and development in the years to come.

After a long study, constructive suggestions had previously been submitted by the Post Office and Post Roads Committee of the House, the essential phases of which our company heartily endorsed almost a year ago, constructive suggestions as embodied in the Kelly bill and in other bills based on payment to the operators of revenue actually earned, plus a subsidy to those companies not yet self-supporting. Our recommendations are therefore as follows:

1. Authorization to pay air-mail contractors on the basis 2 mills per pound-mile, such contractors who would incur a deficit at this rate to be given in addition a subsidy not to exceed 25 cents per airplane-mile, this subsidy to be automatically reduced by 5 cents each year until eliminated. Total payment of subsidy and revenue actually earned should not exceed 45 cents per airplane-mile.

2. Authorization for the appointment of a board or commission by the President to supervise and regulate air lines and to issue certificates of public convenience and necessity to all air lines in operation as of January 1, 1934, this board also to determine the amount of subsidy to be paid each airline at the time the certificate is issued.

On any new lines which may be established subsequent to January 1, 1934, and which do not duplicate existing services, the board or commission should be authorized to issue a certificate, with payment on the same basis as outlined above, 6 months' operating experience on daily schedule, however, being required before such companies could make application for such certificate.

3. Authorization for the reduction of air-mail postage on letters to 5 cents per ounce or fraction thereof; authorization for airgrams at 3 cents and air postcards at 2 cents.

It is our firm belief, that with some such provisions as have been hereby recommended, the present air-transport system could be preserved intact, further development would be encouraged, and the Government would receive a maximum of service at a steadily decreasing cost.

Is it not true that there are now two roads to choose between? One of them leads to these things:

1. The destruction of the investment made in the air-transport industry by over 250,000 American citizens, with the loss of $65,000,000 to $75,000,000.

2. The destruction of a coordinated air-transport system that previously had no equal in the entire world and the substitution thereof of a number of inexperienced companies.

3. Encouragement of inefficiency and cheapness, with the resultant increase in the hazards of flying, and with the evident disregard for the tremendous responsibility for the lives of human beings and for the safety of private property.

4. Discouragement of legitimate private capital and of participation in the industry by those with the necessary qualities of leadership and of integrity.

5. The denial of the inalienable right of an American citizen to be given a fair trial before he is judged guilty.

6. Promotion, with the Government stamp of approval, of various stock-jobbing schemes to the detriment of the public interest.

7. Disregard of the vital part played by commercial air transportation in national defense through the discouragement not only of air transport but of all other phases of the aviation industry as well.

But to what does the other road lead? The opportunity to preserve the integrity and continue the development of the finest air-transportation system in the world, the opportunity to further the progress of the one industry that succeeded in rising against the trend of the business depression, the opportunity to act in the best interests of the American people by placing this industry in a position where it can never be subject to the whims of political expediency.

Which road are we to follow?

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Monro, did anyone representing your company attend the so-called "spoils conference" in May 1930?

Mr. MONRO. Two representatives of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries, before we had any interest in it whatsoever, attended that meeting. Mr. Ball, of the Cleveland-Pittsburgh route, attended the meeting, but we had no affiliation with Mr. Ball at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. How many planes has your company?

Mr. MONRO. Ten tri-motor planes and two single-motor planes.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the average cost of these?

Mr. MONRO. I think they average somewhere about $10,000 apiece.

The CHAIRMAN. What actual capital was put into your company?

Mr. MONRO. In Penn Air Lines the total capitalization is $200,000. However, that cannot be judged with the total capitalization of Pittsburgh Aviation Corporation, all the facilities and assets of that company being behind Penn Air Lines, being over $1,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Paid-in capital?

Mr. MONRO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Does one company own the other?

Mr. MONRO. The Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation owns the Penn Air Lines.

The CHAIRMAN. What else does the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation own besides this?

Mr. MONRO. It owns 50 percent of the stock of a company known as the "Pittsburgh-Butler Airport, Inc.", and 4.73 percent of Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything else?

Mr. MONRO. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, the Penn Air Lines has a capital of $200,000; is that right?

Mr. MONRO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And the holding company has other interests besides that?

Mr. MONRO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, your income from the Government was about $320,000 a year under your former contract?

Mr. MONRO. I can give it to you correctly from the record; $322,650.33 for the calendar year 1933, an average rate of 40.2 cents per mile.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any other concern own the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation?

Mr. MONRO. No, sir; that is owned by approximately 234 stockholders, all business men and civic leaders in the Pittsburgh community.

The CHAIRMAN. And all the entire Penn Air Lines is owned by that company?

Mr. MONRO. By that company; yes, sir.

Senator DAVIS. I have heard it said several times in and about Pittsburgh that the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation is controlled by the Mellon family of Pittsburgh. Is that true?

Mr. MONRO. No, sir; that is not true. The Mellon family own 2,400 shares of the 26,312 shares issued and outstanding, which is about 5 percent.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that par-value stock or non-par-value stock?

Mr. MONRO. The Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation—the stock of that company is no par value. The stock was issued, however, at $25 per share. The Mellons own 2,400 shares—the entire family—Mr. R. K. Mellon, 400 shares; W. L. Mellon, 1,000 shares, and R. B. Mellon, before his death several weeks ago, 1,000 shares. The exact interest of the three combined is 5.182 percent.

Senator O'MAHONEY. Was any of that stock issued for services?

Mr. MONRO. During the year 1930 Mr. Robbins was the executive vice president of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation. He accepted no salary; not a single dollar was paid to him. We felt, with the rate at which money was being lost, we could not continue to create a loss of the company. He refused to accept a salary, and I think in February or March of that year the executive committee of our board of directors by resolution authorized the issue to him of 1,200 shares of stock, representing his total salary, in lieu of salary for the year 1930. So, if his salary had been paid to Mr. Robbins during that year, no stock would have been issued for services. That represented a total of $15,000, since it was issued to him.

Senator O'MAHONEY. There was no promotional stock issued?

Mr. MONRO. No promotional stock, and no brokerage commissions paid on the stock. I might add in the formation of Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, several individuals incurred an expense I know of between $5,000 and $10,000 that has not ever been reimbursed to them, in trying to create interest in aviation in the Pittsburgh district.

The CHAIRMAN. Have any dividends been paid?

Mr. MONRO. No, sir; no dividends of any sort have been paid. I would like to add that the loss of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation in the last 5 years of experience from December 1928 has totaled $346,000, and the loss of the Penn Air Lines during the 38 months of its existence has totaled $73,000, and the loss of the Pittsburgh-Butler Airport in the 3 years since it has been incorporated has been one half of the loss, which would represent as our share $26,000. So the total loss of the three companies which we are interested in was $445,000. We cannot pay dividends on results of that sort.

Senator DAVIS. Were the policies and the activities of your company in any way controlled by the Mellon family?

Mr. MONRO. I do not see how they could possibly have been a factor. I also hold the position of secretary of this company, and I know that there have been 61 directors' and executive-committee meetings of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation held, and Penn Air Lines, and Mr. R. K. Mellon attended 14 of those meetings, about one half of which he attended just to put us down for a quorum, and Mr. R. B. Mellon, also a director, resigned shortly after he was elected, for he said that he did not have the time to devote to the company and he must resign. Mr. W. L. Mellon, also a director, never attended a single meeting. This Pittsburgh Co. was organized by a group of people entirely as a community enterprise. I was instrumental in securing a large part of the stock by personal solicitation. I know definitely the Mellons were not even approached until after the majority of this stock, which was finally subscribed, had been signed up, and their only participation in it, which they stated to me, was for the reason that other business men and the leading interests of Pittsburgh were launching this thing, and that it was not controlled by any group, and they were going into this merely on the basis on which they would contribute money to a hospital or a university, or something of that sort. I think that the minutes of our meetings and other correspondence would definitely show that the Mellons never attempted at any time to influence our policy. They took no active part in the company and never requested us to use any products, or do anything of the sort.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the stock of your company, or any one of the three companies, been bought and sold on the exchange?

Mr. MONRO. No, sir; it is not listed on the exchange.

The CHAIRMAN. Has it a market value?

Mr. MONRO. I happened to see an acquaintance of mine recently and he mentioned to me that he had sold some stock at $5 a share. That is the only thing I know.

Senator DAVIS. Were there any dividends ever paid by the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation or the Pittsburgh-Butler Air Transport Line or the Penn Air Lines?

Mr. MONRO. No, sir; Senator DAVIS. I believe I brought that out when I answered Senator McKellar that the total loss of these companies was about $445,000 in 5 years.

The CHAIRMAN. Any other questions? If not, we are very much obliged to you, Mr. MONRO.

Senator O'MAHONEY. Just a moment, did I understand you to say that at the time of this so-called "spoils conference" you were not carrying the mails?

Mr. MONRO. That is correct. The Pittsburgh Aviation Industries was not carrying the mails, and although Mr. Ball, who owned the line from Pittsburgh to Cleveland, which we acquired 7 months later, was present, we had no financial interest in his company at that time.

Senator O'MAHONEY. Were you flying any ships at that time?

Mr. MONRO. We were flying quite extensively at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. When did you receive your contract from the Government?

Mr. MONRO. On the Cleveland-Pittsburgh Line?

The CHAIRMAN. On any of the lines.

Mr. MONRO. Well, the first contract was really on the Cleveland-Pittsburgh Line, given April 7, 1926, and we started April 21, 1927.

The CHAIRMAN. When did you receive a contract on your entire line?

Mr. MONRO. That line was extended from Pittsburgh to Washington on June 8, 1931. This was after the so-called "spoils conference."

The CHAIRMAN. Which of your officers were at the conference?

Mr. MONRO. Mr. Hand, of Pittsburgh Aviation; and Mr. Robbins, formerly executive vice president and now president of the Transcontinental and Western Air.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he still connected with your company?

Mr. MONRO. No, sir. He is a stockholder, however, and always has been.

The CHAIRMAN. But he has given up his official position with the company?

Mr. MONRO. Yes, sir; he is not an officer or director now.

The CHAIRMAN. When did he leave to go with the Transcontinental & Western Air?

Mr. MONRO. As I recall, he became the managing director of Transcontinental & Western Air in the early part of 1931, and then probably in the spring of 1931, I believe it was, he was elected president—or it may have been the summer of 1931.

The CHAIRMAN. They were the only two officers present?

Mr. MONRO. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. You were not present?

Mr. MONRO. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know about the conference?

Mr. MONRO. Yes, sir; I did.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you put down for a route?

Mr. MONRO. The Pittsburgh Aviation, as I understand it, when asked to state the equities of the territory which they had been serving, stated they had equities in the line between Washington and Pittsburgh and between New York and Pittsburgh. I might say in that connection all of this development work that had been done had been done by our company in that community, permitting us to qualify under the postal air-mail routes. Previous to this conference there had been conferences with various companies with the idea of joining up the passenger route between New York and Pittsburgh and Washington, we being given an opportunity to bid on this under the Watres Act, and the Postmaster General figured out this line by some extension.

The CHAIRMAN. What were your extensions; you had the route from Pittsburgh to Cleveland at that time?

Mr. MONRO. Not at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you have?

Mr. MONRO. We had nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever bid on any routes at all?

Mr. MONRO. No, sir; we were not given an opportunity to bid on any routes.

The CHAIRMAN. How did you get your route?

Mr. MONRO. We purchased from Mr. Ball his ownership in the Penn Air Lines, which operated between Cleveland and Pittsburgh.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you got an extension from Pittsburgh to Washington?

Mr. MONRO. Eight months after we purchased Mr. Ball's company we had an extension from Pittsburgh to Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. How did Mr. Ball get his contract, by purchase or how?

Mr. MONRO. Mr. Ball bid on the contract on April 27, 1926.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the distance from Cleveland to Pittsburgh?

Mr. MONRO. That has been changed at various times. It was 140 miles, and it was changed to 131 miles.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the distance from Pittsburgh to Washington?

Mr. MONRO. One hundred and ninety-five miles.

The CHAIRMAN. Then your extension was about double?

Mr. MONRO. Well, I would not say double.

The CHAIRMAN. I should not say that myself, but it was considerably more.

Mr. MONRO. It was 60 miles more than the original line.

Senator DAVIS. In your opinion, Mr. MONRO, do you believe the former air-mail contractors have been overpaid by the Government?

Mr. MONRO. No, sir; I do not. I think every dollar that the Government has paid these air-mail contractors, in addition to what they have received from their air-mail revenue returned, meaning the Government, I think that it has received very much return in the various developments which these air-mail contractors have been able to bring about throughout the route. Undoubtedly, if it had not been for this, these various municipalities, counties, and so forth, would not have poured in these millions in airports over the country. For example, in Pittsburgh alone there is over $4,000,000 in that airport, employing a large number of persons in constructing it, and that is true of every municipality. Also in the developments of various equipments. That is true of the Transcontinental and the Boeing and United Air, and if the Government is going to cut down on the subsidies, it will get just exactly what it pays for, cheap air service, and if it is going to get good service, it will sooner or later pay for itself.

Senator O'MAHONEY. You believe that a subsidy is necessary?

Mr. MONRO. I believe it is absolutely necessary, if we are to have aviation in this country.

Senator DAVIS. And did the Government ever encourage the community served by your company in helping build these airports?

Mr. MONRO. Very different. I can recall coming down to Washington before we had anything to do with air mail, and saying there should be some air-mail line there, and the answer we got from the Post Office Department and Department of Commerce was, "you do not have an airport up there, and you do not have anything up there, and when you do that and when we see there is a demand for that service up there, then some air-mail lines will be put in."

The CHAIRMAN. Who said that?

Mr. MONRO. That was said by various officials of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Which ones?

Mr. MONRO. Probably stated by Mr. Glover and Mr. Brown and Mr. Wadsworth, and the Department of Commerce officials.

The CHAIRMAN. Which one of the Department of Commerce officials?

Mr. MONRO. I would not like to state definitely. It was definitely stated, "You go and develop aviation and spend your money, and we will see what we can do for you."

The CHAIRMAN. Any other member of the committee desire to ask any questions? (No answer.) Have you anything else, Mr. MONRO?

Mr. MONRO. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all. Thank you very much.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand, all debate on the Vandenberg substitute is over. Would the Senator from Idaho object to having a vote on it before he takes the floor? I do not want to take the Senator off the floor.

Mr. BORAH. No; I have no objection, but the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is not here.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not think he desires to address himself particularly to the Vandenberg amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. He said he did, Mr. President. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Utah is in the dining room. If the Senator from Maryland can arrange the matter with him, I will suspend at any time. A vote in this body is so rare that I should not want to interfere if one is about to be taken.

Mr. TYDINGS. Under the circumstances, I do not think I should be justified in asking the Senator from Idaho to defer his remarks.

PRICE FIXING UNDER STEEL CODE

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, on February 2, 1934, I submitted in the Senate a resolution calling upon the Federal Trade Commission to make a report upon the practices of the steel industry under the steel code. We now have that report before us, and it presents a very serious question as to what the Congress is going to do about it—whether we are going to acquiesce in what is going on, connive at the practices which are now established by evidence, or whether we will restore the antitrust laws and give the Government an opportunity to enforce them. There is no more important question before Congress. There is none bearing more directly upon the welfare of the people of the United States.

Mr. President, this report must be of great interest to all who are concerned in the recovery program. The conditions which have been revealed and the practices which have been established to the satisfaction of anyone who will read the report are undermining, embarrassing, sapping the entire recovery program. They are in conflict with the whole scheme now set up to bring about recovery.

Of course, that would not be true if the steel industry alone were engaged in these practices; but there are a number of leading industries, practically all, which, I venture to say from investigations which I have made myself, if resolutions should be introduced, would be found to be engaged in the same practices precisely as those followed by the steel industry. The result is that the determined effort of the Government to restore purchasing power to the masses is being thwarted by these practices thus revealed. Therefore, it would be, it seems to me, a matter of supreme concern to those who are hopeful of making a success, if possible, of the recovery program to consider how such practices shall be terminated or prohibited.

The report also must be of great interest to those who are disturbed over the present condition of the labor world. Everyone who has undertaken to familiarize himself with the situation knows that there is a restlessness throughout the ranks of labor in the United States. There is dissatisfaction and there is discontent, which are manifesting themselves in certain particulars at the present time, but which, I venture to say, will manifest themselves more universally and more generally as time goes on unless such things as we find revealed by this report are remedied. In other words, whenever there appears to be, or where there actually is, a rise in salaries or wages these combines and trusts and monopolies take away from the workmen all possible advantage by reason of the raises.

It must also be a matter of great concern to those who are interested in preserving small business in the United States. It is shown here that there is now almost a complete scheme for the elimination of small business, and the elimination takes place under the color of law. Small independent business concerns, the very foundation of our economic strength as a nation, are being forced into bankruptcy, and this is being done under authority of law. Could there be any graver question for us to consider than the preservation of the small independent business concerns of the Nation. It involves not only an economical question but it involves the very stability of our social and political structure.

Lastly, it is a matter of supreme concern to the consumers of the United States, because we shall find as we go forward in the investigations—and they will continue—that almost everything which the ordinary citizen must have in the way of food, of clothing, of home-building material, everything he must utilize in order to maintain a home and to take care of his family, is now subjected to monopolistic prices and to monopolistic control.

Mr. President, the remedy for this situation seems to be twofold. Certainly there ought to be a redrafting of the codes. No further facts are necessary than those which are found in this report to necessitate and to enable those in charge to carry out a rewriting, a redrafting, of the codes. The other remedy, with which the Congress has to do, is through restoring the antitrust laws, so as to enable those who are administering the laws to enforce the laws against just such things as are revealed in this report.

I have a bill pending for the restoration of the antitrust laws, and I beg the committee before which that bill is now pending to report the bill to the Senate and give us an opportunity to restore those laws, so as to protect the small business man, to protect labor, and to protect consumers in the United States against that which practically amounts to economic feudalism.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ERICKSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I have not read the Senator's proposed bill, but what would be left of the N.R.A. if it were enacted?

Mr. BORAH. There is a conflict of view upon that, but in my opinion the restoration of the antitrust laws would in no wise conflict with the fair execution of the National Recovery Act. It has been supposed, and was supposed at the time the act was passed, that the maintenance of fair competition by permitting people to come together and arrange for fair competition could not be carried out if the antitrust laws were invoked, or if they were upon the statute books, but I contend that the decision of the courts establish beyond all question that the coming together of industries for the purpose of maintaining fair competition is not prohibited by the antitrust laws. It is where they engage in an effort to practice unfair competition, to destroy competition, that the antitrust laws may be invoked.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator believe that, with the antitrust laws in force, and the operation of the N.R.A. proceeding without the suspension of those laws, we could have reached the elimination of child labor, the sweatshop, and so on, which result is now regarded as a good thing?

Mr. BORAH. Undoubtedly; I do not think there is any conflict in the two programs. I have never been able to discover where the supposed conflict occurred. The Supreme Court, in the last enunciation of its view on the antitrust laws, clearly declared that industries might meet and confer for the purpose of maintaining fair competition. They had held in a previous case that there was no inhibition in their meeting for the purpose of giving labor fair compensation, or just compensation. The antitrust laws are directed against those things which are unfair, which are unjust, the depressing of labor, extortion of consumers, and are not directed toward the maintenance of fair competition.

Mr. FESS. I had been under the impression that large business would have no further interest in the N.R.A. if the provision for the suspension of the antitrust laws were eliminated.

Mr. BORAH. I am rather inclined to think that there are business organizations which would lose all interest in the N.R.A. if they were not permitted, under color of law, to do the things which conscience and justice demand that they shall not do. But it is not our business to satisfy their longings.

Mr. President, before I read part of this report of the Federal Trade Commission I call attention to a letter from the Boyle Manufacturing Co., of Los Angeles, Calif. That is a company engaged in manufacturing sheet-steel products. In this letter it is said:

In connection with the investigation of the effect of the steel code on the price increases and price fixing, we should like to stress the following points:

With steel mills located within 20 miles of Los Angeles and 30 miles of San Francisco we are compelled to pay the Pittsburgh base price for steel plus the combination rail and water rate, amounting to 70 cents per hundredweight for all steel purchased on the Pacific coast. This rate is made up of 27 cents, rail haul from Pittsburgh to tidewater; 30 cents, ocean freight; 13 cents, covering wharfage, handling, insurance, and the rail freight from the harbor to Los Angeles.

In other words, the parties doing business upon the Pacific coast must, in order to secure the material which this manufacturing establishment uses, pay for it upon the theory that they purchase it at Pittsburgh, Pa., whereas, as a matter of fact, it is purchased from the mills upon the Pacific coast—

We understand this price was brought about and is maintained, through an agreement between the Bethlehem Steel Co. and the United States Steel Co.; the latter having the only sheet plants on the coast. Bethlehem Steel, with a plant located at Sparrows Point, will ship sheets into Pittsburgh, for the basic price of $2.25, paying 27 cents freight, and netting $1.98. The same sheets, shipped to the coast, net the steel company $2.25, plus the 27 cents freight from Pittsburgh, or $2.52.

That practice is now going on practically under the color of law to engage in such practice.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I think the Senator is kind of pulling his punches. He says it is under the color of authority. It is with the authority of the Government that that is going on, as I understand.

Mr. BORAH. Well, I am not sure that the companies are living up to the code. But undoubtedly they are acting under the color of authority.

Mr. LONG. What are the authorities doing to prevent it? Are they doing anything?

Mr. BORAH. Not yet.

Mr. LONG. If we should wait until they do something I am afraid we will probably continue to be as disappointed as we have been heretofore.

Mr. BORAH. I believe the evil will be remedied.

Mr. President, I ask to insert in the RECORD at the close of my remarks the letters I have referred to and the telegram accompanying the letters. The telegram is simply designed to correct a single statement in the letters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let us turn to this report. It is a remarkable document. On page 7 it is said:

Stated in the briefest preliminary way the code constitutes the board of directors of the American Iron and Steel Institute as the code authority for its administration and enforcement.

The code constitutes the board of directors from the American Iron and Steel Institute as the code authority.

The distribution of voting powers among the members of the code is such as to insure control by the larger producing interests. While each member is declared to be entitled to at least one vote, a system of plural voting is established giving to each member so many votes as shall equal the quotient obtained by dividing by 500,000 the aggregate amount in dollars of the invoiced value of the products delivered by such member for consumption within the United States during the preceding calendar year. Aside from this concentration of voting strength in the hands of large interests, which appears on the face of this provision, it may be noted that there is no exclusion of sales made to affiliated companies in arriving at the total. This operates to give a still further advantage to such interests, usually the larger ones, as have most fully developed the principle of integration. On that basis the United States Steel Corporation and its subsidiaries would have approximately 40 percent of the total voting strength, and the Bethlehem Steel Corporation about 13 percent. Eight other concerns would have a combined voting strength of about 30 percent, with the largest among them having only a little over one half the strength of the Bethlehem. The remainder of the voting strength would be distributed among 50 concerns, the strength of the largest being about $1\frac{1}{2}$ percent.

To begin with, therefore, the power, the domination, the control of the steel industry is, under this code, lodged entirely, for practical purposes, with the larger companies. That is what I mean when I say they are acting under color of law.

On page 12 it says:

The code accepts such a fiction by requiring that delivered prices shall be arrived at by adding to the mill-base quotation the all-rail freight from specified common basing points. As a result, the so-called "mill-base quotations" do not represent net realized prices for steel except for such mills as are located at the basing point for a particular product. For all other mills the code contemplates that freight to a given destination shall not be calculated from actual shipping point but from what may be called the ruling basing point, which is the one whose base quotation plus all-rail freight makes the lowest delivered price. This is clearly the practice of the industry under the code. To illustrate, on sheets produced at Youngstown, Ohio, the largest sheet-producing center, the Youngstown producers must add to their mill-base quotation the all-rail freight from Pittsburgh, which is their ruling basing point and where no sheets are produced.

In other words, they must pay freight from a basing point where no sheets or no products of the kind which they are shipping are produced at all.

This imaginary freight amounts to $1.50 to $2.50 a ton. Many other illustrations for other products in other territory with larger amounts of imaginary freight might be substituted for this one.

Says the report, upon page 22:

It is apparent from the foregoing that there are substantial restraints and restrictions upon independence of action in determining the mill-base quotations, which are filed with the institute as the code authority. The pressure of organized group opinion following discussions of the prices to be filed tends strongly to prevent any mill-base quotations being adopted or filed which are lower than the group approved. Similar pressure with the assistance from code authority is exerted on any member whose prices do not coincide with group opinion during the period before their quotations filed become effective.

Speaking now of the limitations imposed by the code on independently determined mill-base quotations, the report says:

The purpose of this section is to show what restrictions are placed by the code itself upon the freedom of members to adopt and use any mill-base quotation they please. Assuming that a member should independently adopt a given base quotation, he is not at liberty under the code to quote it immediately to his trade and take orders at that figure. Under section 2 of schedule F his base quotation cannot become effective in less than 10 days after he has filed it with the code authority—

The code-authority directors made up from the Steel Institute—

The board of directors has power "on its own initiative or on complaint of any member of the code to investigate any base price for any product at any basing point." If it determines that "such base price is an unfair base price—

It is sure to be to some of the large companies—

"having regard to the cost of manufacturing such products", the board "may require" the member to file a new base quotation which the board considers fair. If a new quotation satisfactory to the board is not filed within 10 days, the board may itself fix a fair base quotation for the recalcitrant, and it "shall be the base price of such member" until change is provided in the code.

That is the opportunity, that is the chance of the small independent business which desires to fix a point where it is selling according to the actual facts and not according to imaginary fright. In other words, the small business here has absolutely no chance, because back of it to determine whatever may be necessary in order to protect the large companies is the board of directors with the power of initiative.

I was out in the Zoo a few days ago and I happened to be strolling around at about the time that the keeper was putting a pig into the cage with a boa constrictor. The pig seemed perfectly at ease for a time and went about its business strolling around through the cage until it wandered near and touched the boa constrictor, and that quick it was crushed. Under this scheme here, the minute the independent business man touches the interest of the larger combines he is put out of business. It is not only economically unsound, it is not only undermining the effort to recovery in this country, but it is cruel, it is inhuman.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Has the Senator the figures as to what proportion of the manufactured articles would be in the large units and what proportion in the small units?

Mr. BORAH. I am not sure that the report covers that. I might find it as I go through the report.

Mr. FESS. I have a statement which shows that 8 percent of the manufacturers produce 50 percent of the product, while 92 percent, being of the small manufacturers, produce the balance.

Mr. BORAH. I have seen figures on the subject.

Mr. FESS. The dividing line as between the large manufacturers and the small manufacturers was this, that those employing 250 or more men would be considered to belong to the larger manufacturers, and those who employ 250 and less men would belong to the group of the smaller manufacturers.

Mr. BORAH. I suspect the Senator's figures are correct. The report says on page 24:

The mill-base quotation, having been arrived at as before shown, cannot be deviated from according to the judgment or desire of the individual operator in particular situations.

On page 41 there is a discussion of group limitations on selection and establishment of common basing points. The report says:

The code (schedule F) lists the recognized basing points for each product and requires that delivery charges be calculated therefrom and not from place of shipment as such. A producer is not at liberty to sell his product f.o.b. his own mill and allow the purchaser to assume the exact delivery cost. Nor may he figure the actual delivery cost in his delivered price unless his shipping point happens to coincide with an authorizing basing point. The power to select and establish basing points therefore is the power to determine which mills shall be required to calculate and collect a delivery charge from the purchaser, which is not the equivalent of their actual cost of delivery.

The basing points now established were selected by the organized industry through the American Iron & Steel Institute, and they can be changed only by similar action of the Institute as the Code Authority. As a result a member whose mill is not located at a recognized basing point must get the approval of the Institute before he can calculate his delivery charge at its actual cost. In the last analysis, the application of a member to make his mill a basing point or to enlarge or reduce the number of basing points is subject to the collective approval of his competitors.

"Subject to the collective approval", in other words, of the United States Steel Co., the Bethlehem Steel Co., and the other large steel organizations.

An illustration of these facts and the sort of results which may occur in their application is found in the experience of the Diamond Calk Horseshoe Co., of Duluth, Minn. It has long been buying its raw steel from the Minnesota Steel Co., whose mill is at Duluth. Duluth not being a recognized basing point for such steel, the code requires prices to be based on Chicago, the nearest basing point. This required the Diamond Co. to pay, in addition to the price as quoted by the Duluth mill, the equivalent of the all-rail freight from Chicago to Duluth, or imaginary freight of $6.60 a ton on steel produced at Duluth. As a further result, the nearest competitor of Diamond Co., located in Chicago, can buy there at the basing-point price, of $6.60 a ton less than the Diamond Co. pays at Duluth.

For a number of years before the code this competitive disadvantage of the Diamond Co. due to the basing-point system was largely offset by the Minnesota Steel Co. making it a special concession of $5 a ton on steel from its Duluth mill. This still left the mill with $1.60 a ton out of the imaginary freight of $6.60 a ton which the basing-point system called for, yet enabled the Diamond Co. to compete. Because the code forbids continuation of that concession, and despite the desire of the Minnesota Steel Co. and United States Steel Corporation, its parent company, to continue it, they are forced to collect from Diamond Co. the full $6.60 a ton imaginary freight. At the same time, however, Minnesota Steel Co. sells similar steel in Illinois and Indiana and nets $13.20 a ton less for it than it nets from Diamond Co. By contrast the code establishes Duluth as a basing point for other forms of this same steel, thereby permitting them to be sold at Duluth at a fixed differential of only $1 per ton over the Chicago prices.

On page 45, discussing this subject further, the report says:

Pittsburgh, the basing point for 33 products, is still the center and starting point for all basing-point calculations. Five other places have the appearance of being important basing points: Chicago for 24, Birmingham for 16, Cleveland for 15, Buffalo for 14, and Pacific coast ports for 13 kinds of products. But the significance of these is in the main secondary and subordinate to that of Pittsburgh.

It will be seen that east and south of a line connecting Pittsburgh and Buffalo, an area comprising some 14 States, there are few basing points and mostly for very minor products. Moreover, it is through the eastern Atlantic ports that the Pittsburgh-plus combined water-rail rates apply on many products to a large part of eastern, southeastern, and Gulf State territory, as well as to the Pacific Coast States. The mills in those regions have been almost completely acquired and merged with the larger eastern interests, the price policies of which are further merged under the code. Over all this area the essence of the Pittsburgh-plus system applies on many products in its original effectiveness.

Under the system known as the Pittsburgh-plus system, with which the small companies located throughout this vast region of the United States are compelled to comply, they are being forced out of existence; they are being merged; in other words, they are surrendering; they are quitting; they are driven out of business. Does that add to employment, or does it not? Does that lower the standard of living in the country and reduce the purchasing power, or does it not? So long as it continues, the Treasury of the United States may pour its uncounted millions into the industries and into the farms of the United States all in vain, because these organized interests reach out and gather it in and pile it into their coffers.

I quote further from the report on page 49:

A steel producer at Harrisburg, Pa., applied for approval of Bethlehem as a basing point for carbon ingots, blooms, billets, and slabs; it being a recognized basing point for alloy products of the same kind. The Institute declined to receive these price filings for carbon products and referred the matter to the bar committee for consideration. The Harrisburg producer stated it was necessary to have an eastern basing point in order to protect itself and its eastern customers, that Pittsburgh, being the basing point for these carbon products, gave it a great price advantage, and that its Philadelphia customers were the victims of "an artificial and discriminating adjustment of affairs" which imposed on them a handicap of $7.90 a ton.

Again on page 53:

For instance, Sparrows Point, Md., is a recognized basing point for plates. It is not a basing point for sheets or strips on which it must adopt the Pittsburgh base. Yet the same mills commonly make both sheets, strips, and light plates. There is only one one-thousandth of an inch difference in thickness between the thickest sheet and strip and the thinnest plate. Yet the net price realization to the mill of the Bethlehem Steel Co. at Sparrows Point, located on tidewater, is $3.40 per ton more on strip steel and $5.40 per ton more on sheets than on such plate.

It is a conservative statement that the power to select, discontinue, or increase the number of basing points, involves the power of deciding what cities shall be handicapped and what cities shall be built up as centers for the remanufacture and processing of steel products. The importance of such a power over the future of communities can hardly be overstated. The tendency is distinctly against what is commonly considered as desirable decentralization of industry.

Here is given power not only, as I have shown by the reading, to drive small independent plants out of existence but, if you please, to enrich or impoverish communities, to enrich or to leave desolate cities and towns. I cannot believe, Mr. President, that such a program will long be acquiesced in. I cannot believe that the Congress of the United States will return to the people without restoring the law which would enable the Government to protect the people against such conditions. I cannot believe that the Finance Committee will leave that bill in a pigeonhole to die.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I have not had the pleasure of hearing all the observations of the Senator from Idaho. May I inquire whether the bill to which he has just referred is one dealing with the antitrust laws?

Mr. BORAH. It would restore the antitrust laws.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator believe that that bill is properly before the Finance Committee, or, rather, should it not go to the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. BORAH. I had it referred to the Finance Committee because the National Recovery Act was considered by that committee, and the bill is an amendment to the National Recovery Act. I should be very glad to have it before the Judiciary Committee, but, on inquiry, I was told that it should go to the Finance Committee. There is no reason, however, if the Finance Committee finds itself so engaged as to be unable to consider the bill, why we might not send it to the Judiciary Committee. But I shall find a bill, I think, upon which it may be offered as an amendment.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator, what he already knows, that the Judiciary Committee gave to the country the great antitrust law, and all of the measures dealing with antitrust matters came from the Judiciary Committee; so it occurred to me that the bill of the Senator ought to be before that committee.

Mr. BORAH. I am very pleased to have the suggestion. If my bill had been an original proposition dealing with the Sherman antitrust law, I should have suggested that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee; but it is by way of an amendment to the National Recovery Act, and that measure having been passed upon by the Finance Committee, after consultation, it was thought wise to send the bill introduced by me there. I shall later take into consideration what the Senator has suggested.

I quote further from the report, on page 62:

Summing up this system of calculating delivery charges, it starts with an arbitrary basing point, so that differences in actual delivery cost are merged into a fictitious common rate. Then it uses, but solely for calculating purposes, a higher cost mode of transportation than is frequently utilized. Then in some cases it substitutes arbitraries which are higher than the actual cost even of the calculated transportation. Thus the system is not one for determining actual freight costs. It is a device for automatically insuring that all mills will reach a given destination at identical delivered prices and that the identity in their mill-base quotations will not be set at naught by differences of location and of actual freight costs.

That is standardization.

At page 70 of the report it is said:

The code provision just described has been opposed especially by fabricators who are not located at basing points.

This is a very long quotation, and I shall not read it. It is simply describing the effects of the basing-point theory and principle contained in the code.

I turn now to page 133 of the report, where we may gather some of the proof of this system as it is now being conducted:

The resolution calls specifically upon the commission to report the facts concerning "the increase of price of steel products" since the adoption of the code. The commission, despite the limited time available for the treatment of this subject, submits its report thereon as substantially meeting the terms of the resolution. Many of the price increases are of an indirect character and are therefore not readily discernible and their extent and effect are not easily appraised. As a matter of fact, the most important increases have been indirect but none the less real and substantial. In some cases they are startling.

Most important, perhaps, of these indirect additions to the net realized price of the producers, and also as affecting a great body of smaller enterprises and the consuming public, have been the increases in so-called "quantity extras." By these extras the price is varied on purchases in different amounts advancing on a sharply progressing scale for the smaller buyers. These increases, some of which have been as much as 800 percent, have been in many cases extremely burdensome, and have called forth numerous protests from smaller fabricators especially in the less populous territories.

The report gives a list of prices of different products and different articles which I shall not take the time to read because I am going to have the report published as a Senate document if I may. But it will be observed that some of these prices have been increased as much as 800 percent.

At page 134 the commission said:

The basing prices of pig iron, as well as nearly all forms of steel, were directly advanced soon after the adoption of the code. Pig iron, which had previously, almost without exception, been sold at f.o.b. furnace prices, was brought into the basing-point system, and basing prices were fixed at from 50 cents to $1 per ton at all points above the preceding f.o.b. furnace prices on the day the code became effective. Then, or soon after, various increases occurred in the extras for quality and special processed forms, the extent of which cannot be determined. Direct increases in basing prices on steel capital goods ranged from $2 to $3 per ton and on consumer goods from $2 to $5 per ton.

I invite attention now to page 158, where will be found illustrated how successfully we could deal with this situation if the antitrust laws were invoked and if the Federal Trade Commission had its full authority and was authorized to deal with it, not in contravention of and not in antagonism to the National Recovery Act, but in aid and in support of and in harmony with the carrying on of the National Recovery Act. There the Federal Trade Commission states:

The commission in 1924 issued an order requiring the United States Steel Corporation and its chief subsidiaries to cease and desist from the Pittsburgh-plus practice; from selling rolled steel products upon any other basing point than that where the products were manufactured and from which they were shipped; from selling or contracting for the sale of said products without clearly and distinctly indicating how much was charged for the steel products f.o.b. the producing and shipping point, and how much was charged for the actual transportation from the producing or shipping point to destination; and, subject to the provisos of section 2 of the Clayton Act, from discriminating in price between purchasers. The order also provided as follows:

"The use by respondents in the course of such interstate commerce of any system similar to that of the Pittsburgh-plus system shall likewise be deemed to constitute a violation of this order. The practice by respondents of selling or contracting for the sale of said products in the course of interstate commerce upon any other basing point than that where the products are manufactured or from which they are shipped, shall be deemed to constitute a violation of this order."

The fourth period in the history of price fixing in the steel industry extends from the Pittsburgh-plus order of 1924 to the adoption of the code for the steel industry in August 1933. The corporation accepted the order without appealing to the courts as it had repeatedly threatened to do, and promised to conform "insofar as it is practicable to do so."

Immediately following the commission's order there was a price reduction at Duluth and Chicago of 50 cents a keg on nails and 50 cents a reel on barbed wire. The resultant saving to the consumers of the Middle West may be estimated at about $30,000,000 a year. This reduction is graphically shown in the accompanying chart.

The chart referred to will be found in the report.

Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, I do not think that any fair administration of the National Recovery Act need conflict with the antitrust laws or their execution, and vice versa. The enforcement of the antitrust laws will not in the least interfere with the execution of the National Recovery Act, the basic principle of which is to establish and maintain fair competition. Is this fair competition? If I, dealing in these products upon the Pacific coast, must pay freight from Pittsburgh, whence the product never came, upon a product which was purchased within 50 miles of where I used it, if I must continue to do that, if small industries must compete against such practices, can it be considered for a moment that that is fair competition? Is that the design of the National Recovery Act? Is that what Congress had in mind when it passed that act? Certainly not.

But in order to restrain, control, and guide the action of these powerful industries and great combines it is necessary that there be something in the law aside from the codes which they themselves adopt. In order also that the codes may be in compliance with the principle of fair competition it is necessary to restrain the code makers—and they are the large companies—from writing into those codes any principles which are at war with the true spirit of the National Recovery Act. I sincerely hope we may soon have an opportunity to pass the bill I have introduced. We need all the legal sanction possible to curb the rapacious forces which prey upon the people of this country.

The letters and telegram referred to are as follows:

LOS ANGELES, March 6, 1934.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

HONORABLE SIR: In connection with the investigation of the effect of the steel code on the price increases and price fixing, we should like to stress the following points:

With steel mills located within 20 miles of Los Angeles and 30 miles of San Francisco we are compelled to pay the Pittsburgh base price for steel, plus the combination rail and water rate, amounting to 70 cents per hundredweight for all steel purchased on the Pacific coast. This rate is made up of 27 cents rail haul from Pittsburgh to tidewater, 30 cents ocean freight, 13 cents covering wharfage, handling, insurance, and the rail freight from the harbor to Los Angeles.

We understand this price was brought about and is maintained through an agreement between the Bethlehem Steel Co. and the United States Steel Co., the latter having the only sheet plants on the coast. Bethlehem Steel, with a plant located at Sparrows Point, will ship sheets into Pittsburgh for the basing price of $2.25, paying 27 cents freight, and netting $1.98. The same sheets, shipped to the coast, net the steel company $2.25, plus the 27 cents freight from Pittsburgh, or $2.52.

Continued lowering of freight rates from eastern points of manufacture on finished products, lowering of minimums, and widening of groupings places coast manufacturers in an almost impossible competitive situation, where no relief can be obtained from the inequitable high prices paid for the steel used in the manufacture of these commodities.

As a user of in excess of 10,000 tons of steel per year we are vitally interested in some relief. The price set-up is inequitable, discriminatory, and an injustice to industries located in any of the coast States.

Yours very truly,

BOYLE MANUFACTURING CO., INC.,
W. J. BOYLE, JR.,
Secretary-Treasurer.

LOS ANGELES, March 6, 1934.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

HONORABLE SIR: Confirming our conversation relative to Senate resolution, introduced by your good self, calling upon the Trade Commission to investigate the effect of the code on price raising and price fixing in the steel industry:

As a coast manufacturer of steel products, we are vitally interested in this matter, especially in connection with the basing points for prices of steel as established in the code. This is a price-fixing device which seriously affects, adversely, the interests of every manufacturer and user of steel on the Pacific coast. There are steel mills located at Pittsburg, Calif., a short distance north of San Francisco, and at Torrance, Calif., a short distance from Los Angeles. It is our understanding that the labor costs are identical with those of the eastern mills, being set by the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel, & Tin Workers of North America. Abundance of natural gas and hydroelectric power provide fuel and power to these mills at as low a cost, or lower, than where other mills are located.

Prices on the coast for scrap iron or steel, used in the making of open-hearth steel, have been considerably lower than the price paid by eastern mills, for the reason that there are no users of this scrap, to any extent, other than the two mills above referred to, except what is used by one or two mills making small shapes of bars and rods.

It is true that the pig iron used by the mills making sheet steel is brought from Utah, and that there is an item of freight to be taken into consideration here; however, it is our understanding that their ore and limestone deposits are located very close to their blast furnaces, eliminating the long haul which the eastern mills have to pay, where the iron ore comes principally from the deposits of Michigan.

Steel purchased from the coast mills costs a manufacturer located on the coast exactly the same as though it were shipped in from the East. The present base price of steel sheets is $2.25, Pittsburgh. To arrive at the selling price in Los Angeles, the all-rail freight rate from Pittsburgh to Baltimore of 27 cents per hundredweight is added; 30 cents per hundredweight for ocean transportation; 13 cents per hundredweight for wharfage, handling, insurance, and transportation from San Pedro to Los Angeles, making a total of 70 cents.

We are informed that this condition is maintained through a close working arrangement between the Bethlehem Steel Co., with a mill located at Sparrows Point, and the United States Steel Co., with mills on the coast. If sheets are shipped from Sparrows Point to a customer in Pittsburgh, freight of 27 cents is paid thereon, which, deducted from the $2.25, leaves a net of $1.98. If this same steel is shipped to a Pacific coast consumer, the rate of 27 cents is added to the $2.25 base, making $2.52 net, which the steel company would receive.

As a user of in excess of 10,000 tons of steel per year, even this penalty of 27 cents per hundredweight penalizes us on our yearly consumption in excess of $54,000. Freight rates on the commodities we manufacture are continually being reduced, supposedly to meet water competition. Minimums are being reduced and groupings enlarged. Labor costs in our lines have been considerably higher on the coast than in the East, and at the present time are higher than in the Southern States. Considerable scrap loss accrues on some of the products we manufacture, and we have paid the freight penalty on this offal.

As a result of these conditions it is impossible for a coast industry to manufacture some of its products and sell at a profit. Remedying this unjust condition and establishing equitable prices on steel would greatly stimulate and increase the manufacture of steel products on the coast.

We are enclosing a somewhat more condensed outline of the situation, as per your request to the writer when in your office. It is perfectly agreeable to us, if you so desire, to read any of this correspondence into the RECORD.

Yours very truly,

BOYLE MANUFACTURING CO., INC.,
W. J. BOYLE, JR.,
Secretary-Treasurer.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., March 12, 1934.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

Referring to the second paragraph, page 2, of our letter of March 6, wherein freight rate from Pittsburgh to Buffalo is referred to, this should read from Pittsburgh to Baltimore. Kindly make this correction.

BOYLE MANUFACTURING CO., INC.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in what the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has said, especially with respect to the small business man. Many of the towns of my State are built up around small industries. The prosperity of those industries is the prosperity of the communities and the prosperity of the State.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a letter received from the Governor of my State as to how the N.R.A. is working with respect to these small industries. I will quote a part of it:

There seems to be such a general feeling among business men in Vermont to the effect that the small manufacturers and the small business men are badly harmed by the N.R.A. that I feel I ought to call this to your attention.

I have been very hesitant to make any suggestions which might be classed as criticisms, while at the same time I am endeavoring to cooperate fully with Federal officials to give all Federal relief agencies the best possible results in our State. I am satisfied, however, that the theories on which the N.R.A. is founded are not working out in practice up here to the benefit of our communities. Part of this is probably due to the theories themselves and part to lack of enforcement of the provisions of the N.R.A. Day after day I run across new instances where some small manufacturers are being underbid by large manufacturers from outside the State in manner absolutely contrary to the code provisions. I have come to the unwilling conclusion that if present conditions continue, our small industries in Vermont must themselves disregard the N.R.A. and fight their own battles as best they may.

I write you this letter for the sole purpose of giving you information about conditions here in Vermont in order that you may take such course of action as you think best. I am writing a similar letter to Senator AUSTIN and to Representative PLUMLEY, as I feel that our entire congressional delegation should appreciate the seriousness of the situation in Vermont.

I do not have a solution, but I am pretty well satisfied that if there is not a solution before long, many Vermont manufacturers will either declare their independence of the N.R.A. or go out of business.

This letter is signed by Stanley C. Wilson, Governor.

My sole purpose in reading this letter, Mr. President, is to substantiate by the actual experience of the people of my State what has been said by the distinguished Senator from Idaho.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTION—FURTHER CONFERENCE

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6604) to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes; insisting upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. TYDINGS. On behalf of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], who is not in the Chamber at this time, I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments, agree to a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. TRAMMELL, Mr. WALSH, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. HALE, and Mr. METCALF conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8573) to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I cannot give my support to the bill under consideration, but I know that opposition to the same will be futile. Upon a number of occasions during the past few weeks I have discussed directly and indirectly the provisions of the measure and have assigned reasons which I believed warranted its rejection.

The Philippine question, as Senators know, is not a new one. For more than 30 years it has been before the American Congress and before the American people. In my opinion, a majority of the American people regret that a war was waged by the United States against the Filipinos and that their Territory was brought under the authority of this Republic. That view has been strengthened because our Government, particularly under the leadership of Woodrow Wilson, announced the right of the people to determine the form of government under which they should live. Oppressed peoples in various parts of the world for more than a century have regarded this Republic as the champion of liberty, the expositor of equal rights, and the exemplar of democratic institutions. Millions of people left their homes in foreign lands because of their belief that under the flag of this Republic they would be able to enjoy greater liberty, as well as economic and industrial advantages, denied them in the lands of their birth. America was regarded as an asylum for the oppressed of all nations and the standard bearer of justice and an example to all nations.

The Fathers of this Republic were familiar with colonial governments and the oppression, and, indeed, the despotism, to which dependencies and colonies were subjected.

The Declaration of Independence was a challenge to tyranny and oppression of every form, and the Constitution of the United States was a charter under which equal rights—political and economic—might be enjoyed by all. The great men who framed the Constitution and established this Republic never conceived that it would adopt policies and practices common among monarchical governments of the world, and therefore provision was not made in the Constitution for the control of alien peoples under the colonial forms prevailing in the Old World. They believed that all persons under the flag were entitled to equal rights and privileges and that wherever the flag of this Republic went there the Constitution went for the protection of the people and in order that they might have the benefits and the liberties enjoyed by all American citizens.

The conquest of the Philippines by our Government was opposed by millions of American citizens. They believed that an injustice had been done to a weak people, and they also believed that a great injury had been done to the Republic itself. Great jurists attacked our policy as violative of the letter and the spirit of the Constitution, and leading statesmen of our country inveighed against a course which they regarded as an assault upon our institutions and a moral wrong against the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands. But the reasons assigned and the protests made were unavailing. Tens of thousands of brave American boys sailed across the seas to fight and conquer an alien people and to thrust upon them an authority against which they violently struggled for more than 2 years. But the conquest was complete. There was superimposed upon the people of those islands far across the Pacific a military form of government which, as the years went by, was modified, until important changes in the governmental structure were made and a form of local self-government granted.

Promises were made by those in authority in the United States and by Congress itself that when a stable form of government had been established in the Philippines the United States would withdraw its authority and turn over the government to the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands.

I have upon a number of occasions during the past 10 or 12 years challenged attention of the Senate and of the country to the solemn promises made and the failure of our Government to fulfill such promises and grant the freedom to the Filipinos which they so sincerely coveted. Notwithstanding the promises of freedom to which I have referred, excuses have been found and pretexts assigned for refusal to redeem such promises. There are some Americans who are unwilling to see the Filipinos have a free and independent government. They are unwilling that the United States should withdraw its authority from the Philippines; and insist that, the flag of our country having been unfurled, it must never be taken down. There is another group of our citizens who profess attachment to democratic principles and admit that the Filipinos are entitled to their independence, but they insist that no definite period can be fixed when the sovereignty of the United States shall be withdrawn and the Filipinos be permitted to set up a government of their own choosing. It is argued by some that the Filipinos are not yet capable of organizing and maintaining a republican form of government or a liberal and stable governmental structure. There are those who contend that notwithstanding the great progress made by the Filipinos along industrial, economic, cultural, and political lines, there is not economic stability sufficient to justify the belief that in this period of depression and conflicting economic and political forces a Philippine government could survive.

It is needless to say that history is replete with examples of strong and powerful nations asserting plausible pretexts for conquering distant races and peoples and imposing upon them a form of government and political institutions framed and maintained by the conquering power. Japan has assigned reasons for the annexation of territory and imposing upon the people therein such political forms as best suited her purpose.

Congress, in 1916, solemnly declared that the Philippines should be free as soon as a stable form of government was established. One of the greatest Americans, Woodrow Wilson, in the last message which he submitted to Congress, declared that a stable government had been established and that the Filipinos were entitled to the redemption of the promise made by the United States. There has been no valid reason for withholding the boon of independence which the Filipinos desire and which has been promised them. Measures have been introduced in Congress for the past 10 or 12 years which, if enacted into law, would have enabled the Filipinos to set up a government in accordance with their ideals. I have upon various occasions during the past 10 years introduced bills in the Senate under which the Filipinos were authorized to elect delegates to a constitutional convention, at which the framework of a free and independent state might be prepared.

The Filipinos, particularly since the Jones Act of 1916, have been earnest and constant in their appeals to the American people and to the Congress for independence. They have frequently sent able representatives to plead their cause, and the petitions submitted and the papers presented have eloquently set forth the justice of the claims made and the reasons why independence should be no longer delayed.

In discussing the Philippine question I have heretofore referred to the papers which were submitted by the American colonists to the British Crown setting forth their grievances and demands. The Filipinos have presented, as I have indicated, in eloquent and powerful memorials, petitions, and addresses to the American people and the American Congress, reasons why they were entitled to establish an independent government.

At the last session of Congress further appeals were made by the Filipinos for legislation under which an independent Philippine Republic might be organized. I offered a bill in the Senate under the terms of which the petitions of the Filipinos would have been answered and a Philippine Republic established. Congress rejected the bill which I offered and passed what was known as the "Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill." I was opposed to that measure, believing then, as I believe now, that it was not a wise or just measure; that it was in no sense a redemption of the promise made by the American people and by the American Congress; that it would not be accepted by the Filipinos, but if accepted that it would aggravate the situation; that it would be provocative of resentments and internal conflicts, perhaps domestic violence, and place the United States in an equivocal, uncertain, embarrassing, if not dangerous situation for an indefinite period of time. The bill, however, was passed but was rejected by the Filipinos. It seemed to me that with the rejection of this measure it was the duty of Congress to promptly pass an independence bill, one under the terms of which the Filipinos, within a period of not exceeding 3 years, would be permitted to frame and adopt a constitution, select the officers of their new state, and set up a government that would meet the ideals and aspirations of the people. Accordingly, when this Congress met I offered such a measure, but unfortunately it encountered opposition, and the same forces which put through the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill united in opposing what I conceived to be a just and proper bill and in giving their support to the hybrid measure now before us which with but unimportant changes is the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill.

I confess that I am amazed that this measure which was so contemptuously defeated and repudiated by the Filipinos should have been resurrected and galvanized and thrust into the present Congress.

Mr. President, that bill did not meet the desires of the Filipinos. It was a poor substitute for that which they desired.

Several days ago I referred to the action of the Philippine Legislature and the overwhelming opposition to that bill. The sentiment of the people was against it, and, as stated, the legislature contemptuously rejected it. The measure was presented to the people, and a few able Filipinos strongly urged its approval. Two of them stand high in the councils of the Filipinos. They had been sent by the Filipinos to the last Congress charged with the duty of urging immediate, absolute, and complete independence for the Philippines. Upon prior occasions these representatives had eloquently pleaded for immediate independence. The provisions in the Hare-

Hawes-Cutting bill would have been most repugnant to them and as wholly unworthy this great Republic in dealing with the Filipinos. However, after the bill was passed at the last session of Congress they returned to the Philippine Islands and attempted to defend the measure. My information is that before they had proceeded far in canvassing the archipelago they discovered that the overwhelming sentiment of the people was hostile to the bill. Thereupon they abandoned their efforts to secure its approval by the Filipinos, either by mass conventions or by provincial counsels. As I have stated, the Philippine Legislature, when the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill was finally voted upon, overwhelmingly refused ratification.

Mr. President, I believe that with the rejection of this measure the Philippine people believed that it was dead and that it had been laid away in a grave that would not yield up its dead. The legislature, after refusing ratification, adopted a resolution designating a commission headed by Mr. Quezon to come to the United States and present to the President the views of the Philippine people, their opposition to the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill, and their desire for immediate and absolute independence. Their mission also was to appeal to the American people and to Congress to enact a measure in consonance with their desires and their appeals for many years in favor of independence. This commission was not sent here, Mr. President, to attempt to revise or revive the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill. The members were sent here for the purpose of again presenting the demands of the Filipinos for independence.

Mr. Quezon, in a radio address delivered soon after the passage of the measure referred to, presented strong reasons for its rejection and stated in effect that the Filipinos would only be satisfied by the passage of a law that would enable them to establish at an early date an independent government. I do not desire, of course, to question the good faith of Mr. Quezon, or any other person, but I confess to some surprise when I learned that he had departed from the instructions given the commission and forsaken the views which he has so often expressed for immediate and absolute independence, and has, as I am informed, signified that he will support this discredited and rejected Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill and join in efforts to galvanize it into life, and with but unimportant changes superimpose it upon the Filipinos.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has advised us that Mr. Quezon has given his consent to this measure now before us, and the Senator urges, if I understand him, that with the adherence of Mr. Quezon to the policy now presented, Congress should promptly enact the bill which was recently rejected by the Filipinos.

Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] in a powerful and eloquent address this morning pointed out some of the defects and dangers of this revived Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill, a bill which passed the House and Senate during the last session of Congress, was vetoed by President Hoover, and then passed over his veto. I commend to the Senate and to the country the address of the Senator from Michigan. It furnished ample reasons for the rejection of this bill.

It would be a work of supererogation upon my part to analyze the bill before us and to point out its multitudinous defects and the dangers incident to its enactment. I am led to believe by statements made by the Senator from Maryland that he would not be in favor of the bill if he believed that it was to continue in force during the period prescribed by its terms. In view of statements made by the Senator, including the reported views of Mr. Quezon, I assume that it is hoped and possibly believed that the bill before us if enacted into law will be abrogated long before the date fixed for its terms. The Senator from Maryland stated in his address last evening, if I correctly understood him, that he had received word from a number of the Filipinos now in the islands indicating their submission to this bill, or at least that they would not oppose it. Among those named by the Senator was Mr. Paredes. Only a few days ago this same Mr. Paredes cabled the Philippine Commissioner, Mr. GUEVARA, who is now in Washington, as follows:

Resolutions supporting King bill—

That is the bill which I offered granting independence within a very short period of time—and opposing extension time limit for action on Hare-Hawes-Cutting law adopted by Ilocos Sur, Bataan, and Isabela provincial boards and by councils five municipalities of Bataan and also at mass meetings held at six municipalities same Province. Please transmit message to Congress.

PAREDES.

I have received information that a few days ago meetings were held in many municipalities in the Philippine Islands in opposition to the pending bill and endorsement given to the measure which I introduced providing independence for the Filipinos within a very short time. Four days later another telegram was sent Commissioner Guevara, reading as follows:

Resolutions supporting King bill and opposing extension time limit for action on Hare-Hawes-Cutting Law adopted at mass meeting held at Naga by people from different municipalities of Camarines, Sur at Capiz, by people of Capiz at Dinalupihan Bataan, by Consolidado Party thereof, and by following municipal councils San Leonardo and San Isidro, Nueva, Ecija, Batac, Slocos Norte, and Dinalupihan Bataan. Please transmit to President and Congress.

PAREDES.

Mr. President, I have referred to Mr. Paredes for the reason that he is, as I am advised, a rather important figure in the Philippine Islands and is one of the leaders in one of the political groups. It appears that he has advised Congress through the Commissioner that municipalities and Provinces in mass meetings and by official action oppose the Hawes-Hare-Cutting bill and the attempt to revive it, and at the same time he expresses his approval, as did the meetings in the municipalities, and so forth, referred to, of the bill which I have offered in the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to call to the attention of the Senator from Utah the fact that our commerce with the Philippine Islands in 1932—

Mr. KING. I do not yield for a speech.

Mr. TYDINGS. I want to ask the Senator a question, and I have not yet given the facts upon which the question is to be predicated.

Mr. KING. Does it relate to Mr. Paredes?

Mr. TYDINGS. It relates to the Senator's bill.

Mr. KING. I shall be very glad to have the Senator interrupt me when I come to that point. I am discussing now the observations of the Senator last evening.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well; I shall wait.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator later.

It begins to be apparent why there has been some change in the attitude of a few Filipinos who until a short time ago were violently opposing the attempt to resuscitate the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has complimented the Senator from Maryland upon the zeal and success attending his efforts in converting the opponents of the bill into qualified if not full support of the same. I can see, however, reading from one of the telegrams inserted in the RECORD last evening, one of the reasons for the success of the Senator in affecting these conversions. The Senator read a telegram from Mr. Sumulong, who had been designated one of the commission to visit the United States for the purpose of protesting against the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill and for demanding immediate independence of the Philippines. For some reason best known to Mr. Sumulong, he had not entered upon the execution of the task committed to his hands. Evidently the Senator from Maryland has communicated with him, and it appears from his telegram the Senator indicated that something would or might be done in addition to the elimination from the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill of an unimportant provision, that if the Philippine leaders would recant and accept the dead and defunct Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill, efforts would be made to regitalize it. The cablegram received by the Senator from Maryland, as he read it into the RECORD last evening, is as follows:

MANILA, February 24, 1934.

Senator TYDINGS,
Washington, D.C.:

Replying to your last cablegram, I agree to the extension of the Hawes-Cutting law, provided same is amended according to your proposal by eliminating entirely military reservations and leaving naval reservations for settlement by agreement between United States and Philippine Republic and of your assurance to later consider sympathetically other objections to act.

Mr. President, one is justified in reaching the conclusion, after reading this telegram, that promises were made, or at least assurances given, that objectionable provisions in this measure, if enacted, would be sympathetically regarded for the purpose of having them eliminated. Congress, however, has given no assurances—and I assume will give no assurances—that if this bill shall be passed, it will be amended or changed or modified.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I may say to the Senator from Utah that I have all the telegrams which passed between the leaders of the Filipino people and me, and in every single one of those telegrams I made it abundantly clear that any promise I should make would be only an individual promise, which would not be binding upon the Congress. But having proved my friendship and regard for the Filipino people by voting for every amendment in their favor during 18 months when their independence bill was under discussion, they have confidence that I would do my best to work out imperfections after the bill is passed, because they know from past experience that I have not broken faith with them or acceded to the wishes of selfish interests in the United States which want to get rid of them simply, solely, and only because they could then get the markets in the United States which the Filipinos are supplying.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, no one questions the good faith of the Senator or his friendship for the Filipinos. I might observe, however, that in my opinion we would be doing a greater service to the Filipinos if we would immediately cast aside this hybrid bill and pass the measure which I have offered, which presents a clear-cut, plain, unequivocal plan under which the Filipinos, within a short time, may achieve their independence. The Filipinos are warranted in entertaining for the Senator not only a high degree of confidence but of affection. I am not questioning in any degree his devotion to the Filipinos. I do not, however, agree with the measure which he is advocating any more than I approved of it when it was under consideration at the last session of Congress. As stated, it was peremptorily and, indeed, contemptuously rejected by the Filipinos. It is now before us with but slight modifications. If the Filipinos rejected it before, I can see no reason why it would meet with their approval now. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has stated that this bill is a bad bill—so imperfect, so unjust, and so unfair in many of its provisions that it ought to be rejected by the Filipinos as it was rejected by the Philippine Legislature after full discussion.

I call attention to the fact, however, that without any desire to be critical, the support of this measure by Mr. Sumulong who only a short time ago denounced it, must have resulted from some communications sent him by the Senator and perhaps others and by assurances that he—the Senator—would sympathetically consider other objections to the measure.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I may say to the Senator from Utah that the opposition of nearly all the Filipino leaders who did not agree with my request that they adhere to the pending bill was occasioned by the fact that they wanted the sugar allotment in the bill increased, the coconut-oil allotment in the bill increased, and the cordage allotment in the bill increased. I am in favor of increasing those allotments, as I believe them unfair to the Filipino people, but I explained to them that Congress was not in favor of that, that we had fought that battle out on the floor already, and that in my opinion there could be no extensions of these allotments, and that therefore they were in the position of having to indicate whether they wanted the bill with these allotments as they now stand or no bill at all; and that for that reason I thought we were confronted with a practical rather than a theoretical situation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when the bill was before the Philippine people for discussion and consideration, some of the major objections, indeed the important and paramount objections, were not those dealing with sugar. In an address a few days ago I mentioned several of them. I now call attention to resolutions adopted by the veterans who served under Aguinaldo, resolutions, I am advised, in the drafting of which he participated, which condemn many of the provisions of the Hawes-Cutting Act, and the least important of the criticisms of the measure were those relating to a limitation upon exports from the islands to the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to interrupt the Senator; and if he prefers that I not do so, I shall wait until he concludes; but if he wishes me to present the committee's viewpoint as he brings up various phases of the bill, I shall continue to interrupt him. I shall accede to his wishes in the matter.

Mr. KING. I think probably I had better finish this phase of the matter. I shall refer to the Philippine veterans' memorial or petition in a few moments. At this time I desire to read from a telegram from General Aguinaldo which the Senator from Maryland had inserted in the RECORD yesterday. It is addressed to Senator TYDINGS, dated February 24:

In reply to your cablegram, and in view of your commitment therein to amend Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act, completely eliminating military reservations, leaving provisions regarding naval reservations for settlement by agreement between United States and Philippine Republic, and in consideration of your promise to consider sympathetically amendments to other objectionable provisions of law, I agree with your proposition to extend time of act.

Mr. President, General Aguinaldo, when the Hare-Hawes-Cutting measure was under consideration and after it had passed, denounced it. In an able address he analyzed its provisions and announced his conclusion that it should not receive the approval of the Filipinos. Nothing, Mr. President, has taken place since then to warrant a change in the views of General Aguinaldo or the Filipinos. The elimination of one little clause in the bill, relating to the retention of bases for military operations, should not and cannot warrant this overnight conversion. In the bill before us there are retained the provisions of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law relating to naval bases; and there is nothing preventing their retention indefinitely, because it is left to mutual agreement between the United States Government and the Philippine Republic, after it shall have been formed, with a view to determining what, if any, modification shall be made in the law respecting their retention.

Mr. President, I received the following telegram 2 or 3 hours ago from one of the leading citizens of the Philippine Islands, a man who is connected with one of the important political organizations:

Filipino masses indignant upon approval McDuffie-Tydings bill, Sakdalista Party respectfully submits that the Jones law should be complied with by immediate withdrawal of American sovereignty and recognition Philippine independence.

CAJUCOM.

There, Mr. President, is the voice of the Philippine people, not the voice of a few overnight converts who have or claim to have political importance in the Philippine Islands and who only a short time ago were denouncing the Hawes-Cutting bill as iniquitous and as an injustice to the Filipinos.

Mr. President, one of the most important figures of the Philippine Islands is Bishop Aglipay. Senators may know that in the islands there is a Christian church, something along the lines of the Greek Orthodox Church. Many of its adherents have separated from the Catholic and other churches. It is one of the dominating forces in the islands, I am told by a distinguished Filipino who is here in the Capital and who, by the way, was one of the delegates sent here with Mr. Quezon to oppose any resuscitation of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill and to plead for independence, that this bishop, this prelate, has a following of at least 3,000,000 people. In his wire to me of the 7th instant he says:

Appreciating your noble attitude, we request you insist upon the approval of the King bill.

I have another telegram, Mr. President, and more will come when the people throughout the Philippine Archipelago are advised of the passage of this act—telegrams conveying the same views as were expressed in the two which I have just read—which is as follows:

American business men control the correspondents. No majority leader accepts the modification. Nobody mentions 17 years. Aguinaldo veterans, labor organizations, Philippine church, entire people, are supporting the King bill. Recent monster demonstrations best evidence. If defeated will resort to boycott.

SOTTO.

Mr. President, the passage of this bill—and doubtless it will pass—will not put an end to the question. It will not make for peace and harmony and felicity in the islands. There will be resentments, open and secret, to the measure and to many of its provisions. That opposition will be provocative of unrest and confusion, indicating the unwisdom of reviving the Hawes-Cutting bill and the wisdom of enacting a measure which will give to the Filipinos the liberty they have desired for so many years. Perhaps if the passage of this measure were followed by another, which naturally changed it and provided for an early independence, opposition would be largely abated.

Mr. President, I read in this morning's New York Times a dispatch from the Philippine Islands, as follows:

MANILA, March 20.—General apathy greeted the passage of the new Philippine independence bill by the House of Representatives yesterday. There were no celebrations by either faction in Manila and no flags were flying, though both groups declared they were well satisfied. Hushed voices, long faces, and a general air of apprehension betray the general feeling, however. The Manila Bulletin—

The only independent paper, may I say, so far as I am advised, in the islands—which is recognized as impartial in the local political dispute, though naturally it is opposed to the present independence legislation, expresses the general feeling editorially when it says:

"The general significance of the quiet local reaction toward the Washington administration and the congressional action on the Tydings-McDuffie bill is explained by a simple fact which is commonly recognized but not officially proclaimed. The fact is the bill actually pleases nobody and is technically acceptable to the various political camps only because as a compromise it is something which cannot be dodged. The measure is basically the same in its objectionable features as its predecessor, the Hawes law, which was rejected for sound reasons."

Mr. President, there are many implications in that statement. Undoubtedly the Filipino leaders, here and elsewhere, have been led to believe that it is this Tydings-McDuffie-Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill or nothing. Indeed, an article in a Philippine newspaper—and I hope that it is an incorrect quotation of an observation made by the able Senator—indicates that there have been statements to the effect that if the Filipinos rejected the Hawes-Cutting bill as now before the Senate they will get no measure whatever. I read a few sentences from an editorial appearing in the Filipino Herald of recent date, as follows:

Senator MILLARD E. TYDINGS, Chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions—

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Since the Senator is reading from a newspaper which mentions my name, I think it only fair to announce that the newspaper is the patron of the anti-independence sentiment in the Philippine Islands and therefore it should be read in the light of that fact.

Mr. KING. That may be. This is the statement to which I referred, and it purports to quote a statement made by my friend from Maryland as follows:

If, after the elections in June, the legislature again fails to take action or acts adversely on the law, it will serve as a notice to the Congress that the Filipino people do not desire independence and want to continue under the present status.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I made such a statement, and I reiterate it on this floor—I made a similar statement a moment ago—that there is no way the Filipino people can receive higher allotments of the commodities they must sell in order to live than those already in this bill; and the actual test of performance proves my observations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that is not the question involved. As I understand this observation—and I am not offering criticism of anyone—it is, that if the Filipinos do not accept this Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill, and that means the measure now before us, it will serve as a notice to Congress that the Filipino people do not desire independence but want to maintain the present political status.

Mr. President, I do not agree with my friend in that observation. Doubtless that statement—and I have received corroborative evidence of the effect of it—did influence some Filipinos, and led them to believe—whether many or few, I do not know—that if they did not accept this bill, then, they would not get independence but would remain under the present Jones law.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, when I said I made that statement I did not mean it to be interpreted as the Senator is now interpreting it. Agreement always stops when interpretation begins.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I merely said that I had corroborative evidence that some people believed that that was a declaration that if they did not accept this bill they would get nothing.

Mr. TYDINGS. I reiterate that statement, and I do not believe they can get a better bill than the one that we have before us. I myself do not like it, but I am trying to give them the best that can be given them which they will take.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator that he does not like this bill. I am sure of that because of the Democratic views of my friend from Maryland, than whom there is no better Democrat in the United States or one who more perfectly or clearly interprets the Constitution of the United States. But I believe, Mr. President, that he is in error in suggesting that unless the Filipinos shall take this bill, which they have rejected, a bill which they have condemned, the United States will keep them indefinitely in their present political status and will deny the appeals which they have made in the past or the appeals which may be made in the future for independence and the liberty which they covet.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, by way of interpretation, let me say to the Senator that even as we debate this bill, with its limited sugar quota, in another place in this Capitol a bill is being written which would limit their sugar quota still further, and in still another place in this Capitol a committee is now meeting considering a measure which would tax Filipino products for the benefit of American products. If that is not concrete evidence of the lack of a desire on the part of Congress to deal fairly with the Philippine people, then I should like to know what is evidence.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KING. Let me first answer the Senator from Maryland. I agree with him that there is an apparent lack of purpose on the part of the Congress to deal fairly with the Filipinos; I think Congress has exhibited upon a number of occasions an inclination not to deal with them fairly, and I think the passage of this bill will be further evidence of the disinclination of the American Congress to deal with the Filipinos fairly; but the Senator remembers that "while the lamp holds out to burn", there is a chance for conversion. The present Congress is not the only Congress; the Congress does not speak always the sentiments of the American people; and I believe, Mr. President, that upon this great moral and political issue, an issue of justice, the American Congress and the American people, in the near future, will demand that justice be done to the Filipinos and that they be accorded the liberty which, quoting Mr. Wilson in the last message which he delivered to Congress, "It is our privilege and duty to give to them the liberty which they covet."

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I support Philippine independence, not only for the reason stated by the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Utah, but I do not see why at the same time we cannot perform an act of charity at home. We cannot move the Filipinos 10,000 miles over here into the territory of the United States. They do not have the kind of living conditions we have; they have not the same climate. I have great trouble in reconciling myself to the view that in our pity and charity we should go to the point of undertaking to Americanize the Filipinos. We have an American industry here which is growing, and we need to lift Americans engaged in that industry to the standards enjoyed by others of the American people. If we can bring about a condition under which these Asiatics, living under entirely different conditions, and under entirely different climatic conditions from those obtaining in America, may so adjust themselves that they will be able to live on a level with oriental standards, according to the oriental manner and oriental customs, enjoying the ordinary fruits of other oriental peoples, that seems to me to be about all the duty we have to discharge toward them.

I am concerned about getting rid of these people on a fair basis, but I am also concerned about taking care of the American people. We need to protect our own sugar industry. That is why we need to get them out of the way. We have no business being linked up with them.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator that there is a question involved here that is far more important than any material question about sugar or coconut oil. The question involved is whether or not this great Republic, having imposed by military force a government upon the Filipinos which they do not desire, having overcome the government which they had established, having governed them for 30 years, notwithstanding they have appealed over and over again through the voice of representatives who have come carrying their pleas to Congress and the Government—the question is whether we should ignore their pleas and deny their aspirations for liberty and freedom and the petitions which they have presented.

Concede, for the sake of the argument, that, under the United States, advancement—culturally, materially, educationally, and morally—would be more rapid than under a government of their own choosing, nevertheless it is their right to have a government of their own choice.

I say, Mr. President, the question is a moral question. I have no doubt that when our fathers were sending petitions to Great Britain for greater liberty, many of the people then living along the Atlantic coast and in Great Britain believed that under the flag of Great Britain the colonists who had settled upon the bleak New England shores could have greater prosperity than if they had their own flag. Nevertheless, Hancock and Jefferson and Adams and Washington and other members of that immortal band rejected that view and argument; they preferred freedom to material gains.

There is no doubt that some nations, by reason of their culture and wealth, might be of benefit to backward nations, and that if the latter submitted to their rule they might make greater progress within a limited period. Nevertheless, those nations that want independence, those peoples who desire freedom, are entitled to the same; and the mere fact that they might secure material gain by remaining under some other government ought not to deprive them of the realization of their aspirations.

There is something in this world more precious than money, more precious than worldly wealth or power, and that is liberty and opportunity for self-development.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I agree with the Senator from Utah absolutely. We had no business taking over the Philippines. I have not yet seen anyone who supports or justifies the action of the United States in taking over the Philippine Islands. I understand the Senator from Utah takes that position. We had no business taking over the Philippine Islands. I am in favor of turning them loose. I am in favor of turning them loose under the King bill because it is the shortest bill.

The point I was making to the Senator, which he overlooked, is that we are doing a great deal more injustice to Americans by keeping the Philippine Islands than we are doing to the Filipinos. We do not owe the Filipinos so much that we have to go over there and try to Americanize them. We will never be able to Americanize them. The whole world is disturbed. I think the Filipinos should swim along with the Asiatics; in other words, according to what is over there. The Lord gave them a better climate for some purposes and probably a worse climate for other purposes. We ought to turn them loose and do something about taking care of the sugar industry and the cotton industry that we have been endeavoring to build up in this country.

This policy is evidently being extended to where we have not only gone the Philippine route with the Philippines, but we have decided to take over Cuba and refinance them a little. We will have to pay the bonds which have been issued on their account.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not bring Cuba into the discussion because I shall not have time to enter that field today.

Mr. LONG. I shall discuss it in my own time.

Mr. KING. I am glad the Senator shares the views that some of us have expressed that the Filipinos are entitled to immediate and absolute independence. In view of the statement he has made, may I call attention to the fact that the Democratic Party has condemned this mad adventure in the Pacific; at least, if it has not expressly condemned the adventure, it has promised independence to the Philippines.

In the first Democratic National Convention after the Treaty of Paris, which was July 4, 1900, I believe, it was stated:

We declare again that all governments instituted among men derive their just powers from the consent of the governed; that any government not based upon the consent of the governed is a tyranny, and that to impose upon any people a government of force is to substitute the methods of imperialism for those of a republic. * * * We assert that no nation can long endure half republic and half empire, and we warn the American people that imperialism abroad will lead quickly and inevitably to despotism at home. * * * We condemn and denounce the Philippine policy of the present administration.

In 1904 the Democratic National Convention adopted a plank reading in part as follows:

We oppose, as fervently as did George Washington himself, an indefinite, irresponsible, discretionary, and vague absolutism and a policy of colonial exploitation, no matter where or by whom invoked or exercised. We believe, with Thomas Jefferson and John Adams, that no government has a right to make one set of laws for those "at home" and another and a different set of laws, absolute in their character, for those "in the Colonies." All men under the American flag are entitled to the protection of the institutions whose emblem the flag is.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] does himself great credit when he announces he will not favor a policy which would discriminate against persons who live under the flag and deny to them, because they are not upon the shores of continental United States, the rights of American citizens.

In 1908 the Democratic National Convention declared:

We condemn the experiment in imperialism as an inexcusable blunder which has involved us in enormous expenses, brought us weakness instead of strength, and laid our Nation open to the charge of abandoning the fundamental doctrine of self-government.

In 1912 the platform on which Mr. Wilson, that great Democrat, great liberal, great progressive, great statesman, was elected, contains the following statement:

We reaffirm the position thrice announced by the Democracy in national convention assembled against a policy of imperialism and colonial exploitation in the Philippines or elsewhere. We condemn the experiment in imperialism as an inexcusable blunder, which has involved us in enormous expenses, brought us weakness instead of strength, and laid our Nation open to the charge of abandonment of the fundamental doctrine of self-government.

That is substantially the language in the plank adopted 4 years previously in the Democratic National Convention.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this point to insert in my remarks, without taking the time to read them, the platform declarations of the Democratic Party at each national convention since 1912.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The platform declarations are as follows:

1916

We heartily endorse the provisions of the bill recently passed by the House of Representatives, further promoting self-government in the Philippine Islands, as being in fulfillment of the policy declared by the Democratic Party in its last national platform, and we reiterate our endorsement of the purpose of ultimate independence for the Philippine Islands, expressed in the preamble of that measure.

1920

We favor the granting of independence without unnecessary delay to the 10,500,000 inhabitants of the Philippine Islands.

1924

The Filipino people have succeeded in maintaining a stable government and have thus fulfilled the only condition laid down by Congress as a prerequisite to the granting of independence. We declare that it is now our liberty and our duty to keep our promise to these people by granting them immediately the independence which they so honorably covet.

1928

The Filipino people have succeeded in maintaining a stable government and have thus fulfilled the only condition laid down by the Congress as a prerequisite to the granting of independence. We declare that it is now our duty to keep our promise to these people by granting them immediately the independence which they so honorably covet.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was a delegate to a number of Democratic National Conventions, including 1920, 1924, and 1928, and was also a member of the committee on platform and resolutions at each of these conventions. I had the honor to prepare and submit the planks relating to the Philippines adopted in the conventions of 1920, 1924, and 1928.

Mr. President, a few moments ago I referred to some telegrams and information recently received from residents of the Philippines in opposition to the present bill. On January 31, 1934, there was published in the Washington Times a dispatch from Manila reading as follows:

Senator King's bill, now pending in Congress, providing for Philippine independence within 3 years, was endorsed by a legislative majority last night. The move coincides with the wishes of the Quezon party. He is now heading an independent mission in Washington.

That is to say, the legislative assembly on the last day of January of this year endorsed the bill which gives to the Philippines independence along the lines indicated in the measure which I introduced and which is now pending in this body. As stated a few moments ago, Mr. Quezon was sent here with Mr. Gabaldon and a few others for the purpose of protesting against the attempt to revive the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill and also for the purpose of obtaining legislation providing for the immediate independence of the Philippines.

May I say in passing that one of that delegation, Mr. Isauro Gabaldon, who was formerly one of the Resident Commissioners of the Philippine Islands, has refused his assent to this bill, and has declined, regardless of any assurances given or otherwise, to ally himself with the other delegates who came here under instructions to ask for independence; and he is still seeking to carry out the purpose of the mission, and is insisting that a measure shall be passed giving immediate independence to the Filipinos.

I do not wish to be critical of a distinguished representative of the Filipinos; but at one of the great mass conventions in the Philippine Islands, as shown by resolutions which were sent me, and as shown by the Washington Post of February 4, 1934, which contained a dispatch from Manila dated February 3, this reference was made to one of the representatives of the Philippine Islands who is one of the commission:

A mass meeting of rejectionists of the Hawes-Cutting law which offered Philippine independence in 12 to 14 years went on record tonight as favoring measures granting immediate freedom or separate government within a short period. Approval was voted of the King bill before Congress, providing independence within 32 to 49 months, of an immediate independence bill, or of any measure avoiding the onerous provisions of the Hawes-Cutting law.

The meeting, which followed a parade, also voted a criticism of one of their distinguished representatives because of his support of the Hawes-Cutting bill.

Mr. President, as I have indicated, the Hawes-Cutting Act was placed before the Philippine Legislature for their approval. Section 14 of that act, as I recall the section, provided that it might be voted upon by the Philippine Legislature. It was submitted, and the senate, by an overwhelming vote—my recollection is that there were only 4 voting for it and 19 against it—rejected the measure, and it was rejected by an equally decisive majority in the house.

Resolutions were adopted by the legislature indicating their views upon this matter; and after the resolutions had been adopted rejecting it, the following resolution was adopted by the Philippine Legislature on the 17th day of July 1933:

Concurrent Resolution 45

Concurrent resolution confirming and ratifying the action of the senate in disapproving, at its session on October 7, 1933, the proposed Concurrent Resolution No. 28 and entitled "Concurrent resolution accepting the act of Congress of January 17, 1933, generally known as the 'Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act'."

Whereas at the session of the senate on October 7, 1933, during the consideration of house bill no. 2800, which provides for a plebiscite on the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act, when the debate thereon had already been closed and a motion made for the passage of said bill, there was presented for insertion in the record a document of the following tenor:

"The undersigned, on behalf of the majority and minority, have agreed that there be no plebiscite, in view of the fact that it has not been possible to arrive at an agreement on the manner in which the same shall be held, and in order to save the country the unnecessary expense of holding said plebiscite.

"(Signed) MANUEL L. QUEZON,

"On behalf of the majority.

"(Signed) SERGIO OSMEÑA,

"On behalf of the minority."

Whereas immediately after the introduction and reading of the foregoing document the senior senator for the tenth district, Mr. Osmeña, introduced proposed Concurrent Resolution No. 28, which, copied literally, reads as follows:

"Concurrent resolution accepting the act of Congress of January 17, 1933, generally known as the 'Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act'."

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives of the Philippines concurring), To accept the act of Congress of January 17, 1933, entitled 'An act to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes', generally known as the 'Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act', in accordance with the provisions of section 17 of said act."

Whereas when the senate considered the foregoing proposed concurrent resolution and voted upon the same by ayes and nays, the same failed of passage by 15 votes against 4: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives of the Philippines concurring), To ratify and confirm, as they hereby do ratify and confirm, the action of the senate in disapproving proposed Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 28, entitled "Concurrent resolution accepting the act of Congress of January 17, 1933, generally known as the 'Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act'."

Adopted, October 10, 1933.

President of the Senate.

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This resolution, which originated in the Philippine Senate, was finally adopted by the same on October 9, 1933.

Secretary of the Senate.

Finally adopted by the house of representatives on October 10, 1933.

Secretary of the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, the resolution just read evidenced a rejection of the Hawes-Cutting Act by the Legislature of the Philippine Islands.

Another resolution was adopted by the Philippine Legislature on October 17, 1933, to inform the Congress of the United States that the Philippine Legislature had declined and rejected the Hawes-Cutting Act. I shall not take the trouble to read the resolution, but ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD at this point without reading.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent Resolution 46

Concurrent resolution informing the Congress of the United States that the Philippine Legislature, in its own name and in that of the Filipino people, declines to accept the act of Congress entitled "An act to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes", in its present form and appointing a committee to proceed to the United States at the earliest practicable time to seek amendments to said act of Congress, or the enactment of such new legislation as will fully satisfy the aspirations of the Filipino people, to become at the earliest practicable date a free and independent nation, under conditions and circumstances that will not imperil the political, social, and economic stability of their country

Whereas the Congress of the United States on the 17th day of January 1933 enacted a law entitled "An act to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes", commonly known as the "Hare-Hawes-Cutting law";

Whereas section 17 of said law provides that the provisions of the same "shall not take effect until accepted by concurrent resolution of the Philippine Legislature or by a convention called for the purpose of passing upon that question as may be provided by the Philippine Legislature";

Whereas the Philippine Legislature fully appreciates the good will shown by the Congress of the United States toward the people of the Philippine Islands and its efforts to finally settle the Philippine question by enacting said law;

Whereas the Philippine Legislature believes that in providing that the said law shall not take effect until accepted by the Philippine Legislature or by a convention called for the purpose of passing upon that question the Congress of the United States intended to secure a frank and honest expression of the will of the Filipino people regarding the above-mentioned law;

Whereas the Philippine Legislature is opposed to the acceptance of said law in its present form, because, in the opinion of the legislature, the law does not satisfy the national aspirations nor does it safeguard the welfare of the Filipino people or the stability of the social, economic, and political institutions of their country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the Philippine Senate concurring), That the Philippine Legislature, in its own name and in that of the Filipino people, inform the Congress of the United States that it declines to accept the said law in its present form, because, in the opinion of the legislature, among other reasons, the provisions of the law affecting trade relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands would seriously imperil the economic, social, and political institutions of this country, and might defeat its avowed purpose to secure independence to the Philippine Islands at the end of the transition period; because the immigration clause is objectionable and offensive to the Filipino people; because the powers of the high commissioner are too indefinite; and finally because the military, naval, and other reservations provided for in the said act are inconsistent with true independence, violate national dignity, and are subject to misunderstanding.

Resolved further, That a joint legislative committee of the Senate and the House of Representatives be appointed, as it is hereby appointed, subject to the directions, purposes, and authority herein stated, to be composed of the Honorable Manuel L. Quezon, president of the Philippine Senate, as chairman of the committee on the part of the Philippine Senate; the Honorable Quintin Paredes, speaker of the house of representatives, as chairman of the committee on the part of the house; Hon. Elpidio Quirino, majority floor leader of the senate; Hon. José C. Zulueta, majority floor leader of the house of representatives; Hon. Sergio Osmeña, senator from the tenth district; and Hon. Pedro Guevara, Resident Commissioner to the United States; and that an invitation be and is hereby extended to Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo, President of the erstwhile Philippine Republic; Hon. Juan Sumulong, former senator; and Hon. Isidro G. Gabaldon, former senator and Resident Commissioner, to join said legislative committee and form a part thereof, General Aguinaldo as honorary chairman and the others as members.

The committee thus constituted shall proceed to the United States as soon as convenient in the interest of the public service, and convey to the Congress of the United States the appreciation of the Filipino people for the enactment of the law of Congress, entitled, "An act to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes."

The committee shall, at the same time, express to the Government and people of the United States the objections to the said law and the reasons therefor, and petition the President and the Congress of the United States for changes therein or the enactment of such new legislation as will fully satisfy the aspirations of the Filipino people to become at the earliest practicable date a free and independent nation, under conditions and circumstances that will not imperil the political, social, and economic stability of their country.

The Philippine Legislature approaches the Government and people of the United States through this committee, in the hope and confident expectation that they will not ignore the appeal of the Filipino people—a people who, in the language of every American President since the inauguration of American rule, have been placed by divine Providence under the protecting care of the American Nation so that they may enjoy the blessings of freedom and happiness which are the heritage of the people of the United States.

Adopted October 17, 1933.

MANUEL L. QUEZON,
President of the Senate.

QUINTIN PAREDES,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Finally adopted by the Philippine Senate on October 12, 1933.

F. TORRALBA,

Secretary of the Senate.

This resolution, which originated in the house of representatives, was finally adopted by the same on October 17, 1933.

F. PIMENTEL,

Secretary of the House of Representatives.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. TYDINGS. In connection with the reading of the memorial which requests that we extend to the Filipino people a condition which will not impair their economic fabric and what not, I should like to announce that the Finance Committee of the United States Senate has just put a tax of 3 cents a pound on coconut oil to benefit the local producers that come in conflict with that commodity. Certainly that shows the lack of fairness with which a bill could be passed through this Congress and justifies the remarks I made heretofore.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, apparently the Senator finds some comfort in the action of one committee of this body. I said a few moments ago that the act of one Congress will not bind succeeding Congresses.

I still insist that a solemn promise was made to the Philippine people by every President from McKinley down, and solemn promises have been made by the Democratic Party to give to the Filipinos independence. If we violate the promises, if we enact legislation in contravention of high moral and political duties and obligations, then condemnation must rest upon us; and we ought not, because of our derelictions, to condemn the Filipinos or persist in a course which will be unsatisfactory, if not disadvantageous, to them.

The mere fact that legislation may be enacted at this session of Congress in violation of what some believe to be the Constitution of the United States and of our obligations to people under the flag does not justify the prophecy that wiser counsels and higher statesmanship may not in the end prevail, and thus insure freedom to the Philippines.

In that connection, Mr. President, as only one of the unimportant evidences of the contention of the Filipinos for liberty, I call attention to a resolution that was adopted in November 1932 by the Philippine Legislature, in which it is stated that the following declaration is adopted as an expression of the unanimous sense of the Philippine Legislature:

First. That it is the aspiration of the people of the Philippines to have immediate, absolute, and complete independence.

I shall not take the time to read the entire resolution. It reiterates statements made by the Legislature of the Philippine Islands, as well as by representatives sent by the Philippine Legislature and by groups of Filipinos to Washington to plead for independence.

Mr. President, it will be observed, from one of the resolutions which has been read, that Mr. Quezon and others were sent here for a specific purpose. They were sent here to plead with Congress to give independence to the Filipinos. One of the delegation was Hon. Isaura Gabaldon, who, as I stated a few moments ago, was a distinguished commissioner representing the Philippine Legislature and the Filipino people in the House of Representatives. I hold in my hand a copy of a letter which he addressed to the President of the United States. He has not followed Quezon, but has expressed his own views and the views of the Filipinos, and attempted to carry out the obligations resting upon him under the mandate of the people of the Philippine Islands, and the mandate of the legislature in the resolution unanimously adopted by the Legislative Assembly of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCARRAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I know there is no one in the Chamber who has a greater desire to be fair than has the Senator from Utah, and while his remarks are accurate in every sense, I am afraid they leave an inference which his words do not clear up. I do not doubt for a moment that Mr. Osmeña and Mr. Roxas, of the old commission, and Mr. Quezon of the new, would prefer a different bill from the one now pending, but I think these men have all found, from contact with Members of Congress, that this is about the best they can get out of the situation, and their acquiescence does not mean that this is the bill which they themselves would like to have, but is the best bill which they feel they can get.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator has expressed the matter accurately, and I had intended in a moment to read a letter from Mr. Quezon indicating that fact. I thank the Senator for anticipating me.

Mr. President, I do not mean, of course, to be censorious of those who have come here to plead for independence. The Senator knows that a few years ago Speaker Rohas and Senator Osmeña came here with positive instructions to demand independence, and in the eloquent appeals which they made before committees of the House and the Senate, they pleaded for the independence of their country. When Senators asked them if they wanted independence even though it might produce a condition of economic chaos or confusion, they said yes, that they and their countrymen would submit to whatever consequences resulted from immediate independence; that they preferred absolute and immediate independence to waiting an indefinite period for their freedom. However, when Congress turned a deaf ear to their demands for complete and immediate independence, they reluctantly, as I believe, accepted the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill. I am not critical of their action, although I can understand that some other persons, when they found that they could not get what their constituents had instructed them to get, would have refused to accept a measure which was believed to be fraught with danger.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me just a moment to say something in his time—and I know he is speaking under difficulties—I would like to make this observation: The trade of the Philippine Islands with the United States represents about 78 percent of the commerce of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. KING. That is approximately correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. Four out of five tons of merchandise find a market here. In 1932 the total volume of 80 percent of their trade, in round figures, was $80,000,000, of which sugar made up $57,000,000. In other words, nearly three-quarters of their trade with the United States was in one commodity, namely, sugar, for which they received $57,000,000. If the tariff on Philippine imports were to be fixed at 1 3/4 cents a pound, that would mean a tariff of approximately $36,000,000, so that instead of receiving $57,000,000 for their crop they would receive, after the tariff was paid, only about $21,000,000 for their crop, which would mean a shrinkage in the island revenue of about 65 percent.

In my judgment, were that to happen, there would be such an upheaval in the Philippine Islands that there would be riots from one end of the archipelago to the other, because those people could not find a market overnight to which they could ship the merchandise which is now coming into this country, and in that event we would be called upon, morally, to restore order, and heaven knows when we would get another Philippine independence bill through this body.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the observations just made by the Senator were not at all germane to my discussion; but, turning aside from the current of my remarks for a moment, I may say that I dissent from the observations of my friend and some of his conclusions.

Rohas, Osmeña, and others testified in the hearing that though there would be a serious economic crisis if they were cut off immediately from American markets, the Filipinos would be able to master the situation and meet the changed conditions. They said they would infinitely prefer to be cut loose immediately than to continue for an indefinite period, or, as was stated in the beginning, for even 10 to 17 years, under provisions which it was then suggested would be imposed upon the Filipinos in measures which were in contemplation.

Undoubtedly, by reason of laws enacted by the Congress, particularly the law of 1909 and supplementary legislation, we have compelled the Filipinos to deal with us. They did not ask for free trade with the United States. We passed a law compelling them to deal with us and closed the markets of the rest of the world to them. They may not negotiate treaties with other countries, except in conformity with the policies of the United States. They may not impose tariffs upon the products which we ship to the Philippine Islands. They are bound by our legislation; and by reason of this legislation, to which I have imperfectly referred, we have made it impossible for them to find markets for their surplus products and to make themselves more self-contained than they are at the present time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LONG. In connection with what the Senator has said, they have developed the sugar industry since they have been a part of the colonial possessions of the United States, and they have done it at the expense of the United States while being deprived of other markets. The longer we keep them, the more inextricably entangled we shall become with the Philippine situation, and the more we will make it possible for the interests which have come into the islands from the outside to profit from them. That is the trouble today—the foreign interests which have gone into the Philippines to develop the industries in those islands, to the disadvantage of American interests.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, further, with respect to the remarks of the Senator from Maryland, the Filipino people are a peace-loving people. That has been demonstrated during our sovereignty over them. It is true that under the Spanish rule there were revolutions, because the Filipinos sought freedom. Spain imposed upon the Filipinos a military control, and subjected them at times to harsh and ruthless bureaucratic rule. They rebelled upon a number of occasions, seeking independence, but with their limited military knowledge and primitive military weapons they could not match the power of Spain, compete with Spain, which a few centuries ago was one of the most powerful military nations in the world.

The Filipinos love peace; they love their homes; most of them reside upon lands which they own. They are more or less a pastoral people. They are devoted to their families, and they are interested in self-development. They do not want revolution. They would not, as some Senators have said, if independence were granted them, engage in domestic insurrections and controversies leading to bloodshed and to intervention by the United States.

Mr. President, if the flag of the United States, the flag which now floats over the Philippine Archipelago, shall be hauled down and the flag of the Philippine Republic shall go up, our present relations with the Filipinos will be ended, and out upon the great international sea they will steer their bark, it is to be hoped, with success; certainly with our friendship and sincere good wishes for their felicity and happiness. But the histories of nations show that they rise and fall; powerful nations are subdued oftentimes by their own vices, occasionally by foreign foes. There is no promise of immortality to any nation. It was Byron who said:

First Freedom, and then Glory—when that falls,
Wealth, vice, corruption—barbarism at last.
And History, with all her volumes vast,
Hath but one page.

The Filipinos will have advantages over some nations for the maintenance of their political independence and territorial integrity, as many of the nations of the world. They are less inclined to revolution than some of the nations nearer our doors, and, as I have stated, by their devotion to their families, to religious concepts, to the ideals of civilization, I believe that the Filipinos, when they have their liberty, while they will have to struggle, of course, in the economic crisis which is pervading the world, will emerge and will maintain and develop in the Orient a Christian republic, the effects and influence of which will be felt upon other oriental nations.

Mr. President, I desire to read a few excerpts from the letter of Mr. Gabaldon, one of the Quezon delegation sent to confer with the President and with Congress to demand independence, to the President of the United States:

For the reasons stated, and true to the aspirations of the people of the Philippine Islands as expressed in every popular election held from 1907 to 1931, inclusive, I beg to recommend the enactment of a law providing substantially the following:

1. The immediate calling of a constitutional convention in the Philippine Islands for the purpose of drafting a constitution for a free and independent government of the Philippine Islands.

May I say, Mr. President, that is in harmony with the measure which I have offered, and which I shall ask the Senate to adopt in lieu of the bill which the Senator from Maryland has presented for consideration.

2. The submission of this constitution to the people.

3. The holding of elections for the offices provided in the constitution upon adoption thereof.

4. Recognition of the Philippine Republic upon the installation of the officials provided in the constitution, not later than 3 years from the date of the enactment of the law.

5. Trade relations to be determined in a conference between representatives of the United States and of the Philippine Islands, to be held at such time and place as the President of the United States may designate after independence shall have been achieved.

Mr. President, I ask to have Mr. Gabaldon's letter printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT: As a member of the delegation appointed by the Philippine Legislature to deal with the Government of the United States on the question of Philippine independence, I deem it my duty to bring to your attention the grave injustice that would be inflicted upon the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands by a delay in the granting of the freedom for which they fought in battles of battle and have struggled incessantly in times of peace.

Three days ago, on the 18th instant to be exact, Philippine Resident Commissioner CAMILO OSMAS, one of the staunchest supporters of the Hawes-Cutting-Hare law, and who has, using his own words, "just returned from the Philippine Islands after several months spent in visiting various Provinces, cities, and municipalities, meeting and conferring not only with our leaders but with the masses of the people", declared on the floor of the House of Representatives "that the Philippine people continue in their firm conviction that the early grant of Philippine independence is the proper solution of American-Filipino relations." He said further that "on this fundamental point the Filipinos are united."

I deem it of the highest importance also to call attention to the fact that the lower house of the Philippine Legislature had already passed a bill submitting the Hawes-Cutting-Hare law to the decision of the electorate of the Philippines, and the majority in the Philippine Senate had agreed in caucus to approve it, when those who caused the United States Congress to enact said law and now claim that the Filipino people had been deprived of the opportunity to vote on the question, signed an agreement to submit it to and abide by the decision of the Philippine Legislature.

I am entirely in accord with the statement of the chairman of our delegation that when the Philippine Legislature declined to accept the Hawes-Cutting-Hare law it did so in compliance with the wishes of the overwhelming majority of the people of the Philippine Islands.

TARIFF PROTECTION

In stressing the necessity of a 10-year period of economic readjustment the eventual ruin of the Philippine sugar industry is brought forth as the outstanding illustration. This industry, it is contended, has been built and developed under the protecting wings of the Tariff Act of 1909, and it is further alleged that "This industry is entirely dependent at present for its continued existence upon the tariff protection of the United States." If this statement is correct, the inescapable conclusion is that an extension for 10 or 20 or 50 years of such protection under conditions barring its further expansion would not save the Philippine sugar industry from eventual ruin, thus necessitating the continuation of the present tariff protection for an indefinite period of time.

If the Philippines were a free and independent nation, her industries could be revamped and developed on the basis of fair competition, which is the only fundamentally sound economic policy. Reciprocal trade treaties with other countries could be resorted to as a means of offsetting differences in cost of production.

I submit that the Philippine government does not have to depend on the income derived from the sugar industry to enable that Government to perform its duties and responsibilities toward the inhabitants of the islands and the world at large.

It is asserted that approximately 40 percent of the revenues of the Philippine government is contributed by the sugar industry. Granting for the sake of argument that this is correct, I still maintain that this gap in the governmental finances can be spanned by the application of Philippine tariffs on all imports. Under present trade arrangements over 65 percent of the goods imported into the islands is admitted duty free. To this may be added the proceeds from a general reduction in salaries and allowances in the higher brackets of the present governmental structure, which are higher than the salaries and allowances assigned to officials of equivalent category in Great Britain and other European countries, in Japan, and in many of the South American countries. Again, there is ample room in the present governmental organization for further simplification.

In fact, during the last 15 years the revenues of the Philippine government registered increases and decreases of approximately 20,000,000 pesos without affecting in the least the ability of the government to meet its bonded indebtedness and to carry on the normal functions of a stable and well-regulated government.

You have, Mr. President, recently stressed the significance of a statement made by the late President Wilson that human liberty is paramount and that it should always receive higher and preferential consideration over trade and other material factors involved in the relationship of the people of the earth. In line with this lofty idealism, may I not submit that sugar, coconut oil, and cordage benefit but a negligible minority of the Philippine population? Shall the Filipinos be driven to face a situation similar to that confronting the United States at present, where 15 percent of the population control the wealth and the destinies of the remaining 85 percent?

I deem it contrary to the expressed will of the people of the Philippine Islands to make the granting of their independence contingent on any consideration other than that specified in the Jones Law, namely, the establishment of a stable government. That this condition had already been met is attested by the message sent by President Wilson to the United States Congress on December 16, 1920. He said: "Allow me to call your attention to the fact that the people of the Philippine Islands have succeeded in maintaining a stable government since the last action of Congress in their behalf." The next logical and honorable step, therefore, that the people and the Government of the United States should take in connection with Philippine-American relations is the restoration of the Philippine Republic.

I am constrained to disagree with the proposals that the granting of Philippine independence be postponed to July 4, 1940; that a more autonomous government be established in the meantime; and that trade relations between the United States and the Philippines be continued as they are under certain limitations, because these proposals involve an unauthorized modification of the will of the Philippine electorate as expressed in every election held in the islands since 1907. On these elections the majorities controlling both houses of the Philippine Legislature were elected on the strength of their pledge that they would petition the Government and appeal to the people of the United States for the granting of "the immediate, absolute, and complete independence" of the Philippine Islands.

Any solution of the Philippine question based on representations amendatory of the expressed will of the electorate of the islands would necessarily involve the un-American and undemocratic decision that those chosen by the people to speak for them have the right to alter the mandate they received from the people.

RECOMMENDATIONS

For the reasons stated, and true to the aspirations of the people of the Philippine Islands as expressed in every popular election held from 1907 to 1931, inclusive, I beg to recommend the enactment of a law providing substantially the following:

1. The immediate calling of a constitutional convention in the Philippine Islands for the purpose of drafting a constitution for a free and independent government of the Philippine Islands.

2. The submission of this constitution to the people.

3. The holding of elections for the offices provided in the constitution upon adoption thereof.

4. Recognition of the Philippine republic upon the installation of the officials provided in the constitution, not later than 3 years from the date of the enactment of the law.

5. Trade relations to be determined in a conference between representatives of the United States and of the Philippine Islands, to be held at such time and place as the President of the United States may designate after independence shall have been achieved.
Respectfully submitted.

ISAURO GABALDON,
Member, Philippine Delegation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when Mr. Quezon came with Mr. Gabaldon and other members of the delegation he conferred with me, as did his associates, with respect to legislation for the independence of the Philippine Islands. The revived Hawes-Cutting bill, as I recall, was not then before Congress. Mr. Quezon told me that he favored the bill which I had offered, or one containing substantially the same provisions.

Subsequently a statement appeared in a newspaper that seemed at variance with what I had understood were his sentiments as to independence, and I wrote him on February 18, 1934, as follows:

HON. MANUEL L. QUEZON,
Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York, N.Y.

DEAR SENATOR: Upon two occasions recently, in our conversations respecting the Philippine situation, I understood you to state definitely that you were opposed to any measure that would attempt to revive the dead Hawes-Cutting bill and revitalize it; further, that you favored the bill which I offered and which is now pending (S. 2064, 73d Cong., 2d sess.), or one containing substantially the same provisions.

Yesterday there appeared in the New York and Washington papers (and doubtless others), statements to the effect that a plan might be adopted which would revive the Hawes-Cutting bill, with some of the provisions eliminated. I gained the impression from the newspaper statements that an understanding between the administration and the leaders of the Filipinos might be reached that would result in an effort to reenact the Hawes-Cutting measure in order that another opportunity might be given the Filipinos to register their approval or disapproval of the measure referred to.

I have been reluctant to believe that you and the members of your delegation are willing to have the Hawes-Cutting bill revived by Congress. I have assumed from what occurred in the Philippine Islands with respect to the Hawes-Cutting bill that it was wholly unsatisfactory to the Filipinos and that any attempt to revive it would meet with their disapproval.

It is my intention to press for the consideration of the measure which I offered and to urge the enactment of my bill or some other measure containing similar provisions. I shall be glad to be advised if my understanding of your position is correct, and also whether you and the members of your delegation favor the passage at this session of Congress of a measure containing provisions similar to those contained in my bill.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM H. KING.

To that letter I received the following reply, written from the Waldorf-Astoria, New York City, February 20, 1934:

HON. WILLIAM H. KING,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR KING: In answer to your letter of February 18, I beg to inform you as follows:

First, that your understanding of my position, as I stated to you in our previous conversations respecting the Philippine situation, and with particular reference to the Hawes-Cutting bill, as well as to your bill (S. 2064, 73d Cong., 2d sess.), is absolutely correct.

Second, that I have, however, expressed myself as being ready to agree to the revival of the Hawes-Cutting bill, if it is amended in certain particulars and with certain understandings, provided your bill fails to secure the approval of Congress.

If, therefore, you should press for the consideration of your bill and urge its enactment, I, as well as the members of my delegation, will support it in preference to the revival, with amendments, of the Hawes-Cutting bill.

You are, I am sure, informed that there have been popular demonstrations in the Philippine Islands supporting your bill, and that the leaders of the legislature asked me to endorse it.

Very sincerely yours,

MANUEL L. QUEZON.

Mr. President, I think the evidence brought to our attention demonstrates that the Philippine people are not in favor of the Hawes-Cutting bill. It may be that they believe from recent statements made or assurances given that there will be modifications of it after it is enacted. It seems to me that if the Hawes-Cutting bill is unsatisfactory and any assurances have been given them of sympathetic consideration for modification we had better obtain the modification before the bill is passed, and not leave to future Congresses the fulfillment of any assurances or hopes or anticipations or expectations that may enter into the hearts of the Filipinos.

It is a practical question. We have before us the Hawes-Cutting bill in all its ugly or beautiful form, whichever view one may take of it. To me it is an ugly bill, it is a hybrid bill. It measures up to the description given by the Senator from Michigan this morning. It neither takes us out of the Philippines nor keeps us in. We do not know the obligations and the implications that will arise from its passage. Certainly it will not give the Philippine people independence for a long time, and it contains the probabilities, if not certainties, of changes that will compel intervention upon the part of the United States and prolong occupation by this Republic for an indefinite period.

Mr. President, I desire briefly to examine the bill before us, although, as I stated at the outset, the presentation made by the Senator from Michigan leaves but little to be added.

I call attention to a sentence on the eighth page of the bill, and I ask the attention of my friend from Maryland to it. I think it is manifestly unfair, and I am sure that neither he nor those who drafted the bill intended that any unfair implication might arise. The bill reads:

If a majority of the votes cast—

Mr. TYDINGS. From what point in the bill does the Senator read?

Mr. KING. I am reading from page 8, lines 14, 15, and 16.

If a majority of the votes cast shall be for the constitution, such vote shall be deemed an expression of the will of the people of the Philippine Islands in favor of Philippine independence.

If all the Filipinos want Philippine independence, few, if any, want this bill. If they vote against the bill, it will be said that they do not want Philippine independence; and undoubtedly that will be the construction placed by some upon that phrase. It puts them in an awkward and embarrassing situation. They will say, "I do not want this bill; I want independence; but if I vote against this bill, it will be construed that I am opposing independence." I do not think it is fair to place the voters, if the question shall be submitted to a plebiscite, in that equivocal, embarrassing, and undesirable position. They ought to have the opportunity to subdivide this proposition, if necessary, and say, "I want independence, but I do not want this bill; I vote for independence, and I vote against the Hawes-Cutting bill in its revised form."

Mr. President, if opportunity is afforded I shall offer an amendment dealing with section 17 of the bill, which reads as follows:

SEC. 17. The foregoing provisions of this act shall not take effect until accepted by concurrent resolution of the Philippine Legislature or by a convention called for the purpose of passing upon that question as may be provided by the Philippine Legislature.

The Senator from Maryland has told us that the members of the same legislature that overwhelmingly rejected the Hawes-Cutting bill are still de facto members of the legislature, although there is to be an election in June; but, of course, they will not meet unless the Governor General shall call them into special session. However, the proposition is, if I understand the Senator, that the legislature which rejected it, and which, obviously from what the Senator says, has been brought into the periphery of the influences behind the passage of this bill, will be called upon to vote upon it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LONERGAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The point the Senator makes about a referendum or plebiscite is well taken, but it will be unnecessary under the bill, for this reason: If the Senator will look at the language on page 8, just above the provision which he read, beginning on line 6, he will find these words:

Such election shall be held in such manner as may be prescribed by the Philippine Legislature, to which the return of the election shall be made.

They can submit the question whether or not the Filipino people want their delegates to vote without resubmitting the constitution to the people or whether or not they want their delegates to vote to submit it to the people; in other words, it will all be in the hands of the Filipino constitutional convention as to whether or not they themselves want to submit the question in the one way or the other.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Maryland is now speaking about the constitution while I am talking about this bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Well, but they could put that question on the ballot; they could put anything on the ballot which the Filipino people wanted put on it.

Mr. KING. I suggest an amendment to strike out the words "by concurrent resolution of the Philippine Legislature or", so that it would read:

Sec. 17. The foregoing provisions of this act shall not take effect until accepted by a convention called for the purpose of passing upon that question as may be provided by the Philippine Legislature.

I have heard the suggestion made by the proponents of the Hawes-Cutting bill that the Filipinos ought to have a plebiscite; that if they had had a plebiscite the Hawes-Cutting bill would have been accepted by them. Of course, anyone familiar with the situation knows that that statement is inaccurate. The fact is that Senator Osmeña and Speaker Roxas early insisted upon a plebiscite and conducted an active campaign in the Philippine Islands in advocacy of the Hawes-Cutting bill; but they discovered that it was not acceptable, and so Senator Osmeña himself joined with Mr. Quezon in abandoning the plan for a plebiscite and agreed to submit to both houses of the legislative assembly the question of the approval of the Hawes-Cutting bill.

Let us provide for a plebiscite if we are going to have this bill, thus giving the people of the Philippines a chance to vote for delegates to a convention or to vote direct with respect to endorsing this bill, and not leave to the Philippine Legislature that denounced the bill—and unanimously, so far as the record shows, adopted a resolution to send Mr. Quezon and the other members of the delegation here to obtain a new independence bill—to pass upon this galvanized bill. Let us not leave it to a legislature that apparently has changed its position. There will be another election in June. The present legislature ought to be defunct. It exists, as I said, de facto, but probably not de jure.

If this question is to be passed upon by the legislature, let us wait until another legislature shall have been elected, with the knowledge that if this bill shall not be amended, it will have the right to pass upon the question of the acceptance or rejection of this bill. So I shall suggest an amendment which I hope my friend will accept, because I think the Philippine people ought to have a chance to vote directly either upon the acceptance or rejection of this bill or have the right to select delegates to a convention charged with the responsibility of passing upon it. I might add that conventions in this democratic Republic are the vehicles by which we express our opinions upon political and oftentimes economic and other questions. Our State constitutions are prepared by conventions the delegates of which have been selected by the people of the respective States.

Mr. President, I wish to make a few other observations respecting this bill. This is supposed to be an emancipation measure. It is supposed to give to the people of the Philippine Islands freedom to choose their own form of government. It does not do that. We have hedged them about. It may be said that the restrictions are advantageous. Concede for a moment that that may be true; nevertheless, they are shackled. Restrictions, harsh or friendly, are imposed upon them, so that the constitution which they draft may not be the expression of their genuine and sincere views.

For instance, it is provided that they must write into their constitution certain mandatory provisions. We require that the trade relations between the Philippine Islands and the United States shall be upon the basis prescribed in section 6. We state one of the provisions or conditions is that—

Provision shall be made for the establishment and maintenance of an adequate system of public schools, primarily conducted in the English language.

I hope the Philippine people will conduct their schools primarily in the English language, but I am unwilling to say to those people who want independence what kind of schools they shall have or what language shall be taught in their schools. That is a matter for them to determine, not for us.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator must concede that these provisions of the constitution only prevail so long as we are in the islands, and that when we get out of the islands the Filipinos can take every one of these provisions out of their constitution, if they so desire.

Mr. KING. Concede for the moment that to be true, but we are specifying what kind of provisions must go into their constitution. Another provision of the bill is:

Foreign affairs shall be under the direct supervision and control of the United States.

There is some merit in the contention that that should be done; and yet, in the hybrid form of government which we are creating or establishing in the Philippine Islands, it would seem that they ought to have some voice in their international relations and in the conduct of their foreign affairs.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am advised on very good authority that the English language is the only common language which a majority of the Filipino people speak. There are more Filipinos who speak that tongue than any other, because in the Filipino languages and the Spanish language, as spoken in the islands, there are many dialects and many colloquialisms, so that more people speak English as a common tongue than any other language in the islands.

Mr. KING. I am not quite sure that the Senator's statement is correct, but concede its correctness, for the sake of the argument; yet if every man, woman, and child in the Philippine Islands spoke the English language or the Spanish language, I would object to the United States requiring that there shall be incorporated in their constitution the kind of language which should be spoken. That is for the Filipinos to decide. It is a restriction upon them which I think is an affront. If they are to have freedom, if they are to have a constitution, if their flag is to go up in the Pacific and ours is to come down, if they are to exercise sovereignty over the archipelago, give them sovereignty without restriction and without shackles.

The Philippine Islands recognizes the right of the United States to expropriate property for public uses—

Mr. TYDINGS (in his seat). The Senator is filibustering.

Mr. KING. Oh, no, I am not. A measure that is so subject to legitimate challenge ought to receive consideration, though I know it will not. It will be passed. The machinery is all ready. The guillotine is prepared. The heads of those who favor a wise bill will soon be cut off, metaphorically speaking; that is, so far as their support of a more liberal bill is concerned their heads will be cut off.

Mr. President, I object to this provision in the bill:

The United States may, by Presidential proclamation, exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands and for the maintenance of the government as provided in the constitution thereof, and for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for the discharge of government obligations under and in accordance with the provisions of the constitution.

It vests in the President of the United States this unlimited discretion. If he thinks that it is necessary for the preservation of the situation there to intervene, he may do so. It is written into their constitution. It legalizes the intervention of the United States whenever the President of the United States, in the exercise of his judgment or his discretion, thinks that intervention is proper.

My friend has said there may be revolutions if we do not pass this bill, that there may be outbreaks. I believe he used the term "bloody revolutions." It may be conceived that there may be, after we pass this bill, some local strife. There was local strife in Cuba a short while ago. Some Americans insisted that the United States should intervene. The President of the United States, be it said to his honor, refused to intervene.

Mr. President, I shall not further take the time of the Senate to examine the provisions of the bill which are to me so obnoxious. I repeat, the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] made an analysis of the bill which seems to me ought to have convinced every "doubting Thomas" of the un wisdom of the measure and lead them to vote for his substitute in preference to the bill now before us. I would find no fault with anyone who preferred the substitute of the Senator from Michigan to my own, although I will say my own view is that it would be better to adopt the substitute, which I shall offer, and thus announce to the world and to the Philippine Islands that within 2½ years our flag will come down and the flag of an independent Philippine republic will be raised.

It is their land, not ours. We conquered the Territory and imposed upon them our Government, military in form, against their will. They fought us valiantly for 2 years. Thousands and tens of thousands of them laid down their lives upon sanguinary fields of battle. They may have been wrong, as some say. They thought they were right. They thought that we were intruders; that we sought conquest. Let us say to the world that we will keep our promise; that there will be no benevolent assimilation; no assertion of authority or jurisdiction longer than is necessary for the people there to form a constitution and to set up under that constitution the government which they desire.

Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks resolutions adopted by the Philippine Veterans' Memorial presided over by General Aguinaldo.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The resolutions are as follows:

FILIPINO VETERANS' MEMORIAL

(The following is the memorial approved by the Filipino veterans at their convention at the stadium last Sunday, Sept. 17. It defines their stand on the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act.)

The Association of Veterans of the Revolution in an extraordinary general meeting duly assembled, having deliberated on Act No. 311 of the Seventy-second Congress of the United States, commonly known as the "Hare-Cutting law", has resolved to approve and to make public the following

DECLARATION

We have come to the painful conclusion that the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law is destructive of our ideal of absolute political independence, and that the general tendency of its provisions is openly repugnant to the ultimate aim of the American policy to place our people, according to the language of the Jones Act, in a position to fully assume the responsibilities and enjoy all the privileges of complete independence.

The power which this law confers upon the President of the United States to retain, after the proclamation of the so-called "Philippine independence", unspecified portions of our national territory for military stations and other permanent reservations of the United States, constitutes a positive and radical departure from the policy of complete independence, and secures, besides, the perpetual military occupation of these islands by the United States. Hence the acceptance of this law by the Filipino people will be tantamount to an unpardonable renunciation on our part of the unequivocal promise of complete independence freely made to us by the American Government.

Unrestrained selfishness, in marked contrast with the heretofore benevolent and liberal American policy in these islands, is evident in the economic provisions of the law, the consequences of which might seriously hamper the success of the government of the Philippine Commonwealth; that is to say, of the regime preparatory to the final change in our political status.

Upon the inauguration of the government of the Commonwealth, the amount of Philippine products which may be exported free of duty to the United States will be restricted for the purpose of eliminating the alleged competition which such Philippine products offer to certain American products. On the other hand, no restriction is placed on the free exportation to these islands, during the transition period, of American products. That this rank injustice cannot be defended becomes more patent when it is considered that the Filipino products alluded to represent a very considerable part of our export trade, whereas the American products that are brought into these islands are but an insignificant portion of America's foreign commerce.

Although the law apparently provides that the amount of Filipino products so limited may continue entering free of duty into the American market during the transition period of 10 years, the gradual application of the American tariff on such products during the second half of the transition period will bring about their exclusion from the American market even before the expiration of the said period of 10 years.

While this one-sided manner of liquidating the free-trade regime is being carried on, and as the doors of the American market are being closed to Filipino products, the law requires that any Philippine legislation affecting the import and export trade can only have effect after its approval by the President of the United States, which is, of course, saying that the Philippine government cannot unhindered enter into new commercial relations with other countries, and much less establish a new economic structure to take the place of the one that is sought to be abolished. In other words, the period of transition, instead of being, as it should be, essentially a period of economic reconstruction for this country, it will merely serve to terminate gradually the free-trade arrangement, but only as regards Philippine products.

One of the most inexcusable effects of this unequal economic arrangement will be that the Filipino people shall find themselves obliged to continue buying, during the transition period, American products at high prices precisely at a time when the general penury will be most acute and distressful.

The manifold difficulties which naturally come about as a sequel to any change of political status would be in themselves sufficient to make the task of the government of the Commonwealth most trying. If it is not desired to lend a helping hand to the government of the Commonwealth, notwithstanding other governments similarly situated have been generously assisted by others, there is reason, to say the least, to expect that no artificial obstacles should be placed in the way of that government which would render its failure inevitable.

If unfortunately the application of these grave economic conditions should bring about the destruction of our entire economic system, it is to be feared that such development be attributed by public opinion abroad, perhaps even by American public opinion itself, not to its true causes, but to the much-advised incapacity of the Filipinos to maintain an independent government. In such case the right of intervention, reserved by the law to the American Government, may be exercised with all its disagreeable consequences.

Such are our main objections to the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law. But these are not the only objections. With like vigor and reason our people have formulated many other objections to the law.

The proposed exclusion of Filipino laborers from the American Continent, to take place as soon as the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law is accepted by the Filipino people, has wounded, as was natural, our national feeling as Filipinos in its most sensitive part. At the same time, moreover, this same law provides that the "citizens and corporations of the United States shall enjoy in the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands all the civil rights of the citizens and corporations, respectively, thereof."

The lengthy period of transition, which would be, under the unfair economic conditions provided for in the law, a cruel prolongation of the distressing economic dislocation which will necessarily come about during the Commonwealth, cannot be easily justified. If the economic clauses of the law are not to be modified in the sense of rendering them more just and reasonable, it is preferable undoubtedly, that the period of transition be the shortest possible, a period such as may be strictly necessary for the orderly transfer of the powers of sovereignty from the American people.

The law grants also to the President of the United States authority to suspend the taking effect of or the operation of any law, contract, or executive order of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands which, in his judgment, would result in a failure of the government to fulfill its contracts or to provide the sinking fund for its public debt, or would impair the reserve for the protection of our currency, or might violate international obligations of the United States. These extraordinary powers of the President will be, in a more obnoxious form, the equivalent of the veto power, which is absolute in practice, of the present Governor General. We say that the exercise of those powers will be very obnoxious because they might be exercised in relation to laws already definitely approved or to Executive orders in force or to contracts already consummated by the Philippine government. It is inconceivable how a government can reduce another government to a more precarious position than in this manner. The people of these islands will have reason many times to hesitate if it is wise to regulate their acts and their business in accordance with the laws and Executive orders of a government that are subject at any time to ulterior revocation by another government. No person or entity would like to enter into a contract with a government the agreements of which may be annulled by another government. But taking into consideration the other provisions of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law, it seems unnecessary to subject the government of the Commonwealth to such depressing and humiliating treatment. As regards the security for the payment of our public debt, the high commissioner could exercise a strict supervision on the finance of our government and, in case of necessity, may take possession and administer our customs, and certainly there is no need of requiring greater guaranty than this for the protection of our creditors. With respect to the preservation of the reserve which guarantees our currency, it will be recalled that no law of the government of the Commonwealth affecting our currency can have any effect without previous approval of the President of the United States. It is therefore not to be expected that the President will have to resort to the extreme measure of suspending the effectivity or the application of any law in force of the Philippine government for the purpose of maintaining the reserve in question intact. As regards the acts of the Philippine government which might infringe upon the international obligations of the United States, if the supervision of the American Government may exercise on our foreign relations be not sufficient to prevent violations of this nature, the adjudication of such questions may be intrusted more properly to the courts of justice.

A well-grounded objection shared in generally, to the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law is that the need of its restrictive provisions leaves very little space, if any, to the exercise of free initiative by the people and government of these islands, as well in economics as in political matters. The provisions of the law which are designed to liquidate the free trade—established as it was under the exclusive responsibility of the United States—a liquidation to be at the expense solely of Philippine interests, and above all in such manner as to deny us the needed freedom to enable us to establish a new economic regime do not permit us to prepare ourselves to bear up under the effects of the discontinuance of free trade at the end of the transition period. Neither do the other provisions of the law which are calculated to reduce the minimum the sphere of action of the Philippine government in matters purely political tend to prepare the Filipino people in the exercise of the powers inherent in an independent existence. At no time during the transition period, which should be, at least, of substantial and increasing local autonomy, is the control, indirect but very effective, of the American Government or its representative in the islands, over the affairs of the country, lightened in the least.

We feel obliged, for these reasons, to consider it our bounden duty to recommend to our countrymen, and especially to the members of the association, to express courteously but firmly their disapproval of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law.

Our association desires to state, however, that although it has not been possible for us to give our assent to the provisions of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law, yet our full faith in the devotion of the American people to the principles of liberty and justice remains unshaken. We hope that our objections and comments, made in the spirit of friendly cooperation, will not fail to be heeded, and that the American people and Government, in their wisdom and uprightness, will find a solution more acceptable to our people, to the Philippine question.

We also desire to attest, on this memorable occasion, the unchanging loyalty of our people to the cause of their national independence, and their constant and fervent prayers for the early restoration of the Philippine Republic.

We take the liberty to set forth generally a solution of the Philippine problem which, in our judgment, will be acceptable to the Filipino people. Our people desire to obtain their complete independence, not only for the satisfaction of an inborn national ambition, but also because this is the kind of independence that has been promised them by the Government of the United States. In case, however, that the Government of the United States believes that its interests in the Far East require the retention of some naval station in these islands, we beg leave to suggest that such naval system be established in an isolated point in the islands so that it may not become a serious restriction on the sovereignty of the Filipino people. We also suggest that this retention be made with the condition that, if the United States, for any cause, should have to abandon such naval base, its full ownership shall ipso facto revert to the government of these islands, as in this manner we expect to avoid being involved in conflicts which we should like to keep away from as much as possible.

We also ask the Government of the United States to take up, before the withdrawal of the American sovereignty from these islands, the conclusion of a treaty for the neutralization of our country to guarantee our independence and the integrity of our national territory.

If the American Government should insist in imposing any restriction on the amount of Philippine products which may be allowed to enter the American market free of duty during the transition period, we ask that a corresponding right be recognized in the Philippine government to restrict proportionately the volume of American products which may be admitted free of duty in the Philippine Islands during said period.

We likewise ask the Government of the United States that whatever may be the duration of the so-called "transition period", our preference is that it be not longer than the time necessary for the orderly transfer of the powers of sovereignty from the American people to the Filipino people—that during the said period of transition the Philippine government be given full liberty of negotiating and concluding commercial treaties not only with the United States but also with the other countries as soon as the American tariff, either totally or partially, is applied to the Philippine products which are exported to the United States.

We further ask the Government of the United States that the power to levy export tax on Philippine products free of duty during the transition period, if such tax be deemed necessary, be placed in the hands of the Philippine government, as also the right to fix in the case of each product the amount of such export tax.

It is also the general sense among Filipinos that during the period of transition the Philippine government should enjoy a substantial political autonomy to be gradually increased as the expiration of the transition period approaches.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which is a perfecting amendment and should be considered before the substitute amendments. I ask that it be read and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the word "ten" in line 23, page 20, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "five", so as to read:

SEC. 10. (a) On the 4th day of July immediately following the expiration of a period of 5 years from the date of the inauguration of the new government under the constitution provided for in this act the President of the United States shall by proclamation withdraw and surrender all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty then existing and exercised by the United States in and over the territory and people of the Philippine Islands, including all military and other reservations of the Government of the United States in the Philippines (except such naval reservations and fueling stations as are reserved under sec. 5), and, on behalf of the United States, shall recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as a separate and self-governing nation and acknowledge the authority and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof under the constitution then in force.

Mr. DICKINSON. All this amendment proposes to do is to shorten the time in which independence shall be granted. It makes no other changes in the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall occupy the time of the Senate for only 5 or 10 minutes to clear up some conditions which seem to be obscure.

It is frequently stated that immediate independence for the Filipinos can be easily accomplished. It is said that all that is necessary is simply to pass a bill, and the Filipinos will have independence overnight. If the matter were as simple as that, I should be the last one in the world to want to delay the transition; but if I may have the attention of the few Senators in the Chamber, and particularly for the RECORD, I think I can demonstrate to any person who is open to reason that that would be the worst possible course for this country to pursue.

Bear in mind that four fifths of the entire exports of the Philippine Islands come to the United States. Here they sell four out of every five dollars' worth of the entire production of the islands. What is that production?

We find that in the year 1932 they sent to this country $80,000,000 worth of goods—keep that figure in mind, $80,000,000 worth—and that the total foreign commerce of the Philippines for that year was about $100,000,000. So that of the $100,000,000 worth of foreign commerce they had, $80,000,000 worth, or four fifths of it, came right to this country; and of that $80,000,000 worth, or four fifths of the total, $57,000,000 was the value of the sugar which they shipped to the United States.

Suppose that overnight our tariff laws had been applied to Filipino importations. We find that in the year 1932 they sent to this country 2,080,837,000 pounds of sugar. If a tariff of 2 cents a pound had been imposed on that sugar—and that is the present tariff rate on Cuban sugar—the duties they would have had to pay to get that sugar into this country would have amounted to $41,600,000. So that out of the $57,000,000 they got for their sugar crop, $41,600,000 would have been consumed in duties, leaving them but $15,400,000 for the crop, as against the $57,000,000 they actually received.

Put that state of affairs in effect and the Filipinos cannot sell sugar to this country at all. We will exclude the entire crop; and when we do that, we will throw out of employment over half the people of the Philippine Islands who are working for the export trade. When we throw them out of employment we will change their standard of living so violently that, in my humble opinion, there will be rioting; there will be a lack of understanding of why it happened, and then it will be said, "The United States turned these people loose without giving their future any thought or consideration, without providing for an orderly transition to independence; and therefore, now that they are in the midst of an economic revolution, and rioting has taken place, we ought to land our Army and restore order"; and back the Army will go, and it will be 20 or 25 years before another Philippine independence bill will be here.

Independence is not going to depend upon the will for liberty of the Filipino people or of the American people. In that aspect there is no problem. The ultimate success of Philippine independence is going to depend upon the ability of the Filipino people to evolve an economic existence in the new state of affairs in which they will find themselves. If they shall not do that, Philippine independence will not be a success. If they shall do that, it will be a success; and it is our duty to give them sufficient time within which to make the best possible preparation for that step.

I could take the figures for the 10 or 12 principal Philippine products and prove that with the imposition of the American tariff overnight, there would within 6 months be a revolution in the Philippine Islands; and it would be nationwide, because all the markets into which we have forced the Filipinos would be taken from them, with no compensatory markets to which they could go. For that reason I have opposed the Vandenberg bill and the King bill, believing that the Philippine people will need this period of transition if they are to survive.

Now let me bring that home to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON]. In good faith, and with the finest of motives, he has just offered an amendment to cut down from 10 years to 5 years the time within which independence shall be granted.

Now I am going to substitute the word "Iowa" for the words "the Philippine Islands." Let us suppose that all the markets which Iowa now enjoys in this country were taken away from her overnight; that she could not sell a hog, or a barrel of corn, or a pound of beet sugar, or whatever she may produce, without paying, when that article reached the boundary line of Iowa, the tariff which is levied on such commodities when they come into the United States; what would the people of Iowa do?

Mr. DICKINSON. They would become self-sustaining; and I do not think there is any place on earth where they could come as near doing that as they could in Iowa.

Mr. TYDINGS. They would; but while they were becoming self-sustaining they would also become self-exterminating, because the Senator knows and I know that the minute their market was taken from them almost overnight there would be a rebellion against the leaders who made such a condition possible.

That is what we are apt to do for the Filipinos if we are not careful. If we give them more time than they need, we can always cut it down later. If they can become completely independent in 8 years instead of 10, if it is found after the bill shall have been in effect for 2 or 3 years that they can lop off 1 year or 2 years or 3 years, then we can take off the unnecessary time. It is better, however, to give them too much time, and, if they do not need all of it, contract that time, than it is to give them too little time, and be unable to expand it if necessity demands that it shall be expanded.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON. When Delegate OSIAS was making a speech on the floor of the House when I was a Member of the House, and I suggested a probation period just as is provided in this measure, I remember very well what his retort was: "Eventually; why not now?"

I take it that the people of the Philippine Islands are still of the same frame of mind and that they believe that they can work out complete independence in a shorter time than suggested in the pending bill. The question I think involved here is, When are the people of the Philippine Islands willing to assume this responsibility? If they are willing to assume the responsibility, I do not see why they cannot prepare for complete independence in the 5 or 8 or 10 years that will be provided in the bill with a shortened period rather than in the 12 or 15 years provided in the present bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I can readily show the Senator why that cannot be done. The value of their sugar crop in 1922 was $57,000,000. If our tariff laws had applied that year, they would have paid us on that crop $41,000,000 in tariff duties. They could not have raised the sugar, they could not have transported the sugar to the mill, ground it, loaded it in bags, taken it down to the boats and sent it to this country, because they would have received less than 30 percent of the amount they actually got if our tariff laws had been in effect as to them. If that is so, they could not produce sugar and compete in the American market with a tariff of 2 cents a pound on sugar.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

Mr. TYDINGS. Just a minute until I finish. I will take on the Senators one at a time. [Laughter.]

The Senator from Iowa knows just as well as I know that that would have meant that the entire American market would have been closed to the sale of Philippine products.

Where would the people who are now earning their bread and butter from the sale of Philippine sugar in the American market find work? What would they do? The same condition would apply to copra; it would apply to coconut oil; it would apply to rope and hemp, and other commodities. The result would be that we would force upon the Filipino people a situation which they could not possibly meet if we were to provide insufficient time in which they could make the necessary economic adjustments.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me suggest that, in the first place, the great expansion in the production of sugar has taken place during very recent years. It has been practically an American expansion. The Philippine people lived before they ever produced any sugar and sent it to the United States; and I suggest that if there is a long time, it can be shortened. I might also suggest that if there is too short a time, we could lengthen it.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is wrong there, and I think I can show him very quickly in what respect his observation is not logical. Let us suppose that we give the Filipino people independence in a year, by way of illustration; let us suppose that at the end of the year we find that the time has been too short; we will have committed ourselves to Filipino independence at a certain time; they will have accepted our commitment; their constitution will have been written. How would the Senator then undo that situation and extend the time?

Mr. DICKINSON. I think it would be an easy matter to give them the same protection that we now give them. What I do not want is a declaration that they have the right to go ahead and act independently and still have the responsibility of the protection of their flag laid on our doorstep, as is provided in the pending bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not want to tell the other side of this story, because I do not want to get into a tariff argument; but some think only about what the Filipino people sell to us. Did it ever occur to us that we are selling them practically an equal amount of goods, that unless they sell goods to us they cannot buy the goods which we sell to them, and that if they cannot sell to us, then the people in our own country who are now making the goods which we sell to them will be thrown out of work?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator states that they are selling to us. Has he the figures available?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes. They are selling more to us than we are selling to them, but the amount is not far from a parity.

Mr. ADAMS. My information is to the opposite effect. Is it not also a fact that the volume of commodities they have been buying from us has been declining from year to year, while the importations into the United States of Philippine sugar have been increasing?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; the facts are that the volume of goods, in most of the categories, which they have been selling to us, has been declining. For example, let us take coconut oil. They sold us 317,000,000 pounds in 1930, 325,000,000 in 1931, and only 249,000,000 in 1932. Of course, the depression was on. I could go down the list and show the Senator that there is a general decline in the exportation of most of their commodities. That is not true in reference to sugar.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I think there is much force in the Senator's argument that the Filipinos could not bear the load which would be imposed upon them with immediate independence. The thing that has occurred to me is that they will be equally unable to bear it, economically speaking, in 15 years.

Mr. TYDINGS. I would not take issue with the Senator. As I see the economics of this thing, the Filipinos are embarking on a very hazardous adventure. They themselves want the law, and I, as a Democrat, or as a Republican, for that matter, would not be anxious to subject them to this step against their will, but I had hoped that we would provide sufficient time so that when they do take this hazardous adventure, they may take it under the most favorable auspices which we can throw around them.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator will agree with me, I am sure, that 10 years is a very limited time within which a people can change their position from that of economic dependence to economic independence. That is why I have always been in favor of immediate independence. I think they will be able to take care of themselves in 2 or 3 years from now just as well as they will in 10 years. And the objective is independence.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator may be right. My own opinion is that they will not be able to take care of themselves in a shorter time; and, having had them for 33 years, having spilt our blood on their soil, having tried to help them, having assisted with education and other things, after having done all that, in our great haste to do the things which we all want to do, namely, to see them independent, I am afraid we will not provide sufficient time for them to take the necessary steps to readjust their commerce, their economic life, and do such things as ought to be done before absolute independence comes.

I look upon the situation in this way: The condition in which they find themselves was not of their choosing. We forced them to accept our tariff laws, we forced them to abide by our markets, we compelled them to sell their goods here under the tariff laws of our country. They did not make the choice. Now that we are going to sever that relationship, having compelled them to seek an economic destiny in one direction, and blocking the road now in that direction through the medium of an independence bill, is it too much to ask that they be given sufficient time so that they may find a way in another direction?

Mr. BORAH. I would agree entirely with the Senator if I thought they could find their way within that time. I anticipate that those who will be here will find that in 10 years these people will be economically no better prepared to take care of themselves than they are now.

Mr. TYDINGS. That may be true. The Senator was not in the Chamber a moment ago, and, at the risk of repetition, I want to call the facts briefly to his attention, because they may not have been placed before him.

About 80 percent of all that the Filipinos sell in world trade is sold to the United States. Of that 80 percent, nearly two thirds consists of the return from one crop, sugar. In the year 1932 they sold us 2,080,000,000 pounds of sugar, and received for their crop $57,000,000. If our tariff had applied to those importations, the tariff on that quantity of sugar would have amounted to $41,000,000. They received only $57,000,000 for it, without the tariff. So that for a crop for which they received $57,000,000, they would have gotten only $16,000,000. As a matter of fact, they could not have sent their sugar here, under the standards which now prevail in the Philippine Islands. It will bring about a complete readjustment, and I say, in all good faith and in all sincerity, the obstacle in the pathway of Philippine independence is so high that they will be very lucky indeed if they make this transition, after we have forced them to build up their trade in our market, without very serious consequences in the islands.

Mr. LONG and Mr. ADAMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TYDINGS. I promised to yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I was going to ask the Senator this question, if at the end of the 15 years—

Mr. TYDINGS. It is not 15; it is 10.

Mr. LONG. It is 10 after they get all the preliminaries settled.

Mr. TYDINGS. Not at all. There is no reason why it should not be 10 years after the end of this year.

Mr. LONG. They might delay it, however.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not think so.

Mr. LONG. At the end of the time, whatever it may be, let us suppose there were conflict and turmoil in the islands, say at the end of 10 years; then manifestly the United States could not get out.

Mr. TYDINGS. I might ask the Senator the same question as to any length of time. Suppose there were turmoil in 1 year, or 3 years, or 5 years, or 7 years, or 10 years. The longer the time taken in the transition, the less likelihood there would be of turmoil.

Mr. LONG. I disagree with that, because conditions in the Orient become more complicated all the time. There is a likelihood that there will be more trouble 10 years from now than there is now. It is to be left to the President of the United States to decide whether or not the conditions justify his intervening, as I understand, after this move shall have been made. If we had a President in 10 or 15 years, whatever the time may be, who wanted to intervene, and who did intervene, that would mean that this arrangement would be all knocked out, and there would be no such thing as Philippine independence.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me answer the Senator from Louisiana. It is no secret—the President of the United States has already said in his message, inferentially, and has said it directly, and it is no violation of confidence to repeat it—that if this bill shall be enacted and accepted by the Filipino people, and any way can be shown by which the readjustment can be made in a shorter time, or through different methods, compatible with the welfare of both countries, it is his disposition to accelerate it. It is my opinion that he will appoint a commission to go to the Philippine Islands to investigate that very question, and work out a solution with the Filipino people.

Mr. LONG. The Senator has not answered my question, which is, could not any President, in the course of 10 years, frustrate this whole arrangement? We know that Mr. Hoover did not want the Philippines freed.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will have to digress a moment. There is not a Filipino on this floor, not one; we are white, and they are Malays. They are 10,000 miles from here. This is the greatest country in the world, and it boasts of its liberty, and its justice, and its humanity. We read the Declaration of Independence on every Fourth of July. We extoll John Hancock, who wrote his name so large that the king could read it without spectacles, and all the time we stand here and talk about justice.

Who made the Filipinos a part of the sovereign territory of this country? We got them through a chain of circumstances connected with a war which started in the Caribbean. We had no idea of taking sovereignty over them. In the unfolding of fate strange things happened, and we acquired the Philippine Islands, and from that day to this every Congress and every President has said that ultimate independence for those people is the object toward which we are working.

We hear much said about men who lost their lives in the World War. God rest their souls! There were Americans who lost their lives in the Filipino insurrection, and we had never had any difficulty with the Filipino people. They helped us to defeat the Spaniards who were in the city of Manila. It was Admiral Dewey who asked General Aguinaldo to go from China to the Philippines and organize the Filipinos to help us defeat the Spaniards there.

When the American fleet was in Manila Bay, the Filipinos had won every battle, and the Spanish Army had been driven into the city of Manila. Then there was a period of waiting while our Army landed, because the Spaniards announced that they would not surrender to the Filipinos but they would surrender to the Americans. So, after conferring with them—they had declared an armistice, just as we had—the Spanish forces in the city of Manila surrendered to the American forces.

Mr. LONG. We double-crossed both sides. We sent—

Mr. TYDINGS. Just a moment. Then the Filipinos were around Manila in their trenches. Our Army was in Manila, too, but inside the Filipino lines. Accidentally one night there was a shot fired, and a Filipino was killed, or an American was killed—I have forgotten the circumstances—and firing broke out between both sides over this accident, and from that time on it took us 2 years to bring about order in the Philippine Islands. That war never was intended. We never intended to stay there. We promised the Filipinos that if they would cooperate with us, we would stand by them and give them their country.

Because of this incident, however, we have been now for 36 years in the Philippine Islands. In Heaven's name, is it too much to ask under these circumstances that we give them every chance to work out a just destiny under their own flag, and that they shall have all the assistance we can give them?

Furthermore, Mr. President, as the Senator from Louisiana has said, the Orient is a very difficult portion of the globe at this time. It would be much better for us in our future relations with the Orient if we had friends in the Filipino people. I do not mean to say that the Japanese are not friendly. So far as I know, they are friendly. I do not mean to say that the Chinese, or any other people who inhabit Asia, are not friendly to us. I do know, however, that at this moment the Filipinos are friendly to the American people, and we shall be a mighty short-sighted Congress if we throw away that friendship that has cost so much blood and so much time and so much effort when it is ours to retain for the simple price of mere justice. That is all there is in this bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator, I am sure, lost sight of my point. The question I asked was whether a President in the next 10 years could not frustrate the whole thing.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not believe that will happen for 10 years.

Mr. LONG. I know it might not, but it could happen.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me state to the Senator something that I do not think is fair, though I dislike to make this utterance. There is not a Filipino in this body. Their destiny is absolutely in our hands. They have no voice here. Only today we taxed the product of coconut oil 3 cents, as if we had not already cut down the normal importation of coconut oil in this very bill. We not only cut it down but now we tax it 3 cents. We cut down the allotment of sugar. We cut down the allotment of cordage.

Mr. President, if we were out in the Philippines and they were here, and the circumstances were reversed, how we would rave about the injustice which the people in Washington were foisting on a country they never had any right to have, and to which they violated their word when they were our ally against the common enemy!

Mr. President, the Filipino people have no voice here. They can get only what we choose to give them. We have 10 men to their 1 if it comes to a question of war. We know that there is force back of our legislative action. I am appealing to the Congress for justice. In Heaven's name, give the Filipino people this opportunity! They are very much like children. They cannot learn to walk alone overnight. They have to feel their way. We must hold their hand a little while until they get used to walking on the international pathway.

Mr. President, it would be a crime to turn the Philippine people loose in so short a time that they could not make the necessary economic transition. Like the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I have my misgivings about the economic future of these people. I see great difficulties in the way; and if they did not want independence, I would counsel more with them about the consequences as I see them. However, they want independence. They are willing to pay the price. All they ask from the American Congress is justice. We cannot afford to deny them that justice, in view of our history. We cannot afford to lose the friendship which is built on blood and care and money. We cannot afford to lose the hope of creating a better feeling in the society of nations by treating the Filipino people fairly; and certainly, in view of the fact that they are in the Orient, we should watch our step and do all we can to assist them to self-government.

I ask for a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON].

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Maryland says that the Filipinos have no voice here, and argues, therefore, that we should continue to govern them without giving them a voice rather than granting their own desires for independence and the expression of their own voice.

Mr. TYDINGS. No, Mr. President; the Senator misunderstood me. If I said that, I certainly did not mean to do so. What I meant to say was that they have no representation in this body, and such independence as they may get will be the result of the action of a legislature in which they have no voice. I am in favor of their independence, and ask only that Congress do the fair thing toward them as promptly as we can do it.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the first vote I cast was cast in 1900 for Mr. Bryan, running upon a platform of Philippine independence, the declaration of the Senator's party and mine.

Mr. TYDINGS. I may say to the Senator from Colorado that it is a historical fact that Mr. Bryan was opposed to the acquisition of the Philippine Islands, and came to Washington to see President McKinley about the matter at the time the treaty was written; but because it was represented to Mr. Bryan that the ratification of that treaty would bring about an end to the hostilities, Mr. Bryan, I understand, used his influence with his friends in Congress, and the treaty was ratified making the Philippine Islands a part of the American territory. Although Mr. Bryan was opposed to that, he agreed to it for the reason that he thought it would end the hostilities in the Philippine Islands and elsewhere. Those are the circumstances under which we got the islands; and even then the treaty was ratified by a margin of only a single vote.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator once more?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. I understood from the statement of the Senator from Maryland that we were compelling the Philippine people to do business with us; that the intercourse with us had grown up by compulsion.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask the Senator from Maryland if it is not a fact that instead of it being a matter of compulsion, we have given the Filipinos a favored situation? We have allowed their products to come into our country without tariff barriers, so there has been an attraction rather than a compulsion, and we have built up their industries at the expense of our own industries. The trade has not been the result of compulsion, but as a matter of fact we have given them advantages in our markets over those given to other peoples of the world.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is no doubt in the world that what the Senator has said is to some extent true; that is, that they now have access to the richest market in the world, and when their products come here our tariff permits them to have the privilege of that market. In the last analysis, however, the Senator knows that imports and exports and indirect exchange must balance. People do not swap goods; they buy goods. They buy goods with goods.

Mr. ADAMS. It is not necessarily a bilateral swap. It may come about through many agencies.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; but as far as our relations with the Filipino people are concerned, there is not a great deal of disparity between imports and exports in our trade with that country. I have the figures, but I shall not now read them into the RECORD.

Mr. ADAMS. Has the Senator the figures of the number of persons engaged in sugar production in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not those figures; but the Senator must bear in mind that about a million tons of sugar were produced in the Philippines last year and about 950,000 tons the previous year, and the Senator can visualize the great agricultural activity, the trucks engaged, the factories, and the railroads and the shipping that must have been incidental to that operation.

Mr. ADAMS. I visualize it in this way, that a very distinguished citizen of this country, and a holder of high office, says that men in this country who are producing an equivalent quantity of sugar constitute a very insignificant group. We are told that the 264,000 men engaged in the production of beet sugar are not entitled to consideration, though as a matter of fact they are producing more sugar than is being produced in the Philippine Islands, where there are 17,000,000 people.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield the floor to the Senator from Louisiana. Is the Senator about to address himself to the bill?

Mr. LONG. Yes, Mr. President. It is now 5 o'clock. I do not propose to speak longer than a few minutes.

Mr. TYDINGS. The bill will not be acted upon tonight, because the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] wishes to offer an amendment. I was wondering if the Senator, before taking the floor, would object to a vote on the Vandenberg amendment, as I understand there are to be no further speeches on that amendment.

Mr. LONG. I shall not object, Mr. President, to a vote being taken on the Vandenberg amendment before I make my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the first vote will be on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON].

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I desire to discuss that amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the Senator from Maryland desire to continue on the Vandenberg amendment, or would he prefer that the Senate recess until tomorrow?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, my feeling is that we should not vote on that amendment tonight.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that we recess now until 12 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I desire the RECORD to show that I had the floor at the time of taking the recess. I now yield to the Senator from Arkansas for the purpose of moving a recess.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTION—CONFERENCE REPORT (S.DOC. NO. 157)

Mr. TRAMMELL submitted the following report, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6604) to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 6, and 7, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the following: "That the first and each succeeding alternate vessel of each category, except the 15,000-ton aircraft carrier, upon which work is undertaken, and the main engines, armor, and armament for such vessels, the construction and manufacture of which is authorized by this act, shall be constructed or manufactured in the Government navy yards, naval stations, naval gun factories, naval ordnance plants, or arsenals of the United States, except such material or parts as were not customarily manufactured in such Government plants prior to February 13, 1929: Provided further, That, if inconsistent with the public interests in any year to have a vessel or vessels constructed as required above, the President may have such vessel or vessels built in a Government or private yard as he may direct"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That not less than 10 percent of the aircraft, including the engines therefor, the procurement of which is authorized by this act and hereafter undertaken, shall be constructed and/or manufactured in Government aircraft factories and/or other plants or factories owned and operated by the United States Government.

"The foregoing paragraph is subject to the following conditions:

"(1) That if it shall be determined by the President that present plants, factories, and equipment owned by the Government are not such as to permit the construction and/or manufacture of the said aircraft and/or engines in such Government plants and factories, in the proportions herein specified and required, then and in that event such requirement may be suspended in whole or in part by his order. However, in the event of such order of suspension being made by the President, then at his discretion the existing plants, factories, and facilities now owned and/or operated by the Government shall forthwith be expanded and equipped to enable the Government to construct, manufacture, and repair not less than 10 percent of its naval aircraft therein except that it shall be discretionary with the President as to the percent constructed and/or manufactured in Government plants if he should find it impracticable for the Government to undertake the construction and/or manufacture of not less than 10 percent of its naval aircraft therein.

"(2) The President is also authorized to employ Government establishments in any case where—

"(a) It should reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents therefor, bidding for the construction of any of said aircraft, engines, spare parts, or equipment have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said aircraft, engines, spare parts, or equipment, or—

"(b) Should it reasonably appear that any person, firm, or corporation, or agents thereof, being solely or peculiarly in position to manufacture or furnish the particular type or design of aircraft, engines, spare parts, or equipment required by the Navy, in bidding on such aircraft, engines, spare parts, or equipment, have named a price in excess of cost of production plus a reasonable profit, as provided in section 3 of this act.

"The funds necessary for the enlargement and expansion of such existing plants and facilities now owned by the Government for the construction and manufacture of naval aircraft, are hereby authorized to be appropriated."

Amendments numbered 3 and 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3 and 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by amendment numbered 3, and in lieu of the matter inserted by amendment numbered 4, insert the following:

"Provided, That no contract shall be made by the Secretary of the Navy for the construction and/or manufacture of any complete naval vessel or aircraft, or any portion thereof, herein, heretofore, or hereafter authorized unless the contractor agrees—

"(a) To make a report, as hereinafter described, under oath, to the Secretary of the Navy upon the completion of the contract.

"(b) To pay into the Treasury profit, as hereinafter provided shall be determined by the Treasury Department, in excess of 10 percent of the total contract price, such amount to become the property of the United States: Provided, That if such amount is not voluntarily paid the Secretary of the Treasury may collect the same under the usual methods employed under the internal revenue laws to collect Federal income taxes.

"(c) To make no subdivisions of any contract or subcontract for the same article or articles for the purpose of evading the provisions of this act, but any subdivision of any contract or subcontract involving an amount in excess of $10,000 shall be subject to the conditions herein prescribed.

"(d) That the manufacturing spaces and books of its own plant, affiliates, and subdivisions shall at all times be subject to inspection and audit by any person designated by the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Treasury, and/or by a duly authorized committee of Congress.

"(e) To make no subcontract unless the subcontractor agrees to the foregoing conditions.

"The report shall be in form prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy and shall state the total contract price, the cost of performing the contract, the net income, and the percent such net income bears to the contract price. A copy of such report shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury for consideration in connection with the Federal income-tax returns of the contractor for the taxable year or years concerned.

"The method of ascertaining the amount of excess profit to be paid into the Treasury shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury in agreement with the Secretary of the Navy and made available to the public. The method initially fixed upon shall be so determined on or before June 30, 1934: Provided, That in any case where an excess profit may be found to be owing to the United States in consequence hereof, the Secretary of the Treasury shall allow credit for any Federal income taxes paid or remaining to be paid upon the amount of such excess profit.

"The contract or subcontracts referred to herein are limited to those where the award exceeds $10,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

CLAIMS OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS AND THEIR NATIONALS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State recommending the enactment of legislation for the purposes described therein.

The recommendations of the Secretary of State have my approval, and I request the enactment of legislation for the purposes indicated in order that this Government may carry out the projects and meet the obligations outlined in the report.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 21, 1934.

[Enclosure: Report of the Secretary of State.]

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, March 22, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 21, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Calmly, our souls look up to Thee, O God. We pray that Thou wouldst reveal unto us the riches unseen. Persuade us to realize that life does not consist in the things we possess but rather in the thoughts we think, the motives that sway our actions, the ideals toward which we press, and in the God, whom we make our own. Merciful Lord, always keep open the gates that we may front Thy stainless throne. Consider and hear us, Almighty God; be at the conference table with our President these momentous days. May men not face one another with sullen eyes. Break down all barriers of differences and let there be no thought of faltering until there is born a new order of fraternity, good will, and brotherhood. Heavenly Father, regard us this day with favor and spare us from anything that might keep us from hearing and loving the divine strains, which breathe a heavenly melody into our souls. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On March 15, 1934:

H.R. 7199. An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the Naval Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 7295. An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

On March 16, 1934:

H.R. 5632. An act to supplement and support the Migratory Bird Conservation Act by providing funds for the acquisition of areas for use as migratory-bird sanctuaries, refuges, and breeding grounds, for developing and administering such areas, for the protection of certain migratory birds, for the enforcement of the Migratory Bird Treaty Act and regulations thereunder, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 2743. An act for the relief of William M. Stoddard;
 H.R. 3072. An act for the relief of Seth B. Simmons;
 H.R. 3554. An act for the relief of Pinkie Osborne;
 H.R. 5163. An act for the relief of Calvin M. Head;

H.R. 5228. An act to authorize the payment of hospital and other expenses arising from an injury to Florence Glass;

H.R. 5631. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to place with the Oklahoma Historical Society, at Oklahoma City, Okla., as custodian for the United States, certain records of the Five Civilized Tribes, and of other Indian tribes in the State of Oklahoma, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him;

H.R. 5745. An act granting abandoned public buildings and grounds at Sitka, Alaska, to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes;

H.R. 6185. An act fixing the date for holding elections of a Delegate from Alaska to the House of Representatives and of members of the Legislature of Alaska; fixing the date on which the Legislature of Alaska shall hereafter meet; prescribing the personnel of the Territorial canvassing board, defining its duties, and for other purposes; and H.R. 7229. An act for the relief of the estate of Victor L. Berger, deceased.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 257. An act to authorize full settlement for professional services rendered to an officer of the United States Army; and

H.R. 7599. An act to provide emergency aid for the repair or reconstruction of homes and other property damaged by earthquake, tidal wave, flood, tornado, or cyclone in 1933 and 1934.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H.R. 6604) to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire reserves all points of order on the conference report.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6604) to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 6, and 7, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the following: "That the first and each succeeding alternate vessel of each category, except the 15,000-ton aircraft carrier, upon which work is undertaken, and the main engines, armor, and armament for such vessels, the construction and manufacture of which is authorized by this act, shall be constructed or manufactured in the Government navy yards, naval stations, naval-gun factories, naval-ordnance plants, or arsenals of the United States, except such material or parts as were not customarily manufactured in such Government plants prior to February 13, 1929: Provided further, That, if inconsistent with the public interests in any year to have a vessel or vessels constructed as required above, the President may have such vessel or vessels built in a Government or private yard as he may direct"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"That not less than 10 percent of the aircraft, including the engines therefor, the procurement of which is authorized by this act and hereafter undertaken, shall be constructed and/or manufactured in Government aircraft factories and/or other plants or factories owned and operated by the United States Government.

"The foregoing paragraph is subject to the following conditions:

"(1) That if it shall be determined by the President that present plants, factories, and equipment owned by the Government are not such as to permit the construction and/or manufacture of the said aircraft and/or engines in such Government plants and factories, in the proportions herein specified and required, then and in that event such requirements may be suspended in whole or in part by his order. However, in the event of such order of suspension being made by the President, then at his discretion the existing plants, factories, and facilities now owned and/or operated by the Government shall forthwith be expanded and equipped to enable the Government to construct, manufacture, and repair not less than 10 percent of its naval aircraft therein, except that it shall be discretionary with the President as to the percent constructed and/or manufactured in Government plants if he should find it impracticable for the Government to undertake the construction and/or manufacture of not less than 10 percent of its naval aircraft therein.

"(2) The President is also authorized to employ Government establishments in any case where—

"(a) It should reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents therefor, bidding for the construction of any of said aircraft, engines, spare parts, or equipment have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said aircraft, engines, spare parts, or equipment, or—

"(b) Should it reasonably appear that any person, firm, or corporation, or agents thereof, being solely or peculiarly in position to manufacture or furnish the particular type or design of aircraft, engines, spare parts, or equipment required by the Navy, in bidding on such aircraft, engines, spare parts, or equipment, have named a price in excess of cost of production plus a reasonable profit, as provided in section 3 of this act.

"The funds necessary for the enlargement and expansion of such existing plants and facilities now owned by the Government for the construction and manufacture of naval aircraft are hereby authorized to be appropriated."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 3 and 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3 and 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by amendment numbered 3 and in lieu of the matter inserted by amendment numbered 4 insert the following:

"Provided, That no contract shall be made by the Secretary of the Navy for the construction and/or manufacture of any complete naval vessel or aircraft, or any portion thereof, herein, heretofore, or hereafter authorized unless the contractor agrees—

"(a) To make a report, as hereinafter described, under oath, to the Secretary of the Navy upon the completion of the contract.

"(b) To pay into the Treasury profit, as hereinafter provided shall be determined by the Treasury Department, in excess of 10 percent of the total contract price, such amount to become the property of the United States: Provided, That if such amount is not voluntarily paid the Secretary of the Treasury may collect the same under the usual methods employed under the internal revenue laws to collect Federal income taxes.

"(c) To make no subdivisions of any contract or subcontract for the same article or articles for the purpose of evading the provisions of this act, but any subdivision of any contract or subcontract involving an amount in excess of $50,000 shall be subject to the conditions herein prescribed.

"(d) That the manufacturing spaces and books of its own plant, affiliates, and subdivisions shall at all times be subject to inspection and audit by any person designated by the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Treasury, and/or by a duly authorized committee of Congress.

"(e) To make no subcontract unless the subcontractor agrees to the foregoing conditions.

"The report shall be in form prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy and shall state the total contract price, the cost of performing the contract, the net income, and the percent such net income bears to the contract price. A copy of such report shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury for consideration in connection with the Federal income tax returns of the contractor for the taxable year or years concerned.

"The method of ascertaining the amount of excess profit to be paid into the Treasury shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury in agreement with the Secretary of the Navy and made available to the public. The method initially fixed upon shall be so determined on or before June 30, 1934: Provided, That in any case where an excess profit may be found to be owing to the United States in consequence hereof, the Secretary of the Treasury shall allow credit for any Federal income taxes paid or remaining to be paid upon the amount of such excess profit.

"The contractor or sub-contracts referred to herein are limited to those where the award exceeds $50,000.

"The provisions of this section shall not become effective until June 30, 1934."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6604) to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommend in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendment no. 1: Restores the proposal of the House requiring that the first and each succeeding alternate vessel of each category, except the 15,000-ton aircraft carrier, be built in a Government establishment, and the manufacture of the main engines, armor, and armament for such vessels in Government establishments to the extent that it was customary so to do prior to February 13, 1929, amended so as to give the President the right to depart from such a division or assignment of work in any year if in the public interest, in lieu of the Senate proposal that, subject to determination by the President as to the course best suited to the public interests, construction be undertaken in Government establishments of half of the total tonnage authorized and as much more as might be undertaken with existing facilities or such additional facilities as might be hereafter provided, continuing to except the 15,000-ton aircraft carrier, and in addition for the manufacture of materials and parts for such vessels in Government establishments as it was customary so to do prior to February 13, 1929, subject to the existence at the time of the work being undertaken of requisite manufacturing facilities.

On amendment no. 2: Provides as to aircraft procured in consequence of the authorization contained in the bill, including engines therefor—

First. That not less than 10 percent thereof, including the engines therefor, shall be constructed and/or manufactured in Government establishments, subject to determination by the President of the capacity of existing establishments to accomplish the work. In the event they should be found inadequate, at the discretion of the President they may be expanded to the extent necessary to enable the construction and/or manufacture therein of such percent of such aircraft and engines as the President may find to be practicable; and Second. For the employment of Government establishments exclusively in any case where bids indicate collusion or should be in excess of cost of production plus a reasonable profit, as provided in the action agreed upon with respect to Senate amendments numbered 3 and 4, all in lieu of the Senate proposal that 25 percent of such aircraft and engines be constructed or manufactured in Government-owned and operated establishments, subject to determination by the President of the capacity of existing establishments to accomplish the work. In the event they should be found inadequate, the Senate amendment authorized and required the provision of adequate facilities, including the construction and equipment of additional facilities or the acquirement by purchase or condemnation of privately owned facilities adequate to the performance of 25 percent of the work of constructing, manufacturing, and repairing naval aircraft.

Both under the amendment as agreed to and under the original proposal of the Senate, expansion would be subject to the appropriation of necessary funds, which are authorized to be appropriated.

On amendments nos. 3 and 4: The House proposed to limit net profits on all contracts with commercial establishments for supplying steel or aircraft or building vessels, pursuant to authorization contained in the bill, to 10 percent of the gross of the contract. In lieu thereof, by amendment no. 3, the Senate proposed as to contracts and subcontracts of $10,000 or more for building vessels, whenever authorized, but not contracted for at the time of the approval of the bill, or for supplying aircraft, that the net profit to the contractor or subcontractor should not exceed 10 percent of the performance cost, any excess to become the property of the United States, to be collected by the Secretary of the Treasury, by suit, if necessary, and deposited in the Treasury of the United States. Ascertainment of profits and amounts payable to the United States were to be determined from sworn reports filed with the Secretary of the Treasury in the form and manner prescribed by him, and, by amendment no. 4, from examinations and audits, if need be, by the Bureau of the Budget or by any duly authorized representative of either House of Congress.

In lieu of the House and Senate proposals as to amendment no. 3 and the Senate proposal as to amendment no. 4, the action agreed upon requires that, effective June 30, 1934, no contract, subcontract, or subdivision of any subcontract shall be entered into involving an award in excess of $50,000 for the construction and/or manufacture of any portion or of a complete naval vessel or aircraft, whenever authorized, unless the contractor shall agree to report under oath upon completion of the contract the amount of profit and percent it bears to the cost of performance, such report to be in form and detail as prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, who shall file a copy thereof with the Secretary of the Treasury for income-tax purposes. Should such report disclose a profit in excess of 10 percent of the total contract price, reckoned in accordance with such formula as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, such excess becomes the property of the United States, which, if not voluntarily paid as agreed, the Secretary of the Treasury shall collect in accordance with the usual methods under the internal-revenue laws. As a further check upon contractors' costs it is required that the manufacturing plant and books of any contractor shall at all times be subject to inspection and audit by any person designated by the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Treasury, and/or by a duly authorized committee of Congress. Contractors are to be allowed credit for any Federal income taxes paid or remaining to be paid upon any excess profit found to be owing to the United States under the terms of the bill.

On amendments nos. 5, 6, and 7, relating to suspension of construction in the event of an international agreement further limiting naval armament: Extends such authority to vessels otherwise authorized, and as to vessels actually under construction, exempts from suspension only those in that status on the date of the approval of the bill, as proposed by the Senate, instead of limiting suspension to vessels authorized by the bill, and of those only such as may not actually be under construction, as proposed by the House.

As agreed upon by the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, the bill, including the title, reads as follows:

To establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, is hereby established at the limit prescribed by those treaties.

Sec. 2. That subject to the provisions of the treaties signed at Washington February 6, 1922, and at London April 22, 1930, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to undertake prior to December 31, 1936, or as soon thereafter as he may deem it advisable (in addition to the six cruisers not yet constructed under the act approved February 13, 1929 (45 Stat. 1165), and in addition to the vessels being constructed pursuant to Executive Order No. 6174 of June 16, 1933), the construction of: (a) One aircraft carrier of approximately 15,000 tons standard displacement, to replace the experimental aircraft carrier Langley; (b) 99,200 tons aggregate of destroyers to replace over-age destroyers; (c) 35,530 tons aggregate of submarines to replace over-age submarines: Provided, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to replace, by vessels of modern design and construction, vessels in the Navy in the categories limited by the treaties signed at Washington February 6, 1922, and at London April 22, 1930, when their replacement is permitted by the said treaties: Provided further, That the President is hereby authorized to procure the necessary naval aircraft for vessels and other naval purposes in numbers commensurate with a treaty navy: Provided further, That the first and each succeeding alternate vessel of each category, except the 15,000-ton aircraft carrier, upon which work is undertaken, and the main engines, armor, and armament for such vessels, the construction and manufacture of which is authorized by this act, shall be constructed or manufactured in the Government navy yards, naval stations, naval gun factories, naval ordnance plants, or arsenals of the United States, except such material or parts as were not customarily manufactured in such Government plants prior to February 13, 1929: Provided further, That if inconsistent with the public interest in any year to have a vessel or vessels constructed as required above, the President may have such vessel or vessels built in a Government or private yard as he may direct.

That not less than 10 percent of the aircraft, including the engines therefor, the procurement of which is authorized by this act and hereafter undertaken, shall be constructed and/or manufactured in Government aircraft factories and/or other plants or factories owned and operated by the United States Government.

The foregoing paragraph is subject to the following conditions:

(1) That if it shall be determined by the President that present plants, factories, and equipment owned by the Government are not such as to permit the construction and/or manufacture of the said aircraft and/or engines in such Government plants and factories in the proportions herein specified and required, then and in that event such requirement may be suspended in whole or in part by his order. However, in the event of such order of suspension being made by the President, then at his discretion the existing plants, factories, and facilities now owned and/or operated by the Government shall forthwith be expanded and equipped to enable the Government to construct, manufacture, and repair not less than 10 percent of its naval aircraft therein, except that it shall be discretionary with the President as to the percent constructed and/or manufactured in Government plants if he should find it impracticable for the Government to undertake the construction and/or manufacture of not less than 10 percent of its naval aircraft therein.

(2) The President is also authorized to employ Government establishments in any case where—

(a) It should reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents thereof, bidding for the construction of any of said aircraft, engines, spare parts, or equipment have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said aircraft, engines, spare parts, or equipment, or—
